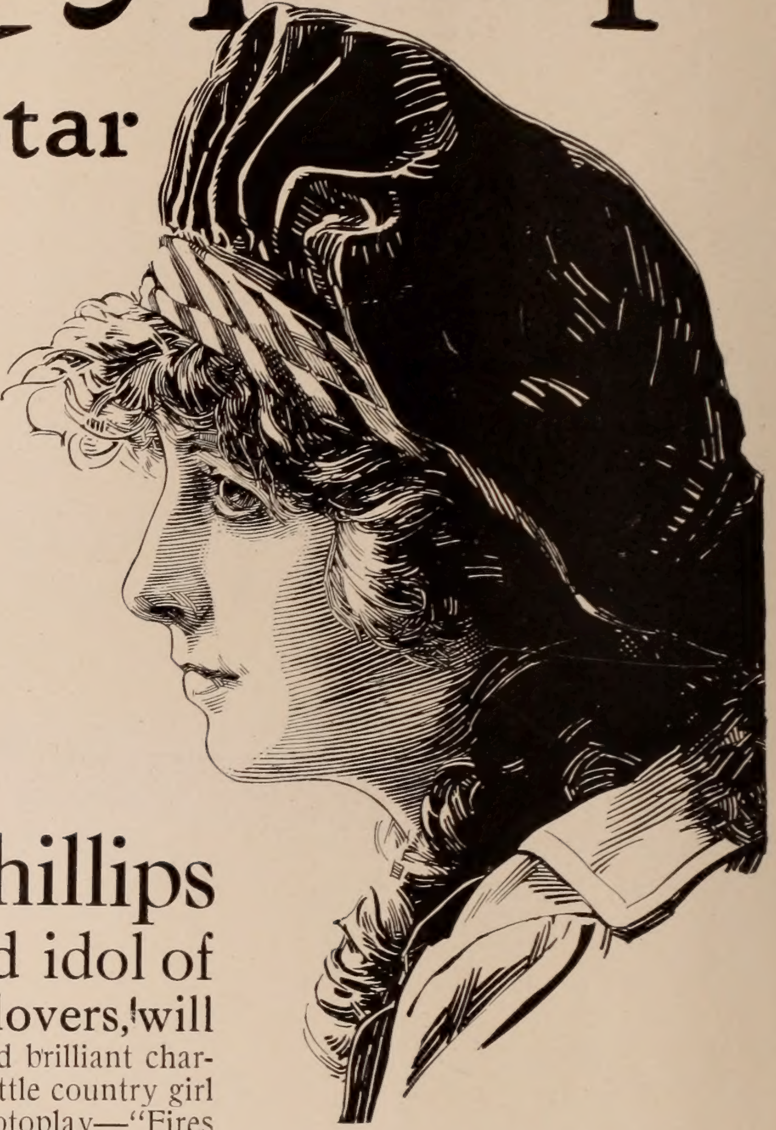
Bluebird Star



Dorothy Phillips

Bluebird Star and idol of millions of photoplay lovers, will charm you with her winsome and brilliant characterization of the discontented little country girl in the splendid BLUEBIRD Photoplay—"Fires of Rebellion," which gives this justly popular star an opportunity to show her remarkable dramatic powers. Associated with her in the leading roles are Lon Chaney, the brilliant character actor, and Wm. Stowell, whose work is so well known. The production directed by Ida May Park, who wrote the story.

BLUEBIRD Preparedness Productions

America is rapidly becoming an armed camp. Our part in the world's war is discussed more times in a day than any other subject. The hour of your opportunity to show PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS has struck. The people are flocking to wherever war subjects are shown. Do you want these crowds to flock into your house? Then book these four red-blooded and intensely gripping PREPAREDNESS DRAMAS.

"The Eagle's Wings" This play has received the endorsement of highest officials in Washington. It has also received a pledge of support from the D. A. R., through their National President. It is far above any silly, weak sham battle, studio "war" picture.

Rupert Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict

in "WE ARE FRENCH," formerly called "The Bugler of Algiers." A five-reel Bluebird story that sways the patriotic emotions of the audience and thrills them with a force that they seldom feel.

Harry Carey and Edith Johnston in "BEHIND THE LINES," a compelling and timely picture that faithfully reproduces the actual conditions along the Mexican Border. It abounds with intrigue, love and adventure. It entrances and excites the emotions through its true atmosphere.

Allen Holubar in "TREASON," with Lois Wilson and Joseph Girard. These three bend their inexhaustible energies to get this true lesson in patriotism over. And they do get it over with a strength and pep that is seldom shown. Its intense scenes and convincing pictures of modern warfare use the emotions of movie fans to their very depths.

Special Posters, Heralds and Advertising Props

Use these plays to raise funds for the Red Cross and other patriotic purposes. Call upon your Boy Scouts and local military societies to co-operate with you. TEMPORARY DETENTION ROOM

Renee turns out to be a girl.

ELLA HALL in

BLUEBIRD Photoplay. Story by H. O. Davis. Scenario by Bess Meredyth and E. J. Clawson. Produced by Jack Conway, who supports the star, Ella Hall, himself, with the aid of a splendid cast. A timely and appealing tale of a little Belgian refugee.

JACK CONWAY played two roles in the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Little Orphan." He directed the production, and he assumed the role of the "third bachelor," which was "opposite" that of the star, Ella Hall. A timely and appealing situation is created when the three men decide that they must make room in their comfortable home for three little Belgian boys. They consult the authorities, pick out three names which appeal to them, and go to the docks to meet their charges. Then comes the surprise. The final "e" has been left off "Rene Lescere" in some way, and she turns out to be a little girl. Of course, everything turns out in the most satisfactory possible way in the end. Here is how it happens:

The three bachelors, David Clark, an architect; Rankin Porter, an engineer, and Jerry Mathers, a broker, had roomed together for three years. They read of the plight of the Belgian children, and determined to adopt three little boys. David went to the head of the Belgian Relief to make the arrangements.

There he met Mrs. Billy Hardwick, the season's most successful divorcee, who had long been angling for the famous architect. He was forced to escort her to the Harrison's where he was introduced to Emmeline Warren. Then Jerry was introduced to Emmeline; both were startled, for years before, they had been kid sweethearts.

The three men picked the names of their respective charges, Henri Ponleur, Jean Bourget and finally David chose that of Rene Lescrere. They decided the boys could have David's room and he would bunk with Rankin. But three hours later, at Ellis Island, when the officer had called the names of the children and Renee, a little, shy girl with a hen under her arm and holding a goat by a rope, answered to the name, the men were stunned. Not knowing what else to do, they took her and the two boys home. David was touched by the woe-begone expression and informed his friends that he was going to move with her to his Long Island home.

So David became a commuter and Renee became the head of the household, much to the sorrow of Mrs. Billy, who came to hate the child because of David's love for her.

At the party given by David for his friends, Renee interrupted him and Mrs. Billy, just as David was about to propose. The little girl determined that it was her duty to find him a worthy wife. She promptly went out on the street and followed every woman who appeared desirable. Finally she met Emmeline and, after watching her for several months, persuaded her to come to the house. There she informed David that this lady was pretty, neat, kind and knew the value of money, and that she would make him a good wife. Painfully embarrassed, the two people at last began to laugh and henceforth were good friends. And as the months passed their friendship grew stronger.

Emmeline, one evening, informed her friends that she had been offered a position as accompanist on a Western tour and felt that she must take it. David was bewildered; Renee dropped her work, feeling that she had done a lot of good work for nothing. David asked Emmeline if she minded giving up her concert tour and being Renee's mother. She was amused at his bluntness, but accepted his offer. Peeking through the door, Renee saw what had happened and flew in to taunt David with his slowness.

mountains. On the day he returned he heard of the coming marriage. When he met Emmeline that evening, both realized that they still loved each other. David heard them talking and, though deeply hurt, insisted that Jerry marry Emmeline.

Many changes had been wrought in the eight years that followed and David became world famous. Urged by Rankin, who saw the weariness of his friend, they went to the mountais for a rest. Renee was to go on a trip with Jerry and Emmeline.

At this very moment, quite unannounced, Renee arrived. She had decided that she was to stay with David. Though she had to walk two miles through the woods, she finally arrived at the house and delighted as well as nonplussed David, for he had not seen her for four years and could not accustom himself to her beauty.

Jerry, Emmeline and Jean followed Renee to persuade her to go with them. Renee was jealous of Emmeline, and when she and David were talking together and David was jealous of Jean. Emmeline showed Renee's letter to David and, thinking that the girl was going to remain purely on account of duty, he insisted that she go with the others, though he yearned to have her near him. Renee went as far as the station; then jumping from the train as it was moving away, she hurried wildly back to David, after making arrangements with the old minister to whom she was sent by the station master, to follow her. When David told her she could not stay there with two men, she informed him that she had anticipated this and that the minister had come to marry them.

Renee returns unexpectedly.

USES TRUNK IN EVERY SCENE.

WHILE on a visit to Universal City a year ago, Irvin Shrewsbury Cobb, who has his quips and jests at hand for any and every event, found use for one that is timely, now—which is saying much for any jest. Cobb was shown a jungle play in the Universal projection room. In the play, called "In African Wilds," Charlie, the huge pachyderm, had a very important role.

As Cobb was leaving the theatre after the picture had been run, he remarked Cobbishly: "Well, I must say that the elephant was well supported by the company." Since the play that Cobb saw, Charlie has never had such an opportunity as he has in the role he is now playing under the direction of Henry McRae. And he will have animal support from lions, leopards, tigers and other jungle folk in "Man and Beast."

Director McRae says that Charlie acts almost like a human being, which proves that Director McRae also likes his little joke.

UNIVERSAL ACTRESS STUDIES "MOTORMANNING."

MARCIA MOORE, one of Universal's popular actresses, believes in preparedness. As evidence of this she has been training for active work in the event the men of America are called to the colors in numbers that may effect common carriers, and is now considered competent as a "motorman." Miss Moore travels a great deal on the suburban lines in the neighborhood of Universal City, and in the course of her travels conceived a desire to handle a trolley car.

The motormen have aided her and recently she drove a car to and from Los Angeles, making all the stops and otherwise handling the car with a deftness unexcelled by the seasoned motorman who rode on the front end with her.

"The cities of Europe called their women to their aid, early in the war," said Miss Moore, "and if the same call is made here I want to be in a position to make it possible for some patriotic citizen to get to the front and in doing so, not to have his employers feel that his place cannot be filled. I find that a trolley is no harder to handle than an auto, but if it comes to a pinch I am going to don overalls or uniform and do my bit in full man's fashion."

Marcia is playing in the Victor Comedy, "A Box of Tricks."

EDDIE POLO

Stunt Puller in "THE GRAY GHOST"

By PETER PEPPER.

Eddie Polo when the day's work begins.

UNIVERSAL serials have the reputation of going all over the world. They are shown in Japan, China, India, South Africa—everywhere that the screen has penetrated, Universal serials are sure to be projected upon it. Many things in them are inexplicable to the various publics who go to see them, for ideas on even such fundamental subjects as manly honor and feminine beauty differ in different parts of the globe. But there is one thing that is universally understood, and that is daring. Therefore, the "stuntpuller" wins the full appreciation of any audience in the world, for he speaks to them through a medium which they fully comprehend. Eddie Polo, who has furnished a large proportion of the thrills for several serials, including "The Broken Coin" and "Liberty," is the acknowledged king of stuntpullers, and that is why his mail comes to him bearing stamps from all the out-of-the-way governments of the globe. He is as popular in the interior of Japan as he is in the interior of Brooklyn, for his intrepidity and physical prowess appeal to spectators of all colors, languages and religions.

Since he was two years old, Polo has been performing breath-taking stunts in public. He was born in Italy, and started his training almost in the cradle. At the age of two he could walk on his hands, and at seven he was an accomplished acrobat and high-diver. For seventeen years he was with the biggest circuses in the world, as diver, acrobat, animal trainer, and aeronaut. He astonished Paris by dropping from a moving airplane which was circling the Eiffel Tower, depending on a parachute to break the thousand-foot fall. He claims to be the only acrobat who ever caught a fellow performer after a triple somersault in the air. He holds a record of 235 feet in underwater swimming, and has performed such little stunts as an eighty-foot dive into the ocean off the bow of a swiftly moving steamer, for the camera. He is a splendid horseman, and a formidable fighter and wrestler, and one of the best all-round athletes in the films. He keeps himself in perfect physical condition all the time, and has recently become interested in jiu-jitsu, or Japanese wrestling. At the present time, Ito, one of the great experts in the art, is in Los Angeles. Polo is convinced that he can beat the Japanese at his own game, and is endeavoring to arrange a match with him.

"I think I have learned some new tricks that this chap does not know," says Polo, "and I believe I can beat him, but if I don't, at least he will know that he has been on the mat."

Polo's role in "The Gray Ghost" is that of secretary to the young Englishman, who is sent to America to fetch a valuable necklace which The Ghost has decided to appropriate. Jean Marco, the secretary, has his hands full protecting his employer from the machinations of the band of lieutenants of the master-criminal who are seeking the young man's life. His part develops slowly, but once in action, he will have a chance to put over some of the toughest encounters he has ever fought for the films.

In Episode Four he has a fight with a whole room full of crooks in a restaurant which is said to be the most thrilling affair ever filmed.

The High Spots

In Next Week's Universal Program

ONE of the high spots on next week's program, besides the Butterfly, "Man and Beast," is "The Golden Bullet," a Gold Seal, in which Harry Carey does a couple of falls from his horse "Pete," which would cause thrills to a person suffering from total paralysis of the thrill-centres. Harry is shot as he rides to his shack in the mining country by thieves who are robbing his old partner of their carefully horded nuggets. He falls from the horse while it is going at full speed, and repeats the stunt on a particularly hard piece of ground in front of the town saloon.

Another cause for just pride in the program is the Nestor Comedy for next week, called "The War Bridegroom," which was written by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran themselves and produced by their director, Roy Clements. As a result of this picture there is an argument on between the Nestors and the Universal technical department, which is not settled as yet. And it all came about over the zeal of the comedians to save the company's money. They were returning from location, one day, and saw that the Universal was spending many thousands of dollars in the construction of a sewer system.

"Let's get up a story about a sewer and save some money on locations," suggested Edith.

Then they made several scenes at the sewer, and during the rehearsals they removed a great many pounds of dirt, and advanced the digging of the ditch considerably.

On their return to Universal City, they reported with glee to the technical director that they had saved a lot of money for the company. He then proceeded to make a charge to the overhead account of the Nestors for the use of his sewer, and a terrific discussion ensued, which finally had to be carried to headquarters for adjustment.

On Wednesday, June 27th, there is a very funny L-KO, a scene from which is reproduced at the top of this page. It is called "Her Daring Caring Ways," and features Lucille Hutton and Merta Sterling. A most intelligent donkey plays an important part in the picture which is a screaming burlesque on the usual Western draymer, with cowboys, bandits, dance-halls, shooting, bears, reckless riding and all the things which go to make the real Simon-pure Western what it is.

George Bronson Howard furnished the story for the Rex picture, "The Double-Topped Trunk," which will be seen on Sunday, July 1st. Allen Holubar produced the picture and played the leading role himself—an official of the U. S. Customs, and his daring and clever capture of a dangerous band of crooks. The picture has an unusual plot, and has been splendidly worked out by the young director, who is responsible for some of the best Red Feathers, and for the Butterfly picture of last week, "The Field of Honor." Another of his Butterflies will soon be released under the title of "The Reed Case."

This was written, adapted for the screen and produced by Holubar himself. He also played the leading role.

A Great Summer

(No. 180| Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

IN every country engaged in the great war, the moving picture business has INCREASED enormously. It fooled everybody. It did exactly the opposite from what the wise ones thought it would. Everybody thought it would slump. Everybody said, "No one will want to go to theatres until the war is over."

But, as it turned out, the people craved entertainment more than ever, possibly because they wanted to get their minds off of war and its horrors.

And now the United States is in the war up to its neck. The nation has gone into the serious business of war in a thorough and big way. Like every other nation, it will crave entertainment more than ever.

For that reason we are entering the biggest summer season this business has ever experienced in this country.

Every exhibitor in the country ought to be preparing for it in every possible way. He ought to take every precaution to see that he is dead sure of getting enough pictures of the right kind to supply the heavy demand that is bound to come.

The Universal never has and never will use the summer season as a dumping ground. It never has and it never will save its best pictures for the winter season. On the contrary our plans for this summer include the release of a far higher grade of pictures than we have ever produced in our whole career.

Season Coming

Not a single solitary theatre should close for the summer season this year of all years. No matter whether it has been your custom to shut up for summer in the past, this is the year to keep your doors open for the thousands who will crave entertainment.

The theatre owners who see the truth of this well reap the golden harvest, for they will not only make a profit on a formerly dead season, but will get the people in the habit of patronizing their houses the year around.

The United States government has already profited by the mistakes the other Allies made during the first two years of the great war. There is no reason on earth why the exhibitors of the United States should not profit by the experience of the exhibitors of all the other warring nations.

Give this the most serious thought. Be ready to say, "I'm glad I took the tip," instead of "I'm sorry I didn't look ahead."

There's more than mere thrift in this. There's patriotism of a practical sort, because the more you keep business thriving in your community the better for the whole nation!

Do your bit and make your bit!

SCREEN MAGAZINE, NO. 24.

PROBABLY the most interesting feature of the Universal Screen Magazine No. 24 is the demonstration of jiu-jitsu, or Japanese wrestling by Miss Irma Rivers and her assistant, Mr. Will Bingham. So little effort is required by the expert in this art of self-defense that a small woman is able to vanquish a masculine opponent much larger and heavier than herself. This is the most effective method of protection which a woman can employ against annoyers in all sorts of situations, and the demonstration of it is so clearly given that it amounts to a lesson in the art. We see Miss Rivers in street dress dealing out summary justice to an annoyer on the street. He puts out a hand to touch her, and by a turn of the wrist she throws him on his back on the ground. Both demonstrators then don their gymnasium clothes—a combination of Japanese and American regalia—and demonstrate the different holds so that we can follow them exactly. Miss Rivers shows us the thumb-and-elbow throw, then the hip throw, the arm lock, the knee trip, and the front strangle hold. Each time her masculine opponent is overcome. Then the two have a real bout of jiu-jitsu, using all the holds, and striving to overcome each other. At the end Miss Rivers again dons street attire and shows how easy it is for a woman to meet an unexpected attack from the rear, if she is a mistress of this Oriental science.

Other subjects in Issue No. 24 are the explanation of the manufacture of coke, now one of the most important of all industries from the immense quantities of this fuel which will be required to place our country on a war footing. It is the famous "bee-hive process" as conducted at a plant near Pittsburg which is shown us. We see the whole process, from the arrival at the plant of tons and tons of soft coal to the loaded cars of coke ready to be shipped to all parts of the world.

Time-savers for the kitchen are then demonstrated by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the Screen Magazine's culinary expert, who is now conducting an experimental kitchen for the Gentlewoman's Magazine in New York.

A demonstration of the new invention of Dr. Guy Brewster, who has at last succeeded in perfecting a bullet-proof armor which may revolutionize modern warfare comes next. The shock of the impact of the projectile is so evenly distributed by the form of the armor that there is no danger of dislocated joints, as has always been the case with similar protective devices until now.

The reel closes with a clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins, the Screen Magazine's sculptor, called "What Will Baby Be?"

"THE BRAND OF HATE"

A REMARKABLE story of a fancied pre-natal influence, by Elizabeth Burbridge, has been made into a fine Gold Seal by Director Edwin Stevens, from a scenario by John C. Brownell. The plot is both unusual and convincing, and the manner in which the big scenes were staged would be a credit to a five-reel feature.

Van Pelt, millionaire owner of tenements on the East Side, neglects the necessary rebuilding of them, while he makes handsome presents to his luxury loving wife. A disastrous fire occurs on the very day when he has been finally induced to visit the buildings. He loses his life in the flames. Rosa Castilli, a former servant of the Van Pelt's, lives in the tenements. She loses her husband and child in the fire and rushes half maddened with grief to the Van Pelt home. She forces her way to Mrs. Van Pelt's boudouir, and curses her, catching her by the throat. She is dragged away by the servants, leaving Mrs. Van Pelt in a faint. When the baby is born, the mother is not allowed to see it. One morning, early, she makes her way to the room where the child is asleep, and sees on its cheek the mark of the fingers of a hand. The shock kills her. The child, little Leonore, grows up under the care and influence of her aunt. The mark fades from her cheek, but returns at long intervals under the stress of anger.

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama. Story by Elizabeth Burbridge. Scenario by John C. Brownell and production by Edwin Stevens. Tina Marshall Featured in a strong story of the very rich and the very poor.

CAST.

Leonore Van Pelt	Tina Marshall

Leonore meets Richard Travers, an architect, who has specialized in model tenements. She consents to his making plans for rebuilding hers. A society fop, Lawrence Algernon, is a suitor for her hand, and is favored by her aunt, who does not approve of Richard on account of his poverty. At last, her aunt persuades Leonore, suspicious, as all very rich girls are apt to be, that Richard is after her money, and prevails upon her niece to accept Algernon. When Richard calls with the contemplated plans which have taken him months to finish, the aunt sends him away with the curt message that she has changed her mind. Richard is beside himself with disappointment. Worthington just saves him from killing himself. He telephones to Leonore, railing at her for her neglect of her tenements, for her selfishness, and calling her worthless. She is seized with a terrible anger, and the mark returns. The maid who sees it, runs with the story to Algernon, who sends word that he has been called away.

This brings Leonore to her senses. She visits the poor in the tenements, and forms a brotherhood club for the men workers. One of them, who suspects her identity, and hates her on account of the loss of his father and mother in the fire in which her father had lost his life, plans to be revenged on her. He meets some of his fellows and raves against the Veiled Lady, as she is called. One of them, to whom she has given work, goes to Worthington's office, and tells him that the Veiled Lady is in danger. Travers is there, and the two men go together to the meeting.

Leonore is welcomed by the men, but Volkutz denounces her and says that the reason that she never shows her face is that she is the owner of the miserable kennels in which they live. Travers and Worthington break in. Volkutz shoots at Travers, but the police, coming in at that moment, the agitators are taken into custody, while Travers carries Leonore out of danger. The next day, he goes to see her. ' She tells him that she can never marry him and takes off her veil to show him the mark. It has disappeared.

LITTLE ZOE RAE FOOLS VISITORS

THIS is not a Kentucky pickaninni imported for the occasion from below the Mason and Dixon line to play in Rupert Julian's Bluebird "A Kentucky Cinderella." Importation was not necessary, for all Julian had to do was to send for Little Zoe Rae, who has worked for him often before, and make her up for the role, knowing that she would give a perfect interpretation of it. And indeed she gives the featured players, Miss Ruth Clifford and Mr. Julian a real run for their money. The story is a screen adaptation of Hopkinson Smith's appealing novel of the same name, and it has been given a most delightful production by Mr. Julian.

The make-up which the little girl had to assume for the occasion was the subject of a great deal of comment on the part of the visitors to the Bluebird studio while the picture was being made. Instead of being burnt-corked, the child was painted bright red, nearly all over. Her arms, legs, neck and face were the same sanguinary hue, for red photographs even better than black in giving the desired effect. In one of the scenes in the play, the pickaninni, who is relentlessly pursuing the hero and heroine to watch their love-making, falls from a point of vantage in a tree, into which she has climbed, straight into a barrel. The harrassed young man then claps the cover on her, and has a few minutes' peace. Zoe went through the scene, falling smack into the barrel. The visitors who had not noticed her in the tree watched, and when her little red face came peering over the edge, a cry of pity arose from the women who thought that the child had been seriously injured by striking the edge of the barrel. This caused Zoe, who realized what had happened, to laugh so heartily that the scene had to be taken over again.

Eileen Sedgwick's Versatility

THERE is hardly a girl playing before the camera who has had a more varied training for pictures than Eileen Sedgwick, who is featured in the Butterfly Picture, "Man and Beast," with Kingsley Benedict. It is only fair to mention Charlie the elephant, as well, for his part in the picture is so important that it is essential to the plot, and the scene in which he rescues the baby who has strayed into the jungle, is the "punch" of the story. However, to return to Miss Sedgwick. She was eighteen at the time of her Universal engagement, and for fifteen years before that she had been on the speaking stage, in vaudeville, musical comedy or dramas.

Her father, mother, sister and brother were all on the stage with her, and they were together in a vaudeville act at one time. Both her sister, Josie, and her brother "Big Ed" have appeared in Universal pictures. Eileen has had training as a singer, dancer and pianist. She is also a song composer.

A Little Gossip About

RUTH STONEHOUSE AND THE "EXTRA."

RUTH STONEHOUSE, one of the featured players at Universal City, arrived at the film capital a few days ago convulsed with laughter and went as fast as possible to the office of her director, Louis Chaudet, to tell him of her latest experience. It seems that Ruth had been a passenger that morning in a jitney buss as her car was undergoing repairs, and sat next to an extra girl new to Universal City.

Turning to Miss Stonehouse, she remarked: "What make-up do you use?"

"Five and one-half," replied the little actress.

"You ought to use more powder," said the girl with an air of confidence.

"All right, I will," replied the popular star.

"Say, do you ever work for Julian?" was the next question, adding, "but if you do you will have to use more pink."

Miss Stonehouse averred she never had worked with this director.

"Getting much work?" continued the girl; "I find it kind o' slack."

"Well, I'm getting my share," answered Miss Stonehouse.

As the buss drew up at Universal City all alighted and the only comment the girl made was, "Well, so long—see you on the lot."

Since then Miss Stonehouse has been hunting for the extra girl in the hope that she could give her a part in one of her productions when, perhaps, the youthful one will discover whom she had been interrogating.

Franklyn Farnum and his first cigar.

FRANKLYN FARNUM'S ORDEAL.

PITY the plight of a picture player who has never smoked a cigar and finds himself compelled by the exigencies of the script to keep one alight through many long scenes. Franklyn Farnum is the victim, and the occasion of this atrocity was the Bluebird Photoplay "The Car of Chance" in which he and Brownie Vernon were playing the leads. A heartless scenario writer had included cigar-smoking in several of the scenes, and an equally heartless director insisted upon his leading man's going through with the ordeal. The picture gives an idea of just how much the actor enjoyed the experience.

"I ought to have had all these sensations over with by the time I was twenty, I suppose," he said, ruefully contemplating the weed, "but my education has been sadly neglected. I almost wish I were too young to learn."

Farnum has just celebrated the anniversary of his picture debut. On the evening of Decoration Day he gave a dinner at one of the Los Angeles cafes to a number of his friends. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who live at the same club as the Bluebird actor, occupied places of honor, and Farnum's new director, Elmer Clifton, was also an honored guest.

He has gladly given up Broadway, New York, for Broadway, Los Angeles, where in his free evenings he may be entertained instead of being one of the entertainers.

ONE OF "THE GRAY GHOST'S" VICTIMS.

J. MORRIS FOSTER plays a mysterious role in the first episode of the new serial "The Gray Ghost," which as all the world knows by this time is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post success "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche. Foster, as young Olmstead, is one of the tools of the master-criminal, having lost heavily to him at cards, and taken the money from his father's bank to cover his loses. By means of this indebtedness, the Ghost engineers a bank robbery, resulting in the fatal shooting of young Olmstead's father. Then the son is spirited away by an agent of the Ghost, leaving the police to suspect him of the double crime, and the last thing we see of him is the repression of his effort to find out where he is being taken. He does not appear again for several installments when we find that his story is linked, after all, with the main plot. Foster handles this role with absolute conviction, and succeeds in arousing all our sympathy, in spite of his weakness, by the reality of his grief and bewilderment at the shooting of his father.

He has had much experience in pictures, having played leads for Thanhouser and Famous Players, and before that he was on the legitimate stage, in Shakespearean roles. He was born in San Bernadino, Cal., so that joining Universal to play at Universal City was for him going home. He is a graduate of Stanford University, and an all-round athlete. Foster received an unusual letter in his mail the other day. This was from a man in Pennsylvania, who believes the actor is his long-lost brother.

DORA CREATES REGULAR FURORE IN PITTSBURGH.

AMID the fanfare of the trumpet and the bugler's call, Dora Rodrigues, the Universal Girl, the only girl recruiter to whom Uncle Sam can lay claim, marched from the downtown section of Pittsburgh, last Tuesday, to Memorial Hall. Dora has met with cordial and enthusiastic receptions in other places which she has visited on her trans-continental hike from New York to Universal City, for the purpose of stimulating recruiting for the army and navy, but the excitement which she aroused on that day surpassed anything which she has encountered on her eventful tour.

Great throngs lined the streets, all anxious to catch a glimpse of the girl who possessed the courage and determination to walk all the way from New York to California. Dora looked the picture of health and "fitness" as she marched, supported by stalwart fighting men of all branches of the service.

Five hundred school children gave her a great send-off, each waving a flag, while students of the high schools were out en masse to greet her. On the steps of the new City-County Building she was received by Mayor Joseph G. Armstrong, to whom she handed a letter from a well-known veteran of the Civil War. Moving pictures of this meeting were taken, and then the parade got into full swing, and the next stopping place was the office of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, from which she made an address to the crowd. Dora carried the banners of the Universal Film Company and the Dispatch in the parade. Later she entered the Cameraphone Theatre, where she appeared daily for the rest of the week, giving spirited talks on recruiting.

All the officers of the military units in the city, including the army, navy, marine corps and Eighteenth regiment, were on hand to greet and congratulate Dora on the success of her mission. She recruited eleven men at the Cameraphone Theatre the first day. She was the guest at a dinner given by the F. I. L. M. Club, and attended wearing the uniform which she has adopted for her tour. She was welcomed by the president and officers of the club, and several members made speeches to which she very prettily replied.

On Friday, June eighth, the Naval Reserves, two hundred strong, which have been in training for two years, were scheduled to leave the city, and Dora was invited to be present at their departure, to shake each man by the hand, and make a little speech to each one. The officers in charge suggested this, as they thought that the sight of the interpid girl would cheer those whom the boys left behind.

BUTTERFLY Picture. Written by Willis and Woods. Adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge and produced by a new director, Elmer Clifton, who sets a high standard in his first five-reeler, with Jack Mulhall as the star.

Below—Jimmy's desperate fight on the cliff.

A NEW director, Elmer Clifton, makes his bow in this Butterfly Picture, written by Willis and Woods, and adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge. The story serves as an ideal medium for the talents of the young star, Jack Mulhall, and will surely increase his popularity. There is another new name in the cast—that of Donna Drew, the pretty little dark-eyed nymph of the island, whose name was changed the other day from "Moon" to "Drew," and who will make many friends by her work in this Butterfly. The larger part of the scenes were taken of Santa Cruz Island, and are as beautiful as anything seen in recent pictures. The story is consistently interesting, and gives Jack a chance to prove his proficiency in water sports.

Jimmy Gordon is the son of the head of the Gordon Syndicate, which owns, among other things, an island off the coast of Lower California, upon which there is a valuable fire opal mine. Gordon Senior is worried about the mine, as the shipments have fallen off, and he is looking for a responsible two-fisted man to send on an investigation. The last person in the world who answers this description is his son Jimmy. However, the old man receives a shock when one of his employees, Bennie Zussbaum, tells how Jimmy rescued him from a gang of toughs in a roadside cafe. Old Gordon begins to think well of his son, for the first time.

Jimmy is engaged to Lucy Andrews, a society girl, but it would be quite possible for one to live without the other. Lucy's mother is far more interested in Sir Beverly Wyndham, an Englishman on the look-out for a rich wife. When Jimmy breaks an engagement with Lucy and she then sees him fighting at the roadhouse, as she drives by in her car, she determines to break with him. However, in the meantime, his father has decided to send him to Calabas Island, for he suspects the foreman of double dealing, and after Jimmy's exhibition of prowess, thinks he will be just the one to deal with him. Jimmy says good-by so hurriedly to Lucy that she has no time to break with him. So he goes off nominally engaged.

At the island, Jasper Sneedham, with the assistance of McCool and his native servant, Juan, has been systematically cheating the company. The only honest person is the foreman, Haimer. Jasper has a stepdaughter, Nadine, who is as pretty as a nymph. When Jimmy arrives on the mainland, he is met by Juan, and taken by launch to the island. On the way, Juan hits him over the head with a belaying pin. Jimmy manages, with great difficulty, to swim to the island, and crawls onto the shore more dead than alive. Nadine is playing on the beach. She sees him and calls the foreman to go with her to his assistance. They take the half-drowned youth to Haimer's hut. Jasper comes in haste, but is reassured when he finds only a boy, though he recognizes him as Gordon's only son. He offers to show Jimmy over the mine as soon as he is well enough. But Jimmy is far more interested in Nadine than in opals. Remorseful thoughts of Lucy are all that keep him from making love to her.

Jasper makes up his mind that as he has stolen a comfortable fortune, he may as well leave the island before Gordon sends a boat for his son. With McCool and Juan he lays his plans, which Nadine overhears. Jasper has told the girl that she is to marry McCool as soon as they reach the mainland. Nadine goes with her information to Haimer, and they resolve to tell Jimmy of the contemplated flight. The launch is ready, and Jimmy says that they will beat the other to it. Before he goes, he has just time to give Juan the licking of his life in Jasper's cottage, and leave him half dead. Jasper has locked Nadine in the closet in her room, and Jimmy hears her call and takes the door off its hinges to get her out. Jasper and McCool return for her, and Jimmy holds them up with an unloaded revolver. Armed with an axe, he rushes for the launch with Haimer and Nadine. The others follow, and he fights them with the axe, while Nadine and Haimer run for the launch. One of Jasper's men engages Haimer here, while McCool, who has sneaked off, catches up Nadine, and attacks her on the beach. Jimmy sees this from the top of the cliff. He has no time to run down, so he makes a terrific dive into the sea, and swims rapidly to the beach, rescues Nadine, and knocks McCool out. Then he jumps for the launch, and makes off. Jasper fires after them, from the cliff, but does not succeed in hitting them. Jimmy throws a rope to Haimer, who is swimming after them.

Reaching the mainland, they call for the police, who return with Haimer to the island to arrest the gang. Jimmy buys new clothes for himself and Nadine, and takes her to his father's office. She waits outside while he makes his report to his father. The old man is delighted, but says that he has bad news for Jimmy. Lucy has eloped with Wyndham. Jimmy is tickled to death with the news and brings in his "real girl" Nadine, whom Old Gordon receives with affection.

CHANEY DEVELOPS INTO A WALKER.

LON CHANEY, who is playing one of the leads with Dorothy Phillips in the Ida May Park Bluebird production, "The Fires of Rebellion," was notified to join the company at Camp Baldy, near San Bernardino, and be made up ready for work not later than 10 o'clock in the morning. Mrs. Chaney had received an injury and, consequently he remained at home as long as possible. The result was he had to walk from his home in Hollywood to the electric station in Los Angeles, a distance of six miles, as the cars had not started at 4:30 a. m., when he had to leave. Then from Azusa Station to the picture camp, a distance o fsixteen miles, was made on horsegack.

The actor returned home every evening for three nights, and each morning repeated his early morning hike and long ride to join the company, where he had to spend another two hours and a half putting on his make-up. Chaney says, however, that the early morning exercise did him good.

"She Married Her Husband"

Jane dresses the part of Swami's bride.

ONE of those smoothly constructed comedies which keep one in a state of subdued chuckles all the way through, is the Victor, "She Married Her Husband," produced by Matt Moore from a story by J. G. Alexander. Things happen fast, and here are some of them:

Matt rescues Jane when her dog's leash is twisted around her ankle and she can't move. He is struck with her and she with him. That night he celebrates with the boys, and in the morning he finds a letter from his father, telling him that this is the end, and that from now on he must be on his own resources. Matt is almost penniless, but he reads of a Professor Kairo who is making large sums of money, and determines to go into the business of Swami-ing.

He dresses himself and his man servant in Oriental robes and hangs out a sign, determined to show his father that he can do very well without him. His first client asks him to give a seance at her house that night When he swims in, he is astonished to recognize Jane, who is entertaining Lord Fauntleroy, whom her mother fancies for her husband. Jane tells the Swami that she has lost Bruno, and Matt's servant finds him. This is a great success. The professor plants a crystal in the middle of the room and telling them all to watch and it will reveal a great secret, he goes out into the verandah to talk to Jane, who has recognized him. Her mother comes out and Jane runs off.

Weeks pass by and Matt finds that love and swami-ing don't mix. He shoots a note into Jane's room with a bow and arrow. It reads "Dearest—Have arranged marriage. Am waiting nearby with an auto to elope. Your own Matt."

Jane tears the message from the arrow point, stuck in the wall, but mother finds the last part of it. She is horrified, and after the hasty wedding she tears Jane from Matt by enlisting the aid of the chauffeur. Matt is deprived of his bride and goes back to swami-ing. The marriage is publicly annulled. Matt reads this in the paper and also that the De Puysters are at Tuxedo for the winter. In his despair he is cheered by a message from Mrs. Van Emery asking him to give a seance in her home in Tuxedo. He is not to ring as he will find the window open and it is to be a surprise.

Matt has the misfortune to enter the wrong house. It is the De Puysters. Mother holds him up at the point of a revolver, thinking he has come to kidnap Jane. She tells him that she is going to keep him under her eye till Jane is married to Lord Fauntleroy. He is to act as butler, and will be arrested if he betrays himself. Baron von Limburg and the Count de Fromage both arrive for the house party. They can neither of them skate well, and Jane skates to the admiration of all with an unknown young man, who is really Matt. There is to be a masquerade ball that night, and Jane lays her plans for it. She asks the chauffeur to take the place of her sweetheart at the ball that night, so that they can elope. She tells him to wear a policeman's uniform which she gives him. They are overheard by the baron, the count and her mother. The two noblemen try their best to get policemen's uniforms so as to impersonate Jane's sweetheart. The result of the mix-up is that they are left with no clothes at all. At last they succeed in getting some and returning to the ball. Mother has complacently watched the wedding of Jane and the policeman, thinking that he is one of the titles. To her horror, when the bridegroom unmasks she sees that it is Matt. But she is reconciled when she finds that he is not a Hindu Swami.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By J. W. CAMBRIDGE.

TORONTO, Ont.—There is considerable gloom in Toronto film circles these days caused by the death on Saturday, May 26, of Mrs. Hague, wife of Mr. Claire Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd. Mrs. Hague had been ill for but thirteen days, and her death was a great shock to her many friends. She leaves three small children. Mr. and Mrs. Hague celebrated their tenth wedding anniversary only a few days previous, Mrs. Hague seeming in the best of health. The funeral was one of the largest seen in Toronto in some time, being attended by all Toronto exchangemen and many out-of-town friends. Many beautiful wreaths, sprays and large floral tributes, some of which came from as far away as Calgary, New York and St. John, gave their mute testimony of the sympathy of their many friends.

According to advices received from the Toronto branch of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., where the Universal's first genuine service department started, and which is the most successful of all Universal service departments in helping the exhibitor, the duties of the newly named "Make-It-Pay Department" are clearly defined. Mr. J. W. Cambridge is in charge of that department, and he will outline its duties.

"THE TWO-GUN PARSON."

Big U Western Drama.

The parson of Bear Ridge was a peculiar character. He was the only one who did not make fun of drunken old Jim Bradley. He helped his daughter Louise to take the old man home. When the people interfered the parson showed them two guns, and declared that he was going to stay and do as he pleased. Slim, one of the disaffected, set out to prove that the parson was yellow. He takes steps to break up the parson's revival meeting, but desists when he sees that the parson is preaching with his two guns before him. Slim writes a note, pretending that it comes from a friend of the parson's, to say that his disguise is splendid and they will help when he goes on his next job. He finds occasion to put this in the pocket of the parson's coat, but Louise sees him do it and tells the parson. Slim tells the Sheriff that the parson is nothing more than a horse thief, and that he can prove it. A lot of the boys go together and ask the parson for the letter in his coat. Louise hands it to them, telling the Sheriff how she saw Slim put it in the parson's pocket. Slim's plan recoils upon himself.

UNIVERSAL COMEDIES

Get the Money!

The popularity of Universal Comedies is no doubt largely due to their infinite variety. In Nestors the fans see those popular favorites, Eddie Lyon, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts in the funniest parlor comedies that are being released anywhere today. In L-KO'S they get Phil Dunham, Merta Sterling, Lucille Hutton and other funny folks in stunt comedies that call for the last word in skill and daring on the part of these resourceful and clever people. In Joker Comedies you get William Franey, considered by many the funniest man man on the screen today; Gale Henry, by all odds the premier comedienne on the screen, together with a supporting cast whose individual abilities are of stellar caliber. A comedy night made up of Universal Comedies makes a bright spot for the fans any week and never fails to draw. Their variety enables you to book a release of each brand, Nestor, Joker and L-Ko, and still make sure of a program which will be made up of pictures so different in type, yet each so successful in getting the laughs, that no one can bring a charge of monotony against it. Fans are demanding comedies more and more insistently. Here are the best in the world. Grab them. Book thru any Universal Exchange.

TAKE a look at the tool chest of the Gray Ghost, now that it is open, and the instruments with which he works laid out for your inspection. These are the tools by the use of which he carries out his plans, and puts through the nefarious schemes which form the plot of the newest Universal serial, named after him, and adapted by its director, Stuart Paton, from the Saturday Evening Post success, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche. A glance at these men will convince you that all the adjectives which are fittingly applied to "tools" may be used to describe them. "Sharp as a razor," "tough as steel," "hard as nails"—don't these expressions suit the men whose sinister countenances decorate the head of this page?

There is Dan Leighton, in the character of "Brant" who is introduced as a tool who only follows instructions. There is Wilton Taylor, as "Ashby," the Gray Ghost's lieutenant. There is the master's valet, Frank Tokonaga, and Francis MacDonald, who made such an impression in the role of "Red" Warren in the "Voice on the Wire," and who plays Williams, secretary to Arabin, the great Fifth Avenue jeweler, who is making the necklace which Hildreth, the hero, has been sent to America to obtain. Williams in reality is in the pay of the mysterious general. There is Burton Law as a strong-armed crook, and John Cook, who will be remembered for his excellent work as Bob Cratchitt in Julian's version of "The Christmas Carol" of Dickens, which was a New Year's Bluebird. He plays the part of the bank watchman, John Rees, who enables the Gray Ghost's lieutenants to engineer the robbery with which the story opens. The victim in this case is the weakest tool of all, a man of quite different type, the son of the banker who has lost money to the Gray Ghost and is completely in his power. His name in the serial is Fred Olmstead and he is played by J. Morris Foster. The daintiest tool in the whole collection is the musical comedy star, Morn Light, played by Priscilla Dean, and much too delicate to be included with the others. She has to have a box to herself.

And what of the master mind who controls these instruments and makes them do his will, take his orders, and submit to his faultfinding when they fail? The Gray Ghost is one of the most impressive personalities of the screen, and is played in the most satisfactory manner by Harry Carter, the Universal's villain par excellence, who has an enviable reputation as a ruffian.

"To play villains consistently well is surely an achievement to be proud of," he says, and he ought to know, for he is one of the most persistent ruffians in pictures. Whenever you see a tall, powerful, blonde brute in a Universal feature, whose heart is as black as his looks are fair, and who is giving an exhibition of consummate devilishness of the strong-arm variety, you may be reasonably sure that you are looking upon the excessively good-natured and popular Harry Carter, who has to belie his character for a living.

There are different grades and species of villainy of course, just as there are grades of respectability, or blondeness, or anything else. Motion picture villains, roughly speaking, (and how else should one speak of had marked him for a black

career even then. She had given him a very good baritone voice, and a baritone must be a villain, otherwise tradition is overthrown. Carter was very musical and he took time to have his voice trained. The result of his study was the position of leading baritone with De Wolff Hopper in Sousa's "El Capitan." Not long after the run started, something happened to Hopper and Carter was given the name part, which he played steadily for forty weeks. After this success he no longer found it necessary to warm the benches at the managers' offices. He played a long summer engagement in Boston, with such things as "The Belle of New York" when that perennial beauty was younger than she is now; and all the other roles which the composer and librettist had marked out for a baritone, and they were generally pretty malificent characters. That was the beginning of his study of the ways and the wiles of villains. He has been stage manager for the Shuberts, and acted in that capacity, besides creating the part of "Prince Orlofsky" in their version of "Fledermaus" which was performed at the Casino in New York, under the title of "The Merry Countess."

In 1913 he made his first screen appearance in the Rex-Universal Company, and he has been playing for Universal ever since. One of the first things he did was the villain in the serial "The Master Key," so that he knows the strenuous work demanded of a serial actor. Since then he has had a marvelous career of almost unbroken male volence.

Harry Carter, the daring debonnaire scheming villain of the Gray Ghost serial. His name you will know later.

Victor Comedy

Written by Harry Wulze.
Produced by R. A. Dillon.

CAST.

Pirate Chief	Pat Rooney
His Flunky	Kewpie Morgan
Cannibal Queen	Mary Haines
Cannibal Girl	Julia Rooney

The Pirate Chief and his flunky are marooned, and cast ashore on a cannibal island. The flunky is caught and made king by the elderly queen. He makes the Pirate work for him. The Chief connives with the councillor and the flunky is captured. The Chief is discovered, however, and given his choice of death or of marrying the queen. The flunky escapes in a boat. The Pirate refuses the queen and is put into the pot. Dynamite is put under it and he is blown through the air and lands in the flunky's boat. Everything is just as it was before.

KINGSLEY BENEDICT

There is a fascination in the words: "Secret Service." Every human with a drop of red blood in the veins thrills with the force, action and romance which the two words convey.
You can make money out of this feeling by booking the powerful seven two-reel dramas, "The Perils of the Secret Service."

Founded on George Bronson Howard's "Yorke Norroy" stories and directed by Mr. Howard, which assures a perfect production. Write or wire your nearest exchange, or direct from UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. "The PERILS OF THE SECRET SERVICE"

BEN WILSON in the last Episode of "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE"

The "Voice" revealed.

Shirley and Polly await the end.

The Living Death

A MOST satisfactory conclusion is reached in the last chapter of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which is one of the very best continued photoplays that Universal has ever issued. The last episode is called "The Living Death," and in it the identity of the "Voice" is revealed, and also his reason for the series of crimes committed throughout the serial. Few stories ever adapted to the purpose of a serial picture have so consistently maintained the interest until the very last scene as "The Voice on the Wire" has done.

Shirley and Polly, fascinated, watch the disembodied hand writing. Cronin and Prof. Duval wait in an adjoining room; the latter preventing the former from entering the room. The hand writes that he was a member of the "Black Seven," a psychical and scientific research body of Paris and, because the scientists considered them crazy owing to their advanced theories, their meetings were necessarily secret. Five of these men were the five victims of the "Voice," the sixth was Renolds and the seventh was Emil Laroux, who, not content with proving that astral bodies could be projected, was positive that he could recall a soul at will, providing that the body in which the soul lived on this earth was preserved before death by a certain ancient process. The person had to be an easy subject to his will before the experiment. The men didn't believe him, knowing that no one would consent to being mummified alive. That night Renolds tried to convince Laroux of the absurdity of his new theory, but the latter seemed to be obsessed by the experiment he called "The Living Death."

THE solution of the mystery is reached in the last chapter of this winning serial, adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball, by Stuart Paton and produced by Ben Wilson, its star.

CAST.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Polly	Neva Gerber
Renolds	Jos. Girard
Cronin	Howard Crampton
Prof. Duval	De Brullier
Renolds' Wife	Irene Hunt
Laroux	William Quinn

At Renolds' home, Laroux soon discovered that he could easily dominate the will of Irene, Renolds' wife. He told the five men and, though at first they were shocked, they soon were eagerly questioning him and he demonstrated his power by calling forth the astral body of the young wife. When Renolds,—or Chantard, as he was known,—went on his African expedition, Laroux went with him and willed that Irene should go too.

A year later they were in the heart of the African jungle. Laroux had been a great help and a true friend. Irene's baby was a healthy boy. Then one day Renolds went to get some wonderful specimens and during his absence Laroux received a letter from the five men urging him to proceed with the experiment. The black tropic night crushed what little moral fibre there was left in Laroux' soul. Irene was soon under the influence of his will. Then with the help of

L-Ko "Where is My Che-ild"

L—KO Two-Reeler. Made by Noel Smith, under supervision of J. G. Blystone and featuring Dan Russell, with a new member of the Komedy Kompany. A remarkably intelligent dog.

CAST.

Mr. Weazelbiffer	Dan Russell
Mrs. Weazelbiffer	Mrs. Moore
Mrs. Gilsprev	Gladys Varden

THERE are all varieties of henpecked husbands in screen comedies, but Dan Russell has found a new kind in the latest L-Ko travesty, "Where is My Che-ild?" Noel Smith was responsible for most of the execution of this picture, though Blystone threw a professional eye over the proceedings as usual. Gladys Varden aids and abets Dan, and the dog is really a featured player of the cast.

Mr. Weazelbiffer is henpecked at home, but at his office he is boss. He has a neat arrangement for getting rid of inconvenient people. They sit in a certain chair and are shot through the wall and into a pool of water. This is very effective against book agents and creditors. The Gilsprey household is just the opposite. Hubby does all the work and wife flirts. She works once in a while and he minds the baby. Mr. Weazelbiffer has a disagreement with his bookkeeper, when Gladys comes to the office looking for a job. By mistake she is shot into the pool. Dan rescues her and stands her over the register to dry. Then he shoots the bookkeeper in after her. The bookkeeper sends him word that she will be revenged on him. Dan is contemptuous. An elderly office boy applies for work, which is given to him. Dan now needs a new bookkeeper, and Gladys phones to the agency. The wires get crossed and she gets her husband on the wire instead. He ties the baby cradle to the pendulum so that it will rock while he is gone and goes to the job. He is engaged, but Dan is mad when he sees Gladys flirting, as he thinks, with the new man.

Dan's wife arrives, and the new office boy says she is a book agent. So she is shot into the pool. There is a general melee after this, and Dan's wife insists upon Gladys being discharged. Dan obeys, but he writes a note on the back of the check he gives Gladys asking her to come to his house that night. Dan then sends a faked message to his wife, telling her that her sister's estate is being settled and that she is wanted by the lawyer. He gives the letter to the boy, who reads it, but takes it to Mrs. Weazelbiffer. She falls for it, and Gladys and Dan are soon enjoying a little supper at his house. The boy, however, tells Mrs. W. of the fake, and she returns hotfoot. Dan has just time to hide Gladys.

A man arrives with a vacuum cleaner to clean the apartment. It draws all the furniture into a heap. In the meantime, Gladys' husband has returned and found Dan's note to his wife. He takes the baby and goes to Dan's. He says "You took my wife, now take my child." Dan hides the baby in all sorts of places, finally in the stove. The dog finds the baby and takes it out to his kennel, in his mouth. Hubby has a change of heart, and returns for his child. Dan can't find it. The cleaner sees through the window that the baby is with the dog. He goes out secretly. Gladys is hiding disguised as a chair. But Mrs. W. finds her. The cleaner tells about the baby and the dog, who drags the kennel after him by its chain. After a long chase they find the kennel empty after all. They return, with a policeman, who finds the baby hanging on the hatrack in the hall. He puts it, covered, on the bed. The cleaner hides it again. They can't find it and are crazy. At last the dog finds the baby for them. Then they all turn on the cleaner. "Who are you?" they ask. He puts on the bookkeeper's whiskers, and declares himself avenged.

Three scenes from the Bison picture.

Kingsley Benedict and Eileen Sedgwick in "Lone Larry"

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama. Written by Grant Carpenter. Adapted for the screen by Helen Starr and produced by Henry McRae, with Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict in the leads.

CAST.

Jim Cressy	Charles Dorian
Jack Homer	Percy Pembrook
"Lone" Larry	Kingsley Benedict
Sime Gilbert	William Dyer
Jesse Hale	Leonard Clapham
Kitty Gilbert	Eileen Sedgwick

THE high standard of the Bison two-reelers has been well maintained in this exciting story by Grant Carpenter, adapted for the screen by Helen Starr, and produced by Henry McRae. Eileen Sedgwick has the only woman's role, and Kingsley Benedict has the lead. Here is an outline of what happens:

In polo practice, Jim Cressy injures his friend, Jack Homer, accidentally. "Lone" Larry at the same time is injured in another outdoor sport. Being a professional hold-up man, he succeeds in stealing some express sacks of gold, but is pursued by the trainmen who shoot at him. He is hit in the arm. Larry takes to the hills, binds up his wounds and hides the gold.

Kitty Gilbert, the pretty daughter of Sime Gilbert, the foreman of Jim Cressy's western ranch, is bored by the ranch life and by the attentions of Jesse Hale, the sheriff. Jim Cressy induces Jack to visit his ranch in the west.

In a city editorial office, the editor sends a boy to get photos to go with two stories. The items read—"Jack Homer injured at polo" and "Lone Larry holds up another train." The boy brings the photos and is told to take them to the art room. When the first papers appear, the sporting editor sees that the pictures of the bandit, Lone Larry and Jack Homer, the wealthy polo player, have been switched. The editor learns from the foreman of the composing room that the mail edition has already gone out. There is nothing to do in this case but to correct the mistake in the city issues.

Sime Gilbert receives a wire from Jim, telling of the coming of Jack Homer. Kitty is delighted, thus causing the sheriff to be angry. Jack arrives. He and Kitty are mutually attracted. Jesse is enraged, because Kitty refuses to go for a ride with him.

In the meantime, Lone Larry starts West and the next morning walks into the depot at Cressy where the agent is pulling a handsome trunk over from the track. The station-agent calls Larry's attention to the trunk and tells him of the immense roll of bills the owner had. He had seen Jack tipping the porter. Larry, seeing an opportunity for a possible hold-up of the rich guy from the East, asks the Mexican from the ranch, who comes for the trunk, to give him a lift to the Cressy ranch. As soon as he has had a chance to get a good look at Jack, Larry slips away, without being noticed.

The sheriff gets his mail edition paper and, seeing the pictures over the bandit story, immediately suspects that Jack is masquerading as Cressy's friend. He tells Kitty of his suspicions, but she merely laughs at him. Jesse, however, wires Jim to come West if possible. He is determined to get rid of Jack, and follows them when they go riding.

The next day Jack is riding alone, followed by the sheriff at a distance, Larry, wearing a mask, holds up Jack, who quickly shoots at the bandit and then tears the mask from his face. The sheriff rushes into the scene and arrests Jack. Several cowboys hear the shooting and upon approaching, are instructed by Jesse to take the injured man to the ranch house. Jack is marched to the jail at the point of a gun, while the doctor, after examining Larry, says he cannot possibly live. The cowboys are angry over the shooting and talk of lynching Jack. Kitty helps Jack to escape, but the men pursue him and bring him back. They plan to lynch him that night.

Larry is also worried about Jack's fate and, hearing Kitty's crying, calls her and tells her that Jack is entirely innocent. Kitty dashes off on a horse to catch up with the lynchers, who are already on the road toward a wooded spot. Cressy arrives at the depot; hears the news and rushes toward the fatal spot. He is in time to corroborate Kitty's story.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

FOR "THE LITTLE ORPHAN."

WHILE the invasion of Belgium has had apparently no cheerful aspects, "The Little Orphan" shows at least one happy development. It portrays the adventures of a little Belgian refugee who found much happiness in her new home in America. The invasion of Belgium is not shown—the entire locale being laid in our own country. It has a strong appeal and is a story that is exceptionally pleasing. Here is a stunt that can be used to good advantage:

Get a goat (a "nanny" preferred) and a girl about fourteen or fifteen years old. Dress her up like a Belgian refugee. Have her lead the goat about the streets of your town. Have a banner on the goat reading:

We Are Belgian Refugees!
My Mistress is
"THE LITTLE ORPHAN"
She will appear at the (name here) Theatre
on (day and date)
COME AND SEE US!

In addition, have the little girl pass out cards printed as follows:

I am
"THE LITTLE ORPHAN"
I want every little orphan in (name of town) to come to the (name) Theatre (date)
afternoon and see me FREE!
P.S.—You must bring a grown-up with you.

On the afternoon of the showing arrange to admit every orphaned child free when accompanied by an adult. Announce this fact freely in all of your advertising.

Get in touch with all charitable organizations in your vicinity, especially those that have been active in Belgian Relief Work, and explain the plan to them. Also tell them how the story involves the adoption of Belgian children by charitable Americans. Have them to co-operate with you in giving all orphaned children a good time.

Then get busy, with your mailing list, using the attached letter for copy.

My Dear Friend:

Wouldn't you like to see a production that will show you some of the happiness that came out of war-stricken Europe—especially Belgium—with none of the attendant grewsomeness?

Then you must come and see "The Little Orphan" at the (name) theatre (day and date).

It's all happiness and gives dainty Ella Hall the opportunity of all her vivacious young career. In it, as the little Belgian refugee, she has her most appealing role. And she is positively wonderful in it!

It's a rare treat for happiness-loving folk—and so different from the ordinary "blood and thunder" feature. YOU are sure to like it.

Be sure and see it!

Cordially yours,
(Manager's name here)

Three interesting scenes from "Helen Grayson's Strategy."

"Helen Grayson's Strategy"

REX Two-Reel Feature. Written by Willis and Woods and produced by John McDermott, with Irene Hunt in the leading role. A story of a woman's clever trick to save herself.

CAST.

Helen Grayson	Irene Hunt
Lloyd Bayless	Malcolm Blevins
Homer Grayson	L. C. Shumway
Physician	Hayward Mack

THE swift thinking of a woman's brain and how it saved her happiness with her husband has been made the central theme of this clever Rex feature, which was written by Willis and Woods, and produced by John McDermott, with Irene Hunt in the feminine role and three well-known players, Malcolm Blevins, L. C. Shumway and Hayward Mack in the other parts.

Helen Grayson had thought herself in love with Lloyd Bayless until it came to the point of leaving her husband. Then her heart told her that it was only her husband to whom she belonged. Piqued and chagrined at her refusal to accompany him, Bayless attempts to compel her to keep her promise and leave, but she finally makes him understand that she will remain. Then a messenger arrives with a telegram from her husband announcing his return within a short time. Bayless leaves.

Grayson, returning, discovers that his wife was about to leave with Bayless. He tells her that he is going out to shoot him, and leaves her. She frantically phones Bayless to leave town, but he decides to wait for Grayson and "get him." Grayson, examining a revolver in his own office, accidentally wounds himself and he is taken home.

Meantime Bayless, waiting for Grayson, becomes nearly frantic with the suspense and finally decides that he will go to Grayson's home and take matters into his own hands. He arrives in the night and Helen, hearing a noise, goes to the library, through a window of which Bayless had just entered. She tells him that Grayson is wounded and is now sleeping. Grayson delivers the ultimatum that either she will go with him or he will kill Grayson.

She pretends that she will go with him and he embraces her. At that moment she takes a necklace from her neck and drops it into his pocket and then she calls for help. A passing policeman hears her, and when he enters the house she tells him that Bayless is a thief. Her testimony is borne out by the finding of the necklace in the pocket of the astounded man. He attempts to kill the policeman, but the man shoots first, killing Bayless.

Upstairs, Grayson has been awakened by the shots, and when Helen returns to his bedside she tells him that it was a thief who had been killed. Grayson never knows of the real tragedy which has been enacted in his own house.

two negro boys, they carried her into another room and soon carried her mummified body from the house. Laroux took the baby with him.

Renolds returned to find his wife and baby gone. With his men he followed Laroux all night until a swirling sandstorm stopped them. Dawn found them on the desert near the jungle's edge. Then they found Laroux face downward in the sand, dead. In his right hand was clenched a confession of his insanity and of his mummifying Renolds' wife's living body and sending her to the "Black Seven" to prove his theory of "The Living Death." He had intended to use the baby as a medium of communication with her chained soul. The child was rescued.

That night Renolds was bitten by a poisonous snake and his servant cut off his hand to save his life. Later a human arm was grafted to Renolds' body and he found that when his astral body was projected, the hand was the only thing visible. He had means of revenge, but waited seventeen years for his son's aid, killed all the "Black Seven," one by one. Renolds never found the mummy of his wife's "Living Death." He had killed his own son, "Red" Warren.

Doing, seeing, reading and wearing the same things every day soon wears on anyone's nerves. If you didn't have a change you'd get stale—grow rusty—you wouldn't be worth a whoop in a barnyard. Same with your show. Give your patrons all features and they'll soon weary of the inside of your house and go to the place where VARIETY abounds. The kind of variety you can have through the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM.

These specials are all hand picked. Not a dull one in the lot. Each has been so carefully selected that they are worth more than the slight extra cost we charge for them. You can book them separately, if desired, but be sure to show each one in your house. They are money-makers that are full of the kind of punch and kick that "fans" will go out of their way to see.

On the other hand you might spare yourself a lot of trouble by simply booking the complete UNIVERSAL PROGRAM to get both the "specials" and "regulars" combining both drama and comedy. Doing this gives you a powerfully attractive program that will make your house more popular that you have ever had it. "Regulars" may be booked separately if desired.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"MAN AND BEAST."

HERE is a Butterfly feature that has been declared by critics good enough to be a State Rights feature. If that is a fact—and it is—it is deserving of an aggressive advertising campaign on your part.

The story is laid in the African wilds, so have your lobby suggest the tropics as much as possible. If possible, secure a well-built darkey and dress him as scantily as the law and ethics will permit. Have him stand in your lobby several days before the showing and let him pass out cards, reading:

The African wilds brought to (name of town)
see the eternal struggle between
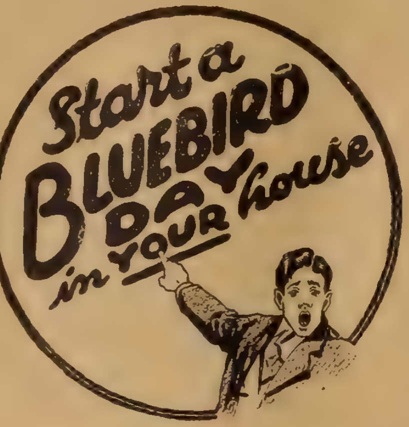
"MAN AND BEAST"
at the (name) Theatre
on (day and date)



Get a wagon of the farm type and put a prairie schooner top on it. Have it driven through the streets by a man and a woman with a baby. On each side carry a banner reading:

Our Baby's life was endangered by
"MAN AND BEAST"
in the wilds of Africa.
See who saved it at the (name) Theatre
on (day and date)

Then use your mailing list with the following postal card. A mailing list affords a direct appeal that will not be ignored.

My dear Friend—Butterfly features are always good, but I want to call your particular attention to "Man and Beast," a really wonderful picture of the African wilds, which will be shown at the (name) Theatre, on (day and date).

"Man and Beast" was directed by Henry McRae, and Kingsley Benedict and Eileen Sedgwick are featured.

It is truly a "worth while" picture—one that you will enjoy.

Cordially yours,

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

Mary MacLaren in "The Plow Woman." With Kingsley Benedict and an all-star cast. A picturization of the famous novel by Eleanor Gates. Ninth Butterfly Picture. Directed by Charles Swickard. Released July 2. Only the tremendous resources and facilities of the mighty Universal could give you the powerful picture presented in this latest Butterfly release. A superb cast, headed by the famous star Mary MacLaren, gives a vigorous portrayal of one of the strongest stories ever screened. It is by far too rich in incident and action to be told in detail here. It is a story of the west in the early 70's. It is not a wild western picture nor a cowboy story. It deals with the life of the pioneers, and of a sister's loving sacrifice. It is staged with that faithful realism which is a certain mark of the Butterfly Brand. It will well repay you to read the complete story in this magazine in a later number. You will find that this powerful drama will please all your patrons. Prepare for a big time when you book this by boosting it to the limit.

Mignon Anderson, Master Elwood Bredell and Roy Stewart in "A Young Patriot." Three Reel Gold Seal Military Drama. Directed by L. W. Chaudet. Released July 3. Here is a timely release for the glorious Fourth of July. A picture that will capture your neighborhood. With this as a basis you should prepare a program that will play to capacity. The story has to do with a patriotic American army officer who is experimenting with a new explosive which he has invented. His little son Elwood is also a patriot, and the boy's grandfather, a veteran, fosters the boy's right impulses and prepares him for the supreme test which comes to the youngster as a tremendous climax after nearly three reels of swift action. How the boy foils a foreign agent, even at the risk of his own life, with the interweaving of a strong love story, makes a marvelous picture that will send your audiences home enthusiastic.

Ruth Stonehouse in "Daredevil Dan." One Reel Victor Comedy Drama. Directed by Ruth Stonehouse. Released July 5. One would almost think that Ruth had something to do with this picture. The story was written by Ruth Stonehouse. The star's name is Ruth Stonehouse—and the director was Ruth Stonehouse. And it is just as good a picture as that popular young person is due to produce. She has been a favorite for a long time, and she has had the experience that enables her stuff to get over big. In the story she wishes she were a man. In fact, she wants to be a bad man. Donning coat and trousers and arming herself with an old musket, she starts on a career of crime. The story relates her adventures, which include the rounding up of a gang of crooks, and her final decision that being a sweet and pretty girl isn't so bad after all. A very popular type of picture, and one that will please your patrons.

Harry Carey in "The Wrong Man." With Fritzi Ridgeway and a notable cast. Two Reel 101-Bison Western Drama Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released July 7. Harry and Fritzi wanted to get married. The whole town knew it. Harry expected to make a strike almost any day, and then—wedding bells. Harry's pal, Old Ben, was the town joke. The town was a bad one and the citizens were warned that if they did not elect a sheriff the U. S. Marshal would take charge. They thought Old Ben was harmless, and so they elected him sheriff. Then came the stage hold-up and Ben and Harry started after the robber. Harry came upon him alone and was badly wounded. (Some wonderful fight stuff in this.) The robber made his escape—first fixing circumstantial evidence on the unconscious Harry. Some plot, eh? A wonderful climax produces the punch supreme, and there are hints of wedding bells even before Harry makes the expected strike. Your fans will talk about this picture for weeks.

"BARTERED YOUTH."

Laemmle Drama.

Written by W. V. Mong.
Produced by W. V. Mong.

CAST.

John Gallagher..........William V. Mong
His Wife..........................Gretchen Lederer
Wilbur James..........Millard K. Wilson
Dorothy Whiloby...............Molly Malone

John Gallagher, a wealthy retired statesman, has married a woman much younger than himself. She, believing at the time, that her husband would live only a few months, is greatly disappointed at his being still so hale and hearty. Mrs. Gallagher is in love with young Wilbur James. Overhearing their conversation one day, Gallagher learns that his wife wishes to be free.

A year passes and Mrs. Gallagher and James have taken to clandestine meetings. Gallagher tells his wife to make arrangements for a divorce as he is leaving for Europe. She is delighted and immediately phones James.

But, in the meantime, James has met Dorothy Whiloby, the girl of his dreams. He falls in love with her and she with him. He then makes up his mind to break off all relations with Mrs. Gallagher. That night at the Whiloby's, Mrs. Gallagher sees they are gazing tenderly at each other and she reads her own doom in their eyes. Later, snatching the first opportunity to talk with him, he tells her that he thinks it is time their relations came to an end.

Heart-sick and miserable, Mrs. Gallagher returns home, where she tells her husband that as she sold her youth to him, she is still his if he wants her. He looks at her coldly, measuring her with steel-like eyes, that were once so full of love for her.

"LIBERTY" is the most splendid, patriotic story ever filmed. It's a glorious, headlong picture that carries the crowd right along—no lagging, no drag, but big, powerful, rapid action that snaps and sizzles with intensity. It gets wave upon wave of applause at every performance. It is playing REPEAT BOOKINGS all over the country.

"Liberty"

is a 20 episode serial—20 big clean-up weeks ahead for the fortunate Exhibitors who booked it. Are YOU one of the fortunate ones? If you have overlooked this money-maker, don't continue to walk blindly, but OPEN YOUR EYES and write or wire your booking immediately to your nearest Universal Exchange, or to UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. "PUPPY LOVE."

Victor Comedy.
Written and Produced by Ruth Stonehouse.

CAST.

Mary Ann..........................Ruth Stonehouse
Jimmy ....Dave Kershaw
Mrs. Kelly............Lydia Yeamans Titus

Jimmy takes the tickets at the picture theatre and Ann is in love with him. Her mother tells her it is "puppy love," and she cries. Jimmy is crazy about a spoiled, pretty girl who scorns him because he has no money to spend on her. Mary Ann determines to earn enough money to buy some finery so that Jimmy will love her. She appeals to the cop, O'Brien. He gives her the job of scrubbing the station floor. She buys pretty things with her dollar, and goes out on conquest bent. Jimmy, longing for money to treat the pretty girl, sees Mrs. Kelly drop her purse. His impulse is to return it. But he stuffs it in his pocket instead. She sees him, and tells O'Brien to arrest him. O'Brien does so, but Mary Ann interferes. She says that it is all the fault of the "vampire," and that Jimmy is the man she loves. O'Brien lets him off ashamed and grateful to Mary Ann, who, for reward, asks him shamelessly to kiss her.

Here's what one Film Critic said about the BLUEBIRD Photoplay—"A JEWEL IN PAWN"

"The Producers have provided Ella Hall only a meagre vehicle in "A JEWEL IN PAWN." A stab at the pathos was attempted, but there seems to be no scenes in it capable of provoking a tear. Minus any consistent show of drama or comedy, they become rather monotonous as the reels roll by." "An inadequate story is the real answer."

AND THIS

Here's what another Film Critic also said about "A JEWEL IN PAWN"

"I believe you can safely play this as a "PROGRAM RELEASE."

"Do not promise them too much on this, but emphasize the human note and call the story a 'little story' which is in a way 'an alibi.' "

Note:- In the letter opposite, "A JEWEL IN PAWN" played to 2,900 people the first day. The second day the house had to stop selling tickets at 7:45 P. M., the business being so good that it was REBOOKED for a return engagement.

Gentlemen:—

As per your letter of the 14th, re: "A JEWEL IN PAWN" handed me by M. Gronau, manager of the Montreal office, I herewith beg to enclose a photo taken of the advertising of this feature at the Globe Theatre, April 28th and 29th.

We played capacity business on the first day of its showing to 2900 people, and on the second day we had to stop selling tickets at 7:45 P. M. Business being so good, we RE-BOOKED it for a return engagement.

This pleased all people of different nationalities, and we feel sure that if the BLUEBIRDS continue to produce features of this quality they will reign supreme in the film world of today.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) GLOBE THEATRE, Sam Bernstein.

HERE you have three opinions. Two from people who haven't a single dime invested in productions, and ONE opinion from an Exhibitor who must stand or fall by his selection. Had this Exhibitor taken the word of either of these critics he would have lost money. Who then are YOU going to believe. Are you going to believe people who don't give a tinker's dam on how they criticize, or are you going to take the words of responsible men directly interested in the money-making value of pictures to you. Here is indisputable, steel-bound, concrete evidence that CAN'T be refuted, on a picture that played two capacity houses, and re-booked for return engagement. What's your opinion, Mr. Exhibitor? BUTTERFLY PICTURE. Written by Reed Heustis and produced by Henry McRae, with the assistance of many of the clever trained animals of the Universal City Zoo.

The prize elephant brings back the baby safely in his cradle.

EILEEN SEDGWICK and Kingsley Benedict are the featured players of this Butterfly Picture, "Man and Beast," which was written by Reed Heustis and produced by the master of thrills, Henry McRae. But a large share of the honors of the picture belong to the clever animals of the Universal City zoo, especially Charlie the elephant, about whom the plot revolves. Such remarkable stunts have never before been performed by four-legged actors, and naturally they are very much bucked up over their success. The effect of his stellar role upon Charlie was so great that he stayed wide awake every night for a week, blowing his trumpet, so that no one connected with the zoo, either two or four-footed had any sleep at all. Joe Martin, Sam the lion, and Tom the leopard are also featured players with their names in the cast, and here is an outline of the things which they do to make the sensations of this picture.

Carl von Haagen, Boer settler, has a deep hatred for Henry Townsend, a pioneer. To gratify this hatred, Von Haagen destroys the cattle springs, common to both neighbors, and allows the water to run waste.

Gretel, Von Haagen's daughter, does not share her father's antipathies, but has learned to care for Ned, the son of Townsend. While they are talking, the elephant, Charlie, comes into the scene; he rolls the log with his trunk, spilling the boy and girl. Townsend and his wife are laughing at the episode, when a native runs up and tells him that Von Haagen is destroying the springs.

Townsend, in a rage, runs toward the springs; Mrs. Townsend rushes into the house, gets a gun, and follows her husband. Gretel begins crying and Ned argues with his mother about the gun. They rush to the scene of the fighting.

Townsend reaches the spring, and he and Von Haagen begin a terrible battle. The elephant, following after Mrs. Townsend, becomes excited by the fight; he breaks off a small tree and brandishes it like a club. This stops the two men. Von Haagen takes Gretel away with him; she tries to pacify her father, who throws her aside and leaves her to follow him.

As the Townsend family walk toward home they come upon a number of natives talking. The natives tell Townsend that lions are prowling around.

Von Haagen goes home, followed by Gretel. He dries his clothes before the fire-place. Gretel attempts to leave the room, but he orders her to remain. Meanwhile, Ned takes his father's gun from him. He then proceeds to make the gun and cartridge harmless. Ned writes a note to Gretel, asking her to meet him at the spring. He calls Charlie, the elephant, and gives him the note.

Von Haagen forbids Gretel to see the Townsends; she tells him that she has promised to marry Ned. He strikes the girl, who goes to her room and cries, and puts her head on the window-sill. The elephant comes up to the window and feels around with his trunk. The note touches Gretel's hair. With the help of the elephant she gets out of the window to the ground below.

Eitel von Haagen, brother of Gretel, returns home and asks his father what has happened. In Gretel's room he finds a note from Ned; he gets a gun and starts for the spring.

Gretel sees a lion ready to spring; she is paralyzed with fright. The lion springs upon Eitel, who is following his sister. Ned rushes to the rescue. He fires at the lion, which leaps from Eitel and makes a spring at Gretel, who climbs a tree. Ned takes Eitel's gun and fires at the lion. The lion runs and Gretel falls from the tree. Eitel reluctantly shakes Ned's hand, after which Ned takes Gretel to his home, where his mother makes her welcome.

Three years pass; happiness comes to the Townsend family, but Von Haagen sits alone in his home and broods.

Ned decides to go into the interior, and leaves with his wife, Gretel, and their little son, Bobby. A horseman tells Von Haagen of their departure for the Cape. Von Haagen, stunned, holds out his arms as if asking his daughter's forgiveness. He has a bag of gold for the little grandson, whom he has never seen. He tells Eitel that he will take a short cut and head them off.

Gretel puts Bobby to bed in the bottom of the wagon, taking down a leg of pork to make room for his cradle. Shortly after, the axle breaks and the wagon turns over. The journey is stopped. Ned unharnesses the horse and turns back, leaving Gretel and Bobby in the wagon. Von Haagen comes up to the wagon; Gretel is surprised to see him. He and Gretel walk down the road, so their talk will not disturb Bobby.

Bobby awakens and crawls from under the canvas of the tilted wagon; he is playing in the road, when a lion leaps into the wagon and seizes the leg of pork.

Gretel forgives her father, and they return to the wagon as Von Haagen is anxious to see Bobby. The lion springs from the wagon. Gretel and Von Haagen start on the lion's trail. Bobby comes upon a monkey, which he followed into the jungle.

Ned and his father arrive at the wagon with Charlie, the elephant; they call; Gretel hears them and answers. Ned leaves Gretel with his father, while he goes after the lion. Ned, finding no trace of the lion, returns to the wagon, and he and his father take Gretel home.

The elephant follows the trail of Bobby and the monkey. He finds them asleep in the jungle; he takes the cradle from the wagon and returns to the Townsend home, bringing the cradle into the room.

Von Haagen gives up his search and appears at the Townsend home. He looks through the window and sees Bobby asleep; entering, he takes the child in his arms. The family come in and find them there, and a reconciliation takes place.

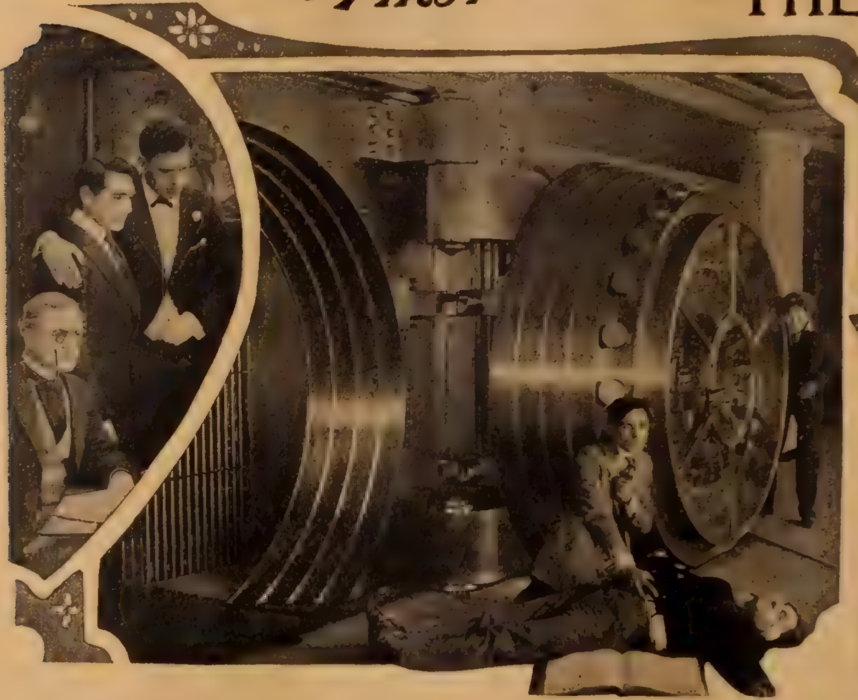
The First Episode of "The Gray Ghost"



"THE BANK MYSTERY" is the title of the first chapter of the new serial of the only Saturday Evening Post photo-serial ever filmed. Written by Arthur Somers Roche and adapted for the screen and produced by Stuart Paton.

THE starting of a new Universal serial is an event. The latest promises to beat the record of the enormously successful "Voice on the Wire," which has just reached a triumphant conclusion. "The Gray Ghost" is the first photo-serial ever made from a Saturday Evening Post story. It ran with great success in that publication under the name of "Loot," having been written by Arthur Somers Roche. Stuart Paton, who directed the "Voice" is producing this serial as well, and his stars are Priscilla Dean and Eddie Polo, with Harry Carter in the name part, and Emory Johnson as the young hero.

Mr. Carlow, a wealthy American living in London, is engaged to Lady Gwendolin, and has ordered from Arabin & Company, famous Fifth Avenue jewelers, a wonderful necklace worth two million dollars, to be made for her wedding present. She is very anxious to see it, and he determines to send the junior partner of his London solicitors, Wade Hildreth, to America to get the necklace. He will cable the young attorney's personal description to Arabin and give Hildreth his certified check for two million dollars. Wade makes ready to go with his secretary, Marco.

In New York is a master schemer and criminal known as The Gray Ghost. So perfect is his organization that he is never even suspected of the crimes and robberies which follow each other in quick succession. Only one member of the detective force really believes in his identity. This is Jerry Tyron. The Gray Ghost has his tools everywhere. He plans to intercept the message from Arabin, and succeeds in doing so. He prepares a reception for Hildreth, for he wishes to get the necklace and the check.

Banker Olmstead is at dinner with his wife and son, who is employed in the bank with him. His father is anxious that the books shall be in order, as the auditor is coming to examine them. He decides to go down to the bank. Young Olmstead is in the power of The Gray Ghost, to whom he has lost at cards. He goes to him to say that the game is up, and asks for mercy. Instead of helping him, the man plans to get him further into his power. Morn Light, a musical comedy star, whose connection with The Ghost is mysterious, arrives during their discussion. The Ghost asks her to retire, but she listens and watches. She sees The Ghost's men strike down Olmstead, and demands to know what is to be done with him. The Ghost tells her to mind her own business, and she is very angry. He sends her home.

Banker Olmstead has arrived at the bank and ordered the vault to be opened. The watchman is in the pay of The Ghost. Olmstead discovers his son's thefts from the bank and is in despair. Suddenly he is shot down. It is The Ghost's men who have been introduced into the vault by the watchman. The men appear, carrying the boy. They place a revolver in his hand, and leave him lying upon his father's body. He comes to, and the watchman tells him that he has shot his father and that the police are after him. He cannot believe it, but an officer rushes in and drags him out. In the car the officer changes his clothes to civilian attire, and when Olmstead demands to know what it means he is roughly silenced.

Keep the Movies

(No. 181. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THE entire Universal organization—and it is a big organization—is bending every bit of its tremendous energy toward an endeavor to KEEP BUSINESS HUMMING during the whole period of the war, just as our Government wants us to do in ALL lines of business.

To give exhibitors who are in the habit of closing down during the summer months every encouragement to STAY OPEN, we have picked from our huge reserve stock of negatives the very cream of the cream. We are going to release them in a steady stream all summer.

It would take many pages to give a FULL list of them here, so I am mentioning only a few on the opposite page. But I have mentioned enough to give you an idea of how determined we are to give you all the help that we know how.

Ruby Theater, Chelan, Wash., 6/6/17.

HOORAY!—HOORAY! for Carl Laemmle! How I wish I could grab your hand and slap you on the back for that Straight-from-the-Shoulder-Talk, No. 179—"Jackass Law."

Man alive! If you only knew how good that stuff listens to me! God! If those law-wrangling skunks could only get a taste of real tough trench life! Wouldn't they be tickled to death to hear some one sing the "STAR SPANGLED BANNER"? or whistle it, or hum it, or even play at it on a tin flute! I'd like to hear some mutt tell me not to play it!

F. J. POTTER, Mgr.

We are having three-sheet posters made up containing the list on the opposite page, so you can post them in your lobby and KEEP THEM THERE WEEK AFTER WEEK as a constant reminder to your patrons that you've got a wealth of stars and fine pictures to KEEP THEIR MINDS OFF OF THEIR TROUBLES during the summer months.

We are purposely having the posters printed in such a way that they will look like a HOME-MADE BULLETIN—a direct message FROM YOU to your patrons, rather than from the Universal company. They know YOU better than they know us, that's why.

No theatre on earth can show such a tremendous list of screen stars. The very number alone will make a tremendous impression and KEEP THE PEOPLE COMING DURING THE HOT WEATHER.

Get the posters from your nearest Universal exchange; make arrangements to get the films and then tell your patrons that you are going to give them special summer entertainment such as they have never had before.

Keep on advertising!

Keep things humming. Do your bit and make your hit. And KEEP THE MOVIES MOVING!

Above—Armstrong is apparently reinstated in society.

Below—The re-arrest of Armstrong.

BIG U Two-Reel Underworld and Society Drama. Written by Archer McMackin and produced by A. W. Rice. The story of a man's triumph over the stigma of a prison record.

CAST.

Armstrong	George Pearce
Ruth Armstrong	Gretchen Lederer
Allison	Charles Mailes
Mrs. Allison	Jessie Arnold
Reeves	Walter Belasco

THE struggle of a convict to make good after he has paid his debt to society by serving a prison term is graphically told in this Big U two-reel picture, written by Archer McMackin and produced by A. W. Rice. A strong cast of well-known players interprets the story.

Walter Armstrong has recently been released from prison and finds it impossible to secure work. As he renews his promise to his wife, that henceforth he will travel the straight road, no matter what happens, they are interrupted by a call from Chug, a former cellmate, who tries to influence Armstrong to join him again. Unable to persuade him, Chug angrily leaves, and Armstrong, discovering an advertisement for a bookkeeper, goes out again.

Armstrong frankly bares his past to Allison, the general manager, who harshly informs him he has nothing for him. At this moment Mrs. Allison happens to enter her husband's office, and pleads with him to give the young man a chance. Allison, however, is obdurate, and Armstrong leaves.

As he stands gazing idly about, Chug jumps from a moving limousine and, running past him, tosses a purse into his hand. A policeman is following on his trail. Armstrong, stupified for the moment, gazes wonderingly at the article, then quickly makes his escape.

Returning home, Armstrong is surprised to find Ruth in conversation with Mrs. Allison, but before he can explain matters, an officer enters and charges him with the theft. Mrs. Allison promises to befriend him, and through her husband's influence secures his release, also a position with Reeves & Company.

Some months elapse, and Armstrong is now chief clerk in the concern. Horace Reeves, president of the company, is greatly disturbed at learning that some one in his employ has been accepting freight rebates, and determines to discover and punish the culprit.

That night Allison phones Lee, the A. D. R. R. freight agent. Hurriedly departing for his office, he is soon in consultation with Lee and Chug, the expert forger, who signs Armstrong's name to a damaging letter. The following morning Armstrong is accused of the crime, and knowing Allison to be the guilty one, decides to suffer in his stead.

Jimmie, the wide-awake office boy, cleaning about Armstrong's desk, discovers some papers left by Chug, and observing Allison handing him some hush money, speedily goes to Reeves with his information. Both men are called to the office and questioned. Chug finally confesses his guilt and is taken into custody, while the president decides to give Armstrong Allison's position.

FIRE STARTS TOO SOON

QUICK thinking on the part of the director and quick action on the part of the cameraman saved a scene in the Butterfly Picture, "The Plow Woman," in which Mary MacLaren is featured, and saved at the same time a great many dollars for the Universal. The picture is an adaptation of the novel by Eleanor Gates, and the scene is laid in frontier days, during the Indian fighting. A saloon was to be burned to the ground as the result of a quarrel between the hero and some half-breeds. The wooden structure was built especially for the occasion, and soaked with kerosene, so that it should flare up quickly when the time came. The director was in the midst of a final rehearsal of the action, when some one noticed that the fire had not waited for the signal "Camera!" but had started on its own hook. In a few moments the oil-soaked walls were a blazing mass, while great clouds of smoke rolled over the scene, choking the actors, who began to rush away in all directions. Two cameras had been placed in position to film the incident, and the director, seizing his megaphone, yelled to the attendant genii to start grinding. Then he dashed into the smoke with his assistant to direct the very realistic flight of the company, and the result of the accident was a far better picture than had been planned in the first place.

The picture is full of picturesque and exciting incident. The period is the early '70's, and the quaint costumes of the women, the feathered dresses of the Indians, the uniforms of the soldiers, and the care which has been taken to keep the historical atmosphere correct, add much to its value.

"Fires of Rebellion" Filmed in Factory District

THE early scenes of the Bluebird Photoplay, "Fires of Rebellion," are laid in a factory town in New England, and in order to secure the proper atmosphere, Ida May Park, who wrote and produced the picture, took her company into the factory district of Los Angeles, where a lot of mob scenes were made. Dorothy Phillips is featured in the picture as a girl of the factory who rebels against the drab life of her mother and older sister, and seeks a way out in the city. The whole company, with the little star and the leading players, Lon Chaney and William Stowell, were taken to the scene of action in big automobiles, and the unloading of so many cars filled with players, the setting up of the two cameras, and the preparations for the filming of scenes, attracted a great deal of attention. In order to have a ready-made crowd, Miss Park had chosen the noon hour, and in a short time several hundred hands had gathered to watch the filming of the picture.

Miss Park addressed them, asking if they would mind working in the picture, and there was not one dissenting voice. She then explained what she wanted, and the cameras got into action. An exciting fight between Stowell, as the foreman, and Edward Brady, as a disaffected worker, was filmed in a ring formed by real factory hands, every one of whom proved himself a real actor. Miss Park was delighted with the results obtained, and thanked the crowds for their participation, which had lent great realism to her production. It is a foregone conclusion that when "Fires of Rebellion" is shown in that neighborhood, there will be record-breaking audiences in the theatre. The only trouble was, as the director declared, that she had probably kindled the fire of ambition to become screen stars in a number of young girls' hearts.

Scene from the coming Bluebird Photoplay, "Fires of Rebellion," with Dorothy Phillips.

ILLINOIS, NOT WISCONSIN.

IN the May 26th issue of the Moving Picture Weekly, the Bluebird Photoplay's advertisement of "Hell Morgan's Girl" contained a letter from the Madison Theatre. Unfortunately this theatre was set down in Madison, Wis., instead of Madison, Ill., as was the intention of the builders of the theatre, and Mr. Cote was doubtless the most surprised man in the world when he discovered that the moving Picture Weekly had without his consent transported this theatre bodily from the State of Illinois into Wisconsin. We hereby apologize for this error, and trust that neither State has been grievously offended.

We TRUST You, Mr. President!

Sub-Title.—"For us there is but one choice. We have made it. Woe be to the man or group of men that seeks to stand in our way in this day of high resolution, when every principle we hold dearest is to be vindicated and made secure for the salvation of the nations. We are ready to plead at the bar of history, and our flag shall wear a new lustre. Once more we shall make good with our lives and fortunes the great faith to which we were born, and a new glory shall shine in the face of our people." —WOODROW WILSON, FLAG DAY, 1917.

PREFERS MOVIES TO ICE-CREAM.

J. B. BUCHANAN, cameraman for the Animated Weekly in the Pittsburgh district, rushed up to Braddock, Pa., last week to take pictures of the flood which laid waste that city and a lot of the surrounding country.

He sent a boy to get him an ice-cream cone, at the same time giving him a nickel to get one for himself. When the lad returned he had only one cone and when questioned about his failure to provide for himself the boy stated he was going to save the nickel to see Ben Wilson in "The Voice On the Wire" at the Colonial that night. Buchanan told the story to Mr. Wilson in the Independent office and "Big Ben" was perceptibly pleased, for there is one thing he likes and that is to please the children.

Scene from the making of ice-cream in the Screen Magazine.

SCREEN MAGAZINE.

ISSUE No. 25.

THE cut is taken from the first subject of Issue No. 25 of the Universal Screen Magazine, and shows part of the process of the making of ice-cream. Inspectors detailed by the Department of Health, supervise the manufacture of the dainty, and rigidly examine every ingredient before it is placed in the freezers. In this picture the sugar is being weighed from the bins into a huge can. The bins which contain it are perfectly sanitary. The milk which is used is also subjected to tests for quality and purity. We see the inspector using a lactometer. All the utensils are sterilized in water heated to two hundred and fifty degrees. All the work of the Health Department is directed to the maintenance of a low count of bacteria in the manufacture of the product. A great battery of freezers turns the mixture of milk, eggs, sugar and flavoring into ice-cream. Even the ice is examined by the inspectors before it is mixed with salt in the proper freezing proportions.

The testing of corn used for planting as it is carried on at the New York College of Agriculture at Cornell University, is an interesting part of this issue. The ears are selected and put into marked racks. The seeds are allowed to germinate, and are carefully watched to see which show the most vigorous germination. Only the ears which show a strong and healthy tendency are selected for planting, and thus a loss of millions of bushels of corn every year is avoided by the use of tested seed grains.

How armor plate is made for our battleships is a subject of much interest at the present time. We see a big steel ingot being taken from the furnace, and a giant crane which carries it to the rolling table. A mechanical knife cuts through the armor and shapes it into a square. Another ingot is rolled into oblong shape. Finally we see the fitting of the plates to protect the vitals of the ship.

Hearing with the eyes is the title of the next subject which was taken in the Institution for the Improved Instruction of the Deaf in New York City. We see the children learning to read the lips, with teachers who are models of kindness and patience. Sounds of words are learned through the sense of touch, and also through the aid of a mirror. We see the class saluting the flag, and repeating together "I love the name of Washington." Even music can be enjoyed by the deaf through the proper cultivation of the sense of touch. At last we see a pupil singing "America."

The reel closes with an animated clay cartoon, called "The Spirit of '76 In Every One," modelled in clay by the Screen Magazine's sculptor, Willie Hopkins, a timely and patriotic subject done in this artist's unique manner, which illustrates the readiness of men, women and children to respond to the country's call as readily in 1917 as they did in 1776.

"A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA"

Three typical scenes from the beautiful Bluebird Photoplay "A Kentucky Cinderella."

HOPKINSON SMITH'S delightful story, "A Kentucky Cinderella," has been made into a delightful photoplay by Rupert Julian from a scenario prepared for him by E. J. Clawson. Ruth Clifford has the Cinderella role and is charming in it, while Julian plays the "fairy godfather" himself. There is a cast which includes many names which have been featured in previous Bluebird pictures, and the production abounds in beautiful exteriors. The period is just after the civil war, and the quaint dresses and details of house furnishing, all absolutely true to type, add not a little to the picturesqueness of the photoplay. Little Zoe Rae has a fascinating bit as a pickaninny, and makes the most of it in her inimitable fashion. Here is an outline of the story:

Winfield Gordon, nicknamed "Kentuck," and Toulumne John, partners in a placer claim, are big-hearted men of the out-of-doors. They are first seen enjoying hugely a race between a caterpillar and a lady-bug. Taking sides, they write I. O. U.'s for $15,000, to be paid the winner, placing the mythically valuable papers in their drinking cup, which hangs from a tree near their placer.

Nannie, Kentuck's pretty seventeen-year-old daughter, who keeps house for them, disregards the value of the two slips, using one of them to write a note, stating that supplies are getting low, which she leaves with their lunch.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY. Adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson from the novel of the same name by Hopkinson Smith and produced by Rupert Julian, with himself and Ruth Clifford in the leads.

Mrs. Gordon's imperious manner frightens Nannie.

While eating and laughing over their play, Toulumne discovers Ed and Sam De Long damming their ditch from the spring on which they depend. Ed leaves a note, claiming to have formally located the spring. In his anger Toulumne would destroy the dam, but dares not. At the cabin, the men look dangerous as they talk the occurrence over. Nannie is apprehensive. Toulumne takes Kentuck's gun and goes out. Kentuck tenderly tells Nannie that when he makes his strike she shall go back to her own people. She then calls his attention to Toulumne's sudden departure, and they follow him.

Toulumne goes to the saloon. At the bar, Toulumne looks straight at Ed's friend, says that in five minutes he, Toulumne, will walk down the street. This is a direct challenge. Nannie and Kentuck arrive on the street just as Ed De Long does. His brother, Sam, is in the window, and as Nannie stops beside the young man, Sam and Ed both fire at Kentuck, who falls. The young man shoots Sam, who pitches headfirst from the window, and Toulumne kills Ed. Nannie and Toulumne rush to Kentuck, who dies. Toulumne sends Nannie to Kentuck's brother, Henry Gordon, in Kentucky.

don's absence they treat Nannie as a servant, even having her meals served in the kitchen. But there the servants wait on her in state, to the extent of neglecting the occupants of the dining-room. In spite of Mrs. Gordon's treatment, Nannie's beauty grows.

Mrs. Gordon has decided that Rachel shall marry Mr. Tom Boling, the wealthiest young man there, and encourages him persistently. He finally determines to propose to Rachel. Just then, however, Zoe, one of the pickaninnies, tumbles from the tree over their heads, into the rain barrel, thoroughly drenching them, and fatally postponing his proposal. When he returns in dry clothing, Aunt Chlorinda being busy, Nannie answers the bell. It is a case of love at first sight.

Mrs. Gordon is furious, and orders Nannie from the house. She is taken to Miss Morgan's neighboring plantation. Boling's inquiries after her are evaded by Mrs. Gordon, and Aunt Chloe finally directs him to Miss Morgan's.

Mr. Gordon is furious upon his return to learn of the treatment Nannie has received. He goes to her and treats her as a father. Boling asks his permission to woo Nannie, and this being granted, he loses no time.

Nannie writes Toulumne she is lonesome, and he soon arrives, but his presence is kept a secret from Nannie. He thoroughly questions Boling as to his habits, eligibility, etc. The day before the wedding, Nannie is broken-hearted because she has no wedding clothes. Mrs. Gordon has spent the money for Rachel. Toulumne and Miss Morgan go to Lexington and as a result a large trunk of wonderful clothes arrives for Nannie. The wedding occurs, and Zoe excitedly points out Toulumne hiding in the trees. Nannie is happy to learn Toulumne has struck it rich. He and Miss Morgan stand together as Nannie and Boling drive off.

CONFLICT IS NOT TO AFFECT POSITIONS OF UNIVERSALITES.

EMPLOYEES of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company who respond to the call to the colors will not lose their positions. On the contrary, their places at Universal City will be held open for them during the time they are in the service of the government and upon their return from duty under the Stars and Stripes they will find their former positions ready for them. This welcome news was made known at the film capital recently in an announcement by the company, which was as follows:

"All employees of the Universal Film Company who enlist in any branch of the U. S. Army or Navy during the present war crisis will have their positions held for them until mustered out of the service."

Patriotism is rampant at Universal City, and many of the employees are looking forward to active service. In addition to the men who already have enlisted in the Army and Navy, a number belong to the National Guard, others are members of the Coast Artillery and there are also some members of the naval militia.

Universal Takes $250,000 Liberty Bonds

NOT that the Universal wishes to make a parade of its patriotism, for that is furthest from its thoughts; but rather in order that the world may know where the Universal Film Manufacturing Company stands when it comes to a call to support the United States in anything that it undertakes, this story is written. The Universal, as soon as it became apparent that the country was being forced into war with a foreign government, was the first to take effective action to rouse the country in its duty to support the president. Ever since then nothing has been too much trouble or too much expense for the Universal and its employees in supporting the government and its aims in every possible manner. The entire resources of the Universal were contributed by the Board of Directors to the government the day after war was acknowledged, and in a telegram to the President it expressed the willingness both to do everything and refrain from doing everything which the President suggested in furtherance of the good of our country.

The latest call has been for the Liberty Loan investment, and the Board of Directors made it very plain to their employees that this was not a donation in any sense of the word, but that it meant nothing more or less than putting their money in the most secure and profitable bank in the world—Uncle Sam's treasury. In order to make it easy for their employees to invest as they would like, the Universal agreed to accept installment payments from all of its employees, taking out the amount they desired each week from their salary envelopes.

On Friday morning, the last day of the subscription, R. H. Cochrane, Vice-president of the Universal, and P. A. Powers, Treasurer, summoned the members of the Home Office staff and told them that the subscription of the Universal and its employees to the Liberty Loan bonds lacked just exactly five thousand dollars of being a quarter of a million. Furthermore, they said that they wanted to raise that five thousand dollars right then and there in that room, and inside of twelve minutes the last hundred dollars of the five thousand was subscribed, and the office force went back to its accustomed duties. That is the way the Universal does things when the need arises. When the next issue, the Old Glory loan, is launched, the Universal will be found in the front ranks again with the same kind of loyal support.

The Roll of Honor on the Liberty Loan is as follows: The Universal as a company subscribed to $128,000 of the bonds, and this does not include the subscriptions that Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Powers made outside through other organizations than the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The Home Office employees took $49,450; the Universal City studios at Universal City, California, took $35,100; Animated Weekly, $2,000; Shipping Department, $350; Bayonne factory, $500; L-Ko Kompany, $7,450; Leonia Laboratories, $7,200; New York Exchanges together, $5,000; Independent Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, $1,100; Victor Film Service, Cleveland, $1,100; Laemmle Film Service, Omaha, Nebr., $800; Cincinnati-Buckeye Film Co., $350; Universal Film & Supply Company, St. Louis, Mo., $250; Consolidated Film & Supply Company, New Orleans, $600; Laemmle Film Service, Chicago, $1,200; Universal Film Exchange, Chicago, $1,200; Laemmle Film Service, Des Moines, Ia., $1,150; Detroit Universal Film Co., Detroit, Mich., $650; Universal Film & Supply Company, Oklahoma City, Okla., $900; Universal Film & Supply Company, Kansas City, Mo., $750; Universal Film & Supply Co., Denver, Colo., $500; New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston, Mass., $1,650; Central Film Service, Indianapolis, Ind., $1,050; Film Supply Company, Portland, Ore., $550; California Film Exchange, San Francisco, Cal., $1,050; Baltimore Film Exchange, Baltimore, Md., $550.

Any mathematician who will take the trouble to add up these figures will discover that they total exactly $250,000, or a quarter of a million dollars, whichever way that amount of money looks best to him.

CARL LAEMMLE ENTERTAINS UNIVERSAL CITY

(By Telegraph to The Moving Picture Weekly.)

CELEBRATED his departure by giving ball on stage at picture capital to 3,000 people—Mrs. Laemmle assists him in receiving Universal, Bluebird and other stars and well known citizens of Los Angeles.

UNIVERSAL CITY, Cal., June 14 (Special).—The most notable entertainment ever held at a motion picture studio was given last night by President Laemmle, the head of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, on the occasion of his leaving Universal City for New York. No less than 3,000 guests accepted the hospitality of the Big U chief, including the entire population of the picture capital, players from other studios, and well-known citizens from Los Angeles.

The mammoth north stage was converted into a beautiful ballroom, lavishly decorated, and hung with lights, while an orchestra provided music for the dancing, which was kept up until the small hours. The Grand March was led by the President and Mrs. Laemmle, and at midnight a buffet supper was served to the immense gathering. The guests voted the Good Fellowship dance the most successful affair ever given at the Coast, and gratitude to the president was expressed on all sides.

This afternoon the Universalites, at least, had a chance to express their feeling for their chief. The hour of Mr. Laemmle's departure from the picture city was announced, and work stopped all over the huge plant, as if at a signal. The entire force gathered at the main entrance to bid him good-by, and as his automobile started off for the Santa Fe train, the crowd broke into tumultuous cheering, which must have been heard a mile away. Universal City is accustomed to important arrivals and departures, but no such scene has ever before been witnessed there, and the best of it was that the demonstration was entirely sincere.

Mr. Laemmle has put in a busy time at the plant, of which he has been the active head since his arrival from New York. In addition to the arduous duties of this position, with its thousand and one claims upon every hour of his time, he has had to receive and entertain some of the most important visitors to Universal City. Famous people come from all over the world to see how motion pictures are made at the big plant, and as many as possible are personally conducted over the "big lot" by the president himself. Madame Schumann-Heink is an old friend of Mr. Laemmle's, and recently paid one of her periodic visits to the film capital, in the company of Miss Ruth Chatterton, star of the successful play, "Come Out of the Kitchen," which was enjoying a run at Los Angeles. More than twenty companies were working on the stages and on location on that day, and Mr. Laemmle had a busy afternoon trying to show his guests everything that was going on.

"This is your busy day," said the great singer to her old friend.

"All days are alike to me," he answered, "and to the rest of us, for that matter, for we must make hay while the sun shines, you know."

Madame would not be photographed in the lion's cage this time, as she explained that after her recent accident in which three ribs were broken, she was not sure that she had regained her nerve sufficiently, but she did pose with a lion cub, three months old.

A few days later, Mr. Laemmle received a royal prince, who arrived at the picture city with entire absence of ostentation, and without a single servant in attendance. This was Deva Ram Sokul, Maharaj of Darjeeling, to give him his full title, and he is the ruler of a principality in the Himalayas, which is absolutely independent of British rule. The prince, who is twenty-six years old, has been educated in Europe and speaks several languages, including English. Mr. Laemmle welcomed the prince and then literally presented him with the key to the plant. A thorough inspection followed, and upon leaving, the prince said that nothing in his many trips to the United States had given him more pleasure than this visit.

Universal pictures, especially Universal serials, are very popular in Japan, and quite frequently travelers from the Flowery Kingdom are included among visitors to the place where Universal picture are made. Recently Mr. Laemmle entertained Admiral Iwamura and his staff while the Japanese warships were at Los Angeles.

Neal Hart and Janet Eastman in "SWEDE HEARTS"

Frieda and Ole.

Ole finds his sweetheart again.

PATHOS and comedy are blended with drama to make a very unusual Victor release. George Marshall, the producer, wrote his own story, which was then put into scenario form for him by C. J. Wilson, Jr., of the staff. Neal Hart and Janet Eastman have the appealing roles of Swedish lovers, who are ruthlessly separated by their parents. Neal goes to America, where some time later Janet follows. Joe Rickson is in the—to him—entirely congenial role of villain, and pure comedy is interspersed with the working out of dramatic situations in a way which will keep the audience in a high state of expectancy.

In Sweden, Ole Olson loves Frieda Nilssen, but owing to the quarrel between his father, Johannes, and her father, Verner, the two are kept apart. Ole finally decides to leave for America.

Verner writes to New York to Gustaf Frese, who is swindling the immigrants, reminding him of his father's wish that he should marry Frieda, and stating that she will bring a good-sized dowry. Gus consults with his accomplice, Dick, and decides to have her come over and marry her, as they need a woman in their game.

Ole goes to Gus to get a job, and secures one in the small apartment hotel where Gus resides.

Frieda is about to leave for America with her father, when she receives a letter from Ole. She sneaks away to read it, but is discovered by Verner, who snatches it from her. He indignantly takes it to Johannes, and orders him to tell Ole to stop writing to Frieda. Johannes flies into a fit.

In the dual role of porter and bellhop, Ole has many experiences between Liza, the old man, Sam, who has a continual jag on, and the newly weds who want him to play butler for their party.

Ole receives a letter stating that Frieda has left for America, and runs into the street searching for her and questioning the people as to whether they have seen his Frieda.

In fact, Frieda has already arrived, and Gus has engaged an apartment for her in the same house where Ole is porter, but he is not aware of the fact. She is to be married the following day to Gus.

The next day Ole is informed that his father has died, and he is handed quite a lot of money which has been left him. He hastens back to the apartment. To get even, he purchases the house and chases all the tenants out. Finally bursting into the apartment where Frieda is being married to Gus, he stops the ceremony, chases them all out, and when he and Frieda are alone, renews their interrupted romance.

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Western Drama. Written by T. Shelley Sutton. Scenario by George Hively. Produced by Fred A. Kelsey. The tale of the theft and recovery of a strange-shaped nugget.

HARRY CAREY is Universal's best bet in Western pictures, and this Gold Seal, written by T. Shelley Sutton, adapted for the screen by George Hively and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, is an unusually good one. The plot centres about a strangely-shaped nugget, exactly like a golden bullet. This is coveted by the badman, who finally gets it—shot into his heart.

Dad and Jack are working on their placer mine in the mountains, when Dick Henderson calls on them one morning on his way back to Crazy Creek, after a marauding expedition. Dick goes on to Crazy Creek, where he meets the sheriff and his daughter, old friends of his. The sheriff shows him a letter from the sheriff of the adjoining county, offering a reward of $1,000 for "Rogue River" Charley, Dick's alias. Dick, feeling safe in his friendship with the sheriff, offers to assist him in capturing the bandit.

"Red" Johnson, a 'bum, is thrown out of the saloon, drunk. The cowboys, to sober him up, place him on a bucking horse. The horse carries Red out of town. The cowboys find the joke is on the owner of the horse. Dick happens along and offers to go and bring Red back. Red, in the meantime, has gained control of the horse and, seeing his opportunity, decides to get away with it. He tries to sell it to Jack and Dad, but they do not want it.

Dick, following Red, comes upon Jack and Dad. He sarcastically tells them that it isn't much wonder that they couldn't buy the horse, as they could never make enough out of their mine to buy one. Dad resents this reflection on his mining qualities and, to prove his judgment, shows Dick their savings of nuggets.

Dick finds Red and tells him of the gold. They plan to rob Dad and Jack.

That night, Red and Dick rob Dad and Jack. Jack hears the noise, and is shot by Dick. The robbers escape. Jack goes to town to have his wound dressed and to find the robbers. He becomes exhausted and falls from his horse after arriving in town. The sheriff and Mattie find him and take him to their home, where she cares for him. In the meantime, Dick has tried to get the sheriff to arrest Jack, as he fits the description of "Rogue River" Charley. The sheriff decides to go to the other county and get the sheriff to come over and identify Jack.

Jack recovers and meets Dick, demanding the return of the nuggets. Previously, Mattie has shown him a peculiar bullet-shaped nugget, which was formerly with their savings, telling him that Dick had given it to her. Dick tries to argue with Jack, but is forced to return the nuggets. Jack notes the missing nugget and gives Dick until a certain time to return it. Dick goes to the sheriff's home, steals the nuggets from Mattie's room and leaves evidence incriminating Jack. He then schemes with Red to have Jack accused of the robbery.

Red inflames the cowboys against Jack, while Dick is telling the girl about it. Mattie discovers her loss and thinks Jack is guilty. Jack goes to his cabin. Dick and the cowboys pursue Jack to his cabin, where a fight starts. In the meantime, the two sheriffs show up at Crazy Creek, learn of the trouble and also go to the cabin, where they arrive at the right time to prevent serious trouble. Jack is exonerated and Dick is pointed out as the real "Rogue River" Charley and is arrested.

Ben Wilson on Tour

Ben Wilson who is touring the country before starting another serial.

HAVING completed the last episode of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," one of the most successful continued photoplays which the Universal Film Company ever issued, Ben Wilson, star of the serial, came East, and undertook a tour of the theatres where the "Voice" was running. Wilson starred in the picture, and assisted in directing the last few chapters, while Stuart Paton was engaged in filming the coming serial, "The Gray Ghost."

Wilson visited the Marcus Loew theatres which are running "The Voice on the Wire," and then the Philadelphia territory, where more than eighty theatres asked for appearances from the popular actor. He was received everywhere with the greatest enthusiasm, packed houses, and crowds turned away being his record in all the theatres in which he spoke. He made speeches in half of the twenty-nine New York theatres which are showing the serial, and in every one of them the doors had to be locked to prevent a riot.

"No," he said when asked about his preparation for the appearances, "I do not write speeches and learn them by heart beforehand. Every audience is different, and from every one I get a different response across the space between us. I adapt what I am going to say to that feeling. I cannot say that I had a reputation as a speaker rivaling that of Chauncey Depew, when I started this tour, but I had plenty of stage experience to help me. Of course that is not the same thing, as you have the protection of the character between yourself and the audience in a stage role. Still, it accustoms you to the feeling of having the flesh and blood creatures before you, who are looking at you and waiting to hear your voice. I do not agree that there is any proportion of the picture public which does not like serials. I think their universal popularity in the best magazines is proof of their universal appeal. All the reading world, and all the play-going world loves mystery, strong emotion, love, hate, and even crime in their books and plays—why should the movie public be any exception?"

Ben Wilson will return to Universal City about August 1st, after a flying tour of the country, to begin work on the leading role of another serial production, the scenario of which is being prepared for him during his absence from the picture city.

This serial will be directed by Stuart Paton, and Ben Wilson finds that the audiences have so O. K.'d the cast in "The Voice on the Wire" that they demand the same cast for the next Paton-Wilson serial. Mr. Wilson has just signed another contract with the Universal, which insures a continuance of his fine work for some time to come. He received flattering offers from other companies, desirous of obtaining Wilson's highly prized services, during his recent visit to New York, but decided to remain in the congenial Universal surroundings, where he has made his screen reputation. Wilson declares that serial-making is the most fascinating sport in the world, and that he is delighted to be going back to Universal City to produce another as great success as "The Voice on the Wire," which is at the present time filling picture theatres to capacity all over the country.

High Spots in

Two scenes from "Five Little Widows."

THE week of July 2d is Fourth of July week, and it is no more than right and proper that the Universal program should have a patriotic three-reel Gold Seal feature. In "A Young Patriot," which features Mignon Anderson, Edwin Brown, Roy Stewart, Charles Mailes and Elwood Bridell, we have a military drama written by William Piggott and produced by Louis Chaudet, which fills the bill exactly. This gives the week a patriotic flavor. Every kid and grown-up will leave the theatre feeling that Young America is perfectly safe in such hands. The L-Ko feature for the week, "Bombs and Bandits" deals with an invasion of Mexico by the automobile railroad and airplane police. There is an unusual two-reel comedy entitled "Five Little Widows," featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, in which, if you don't know it, expert advice is given on what a young American engaged to a pretty girl should do, if his uncle in Turkey should die, and leave to him his harem of five beautiful Turkish trophies. Violet Tours South

FOR three years—in fact, ever since she became a screen actress—Violet Mersereau refused to appear in person in connection with her pictures, and it was only the efforts of N. T. Granlund, the energetic personal appearance promoter, and the publicity man for the Marcus Loew circuit of theatres, aided and personally abetted by Marcus Loew himself that induced Miss Mersereau to make her first public appearance. This took place at the Broadway Theatre, Brooklyn, and was duly chronicled in the Moving Picture Weekly and in the daily and trade press. The first appearance was followed by appearances at the other Marcus Loew theatres in and about Greater New York. So tremendous was the reception she received, the expressions of interest in what she really looked like, and how she talked, that instead of a dread, the appearances became a real pleasure. From a constant condition of a dread of not knowing what to say, Miss Mersereau became one of the most accomplished impromptu speakers in the ranks of the motion picture stars.

After this experience Granlund could not rest easy in his job until he had secured Miss Mersereau's consent to tour the Southern circuit of Marcus Loew theatres. Finally she promised that she would do so when her latest picture, "The Little Terror," which by the way, is set on the Bluebird schedule for release on July 23d, was completed. This happened last Tuesday, and Wednesday she took the train for Baltimore, where she led a grand march, was the principal attraction at an exhibitors' convention, appeared at the Marcus Loew theatres, received the homage due a picture star from Baltimore, the city of beautiful women, and went on her way to Atlanta, Birmingham, and other cities in which Marcus Loew has theatrical holdings.

Mr. Loew spent a lot of real money in advertising Miss Mersereau, but Mr. Loew knows the moving picture game, and Miss Mersereau's appearance in each of these cities has given him a chance to buy a few more Liberty Bonds.

Next Week's Program

Man," in which he is supported by Fritzi Ridgeway, is an exceptionally good two-reel Western drama. There are also several single reelers quite out of the ordinary. One is Ruth Stonehouse in "Daredevil Dan," a Victor comedy-drama, in which Ruth has her fill of being a "tough guy." Another is the Nestor comedy featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, entitled "Poor Peter Pious," and the third is Molly Malone and Lee Hill in "The Girl in the Limousine," an Imp mystery drama which has everything that a single-reel drama should have. Then there are the usual news weeklies, the Animated Weekly, the Universal Current Events and Screen Magazine No. 26. The Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," has reached the 2d episode.

COST TO DOROTHY PHILLIPS FOR FILM GOWNS IS HEAVY.

THE higher a screen actress becomes in her profession the greater are the demands upon her income to properly dress the parts in which she is featured, and such is the case with Dorothy Phillips, Bluebird star, who is willing to testify that a large portion of her salary is expended for gowns and costumes. In the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Rescue," recently filmed by Ida May Park and featuring Miss Phillips with Lon Chaney and William H. Stowell, the actress wore eighteen different gowns, each being new and purchased solely for use in the photoplay. In her current picture, "Triumph," directed by Joseph De Grasse, Miss Phillips has twelve changes, each one different from anything she has worn before.

Miss Phillips designs all of her own clothes, and they are made for her in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles; in fact, she says she orders her gowns from a tailor or dressmaker particularly suited to the design she has in mind. Miss Phillips has made a very careful study of the art of dress and she knows better than any one else what harmonizes best with her personal attractiveness, and furthermore what is equally as well suited to the photoplay in which she is to appear.

The gown of a star never can be worn in two different pictures, which serves to increase the encroachment upon her bank account. Big of heart and generous to a fault, Miss Phillips usually gives her gowns away to actresses who cannot afford such luxuries and says in this way she feels fully recompensed for the expenditures.

Stuart Paton in an off moment.

IT is generally acknowledged in filmdom that the production of a serial photoplay is about the most wearing and exhausting thing that a company of picture players can be called upon to put through. And if the experience is trying for the performers, how much more so for the director, who has to keep the whole thing in the hollow of his hand, never losing his perspective, never allowing the detail to confuse the main plot of the story. To be a successful serial director requires almost superhuman qualities. Above all, it requires a limitless supply of patience. Yet Stuart Paton had no sooner completed "The Voice on the Wire" (one of the most successful of all Universal serials, by the way) than he declared himself ready to begin the production of "The Gray Ghost," its worthy successor. He set to work at once, without even a day's breathing space, on the scenario, which he made from the original story which ran in the Saturday Evening Post, and was written by Arthur Somers Roche, upon whom the mantle of Conan Doyle, as a teller of detective mysteries, seems to have fallen.

Paton has made his name widely known by his successful work as plays for Universal. It was he wh

Paton is popular with his players, and that is probably one reason why he has proved himself such a success as a serial director. Probably no director in the business has a more original method of getting tears from his players, when the script calls for them, than this Scotchman. Picture directors have been accused, before now, of deliberate brutality of speech toward their unfortunate companies in order to produce the desired emotional effect. But Paton's method is the direct opposite of this. He makes his players laugh till they cry. Having been blessed with the same heaven-given faculty of inducing laughter as his fellow countryman, Harry Lauder, Paton makes the most of it in his picture work. When he wants the members of his company to produce signs of woe, he begins to tell them funny stories, and he never stops until they are all dissolved in tears of mirth. This method is to be recommended to all motion picture producers; but the only trouble is

PUTTING IT OVER

"THE PLOW WOMAN."

A STORY of a girl of pioneer days in the West, who sacrifices all that others may be happy. She is a type of woman who worked in the fields with men. She is a "PLOW WOMAN," so secure a sulky plow if possible and have a young lady, dressed simply as in pioneer days, drive it about the streets of your town.

On either side of the horses have a banner, reading:

I AM
"THE PLOW WOMAN"
I SACRIFICED ALL
TO BRING HAPPINESS TO THOSE I LOVED.
SEE ME AT THE
(NAME) THEATRE
(DAY AND DATE)

On the rear of the plow have a sign reading:

I BRING BACK THE DAYS
WHEN THE WEST WAS YOUNG—I AM
"THE PLOW WOMAN"
WHO MADE FERTILE FIELDS OF BARREN PRAIRIES
(NAME) THEATRE
(DAY AND DATE)

In your theatre pass out cards as follows.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

FOR "A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA"

AMONG the leading characters of "A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA" are NANNIE GORDON who is "CINDERELLA," and "TOULUMNE" JOHN SILVERWOOD. The story is one of those good old SWEET stories that reach right out and tickle the heart strings of the spectator. A good attention-attracting plan would be to have a character dress as TOULUMNE JOHN, a Californian of the earlier days, with a broad black hat, the long frock coat and boots. Put him on the principal street of your city, down on his hands and knees on the sidewalk, urging a caterpillar on the walk before him to greater speed. He is to assume a preoccupied air and evidently unconscious of the crowd he is attracting. When a crowd has collected, have him look up in surprise and hand out cards, printed as follows:

"IT KAIN'T BE SAID THAT TOULUMNE JOHN EVAH WENT BACK ON HOSS OR MAN AN' AH'LL BACK THAT LI'L CATERPILLAR TO THE LIMIT.

"KENTUCKY CINDERELLA" SAYS THEM'S HER SENTIMENTS, TOO, AN' YOU CAN SEE IF WE'RE RIGHT AT THE (Name) .... THEATRE ON .... (Date) ....

Get a girl about fifteen years old, dress her in knee-length ginghams, bare-footed, with a sun bonnet swinging on her arm, and have her pass out cards reading:

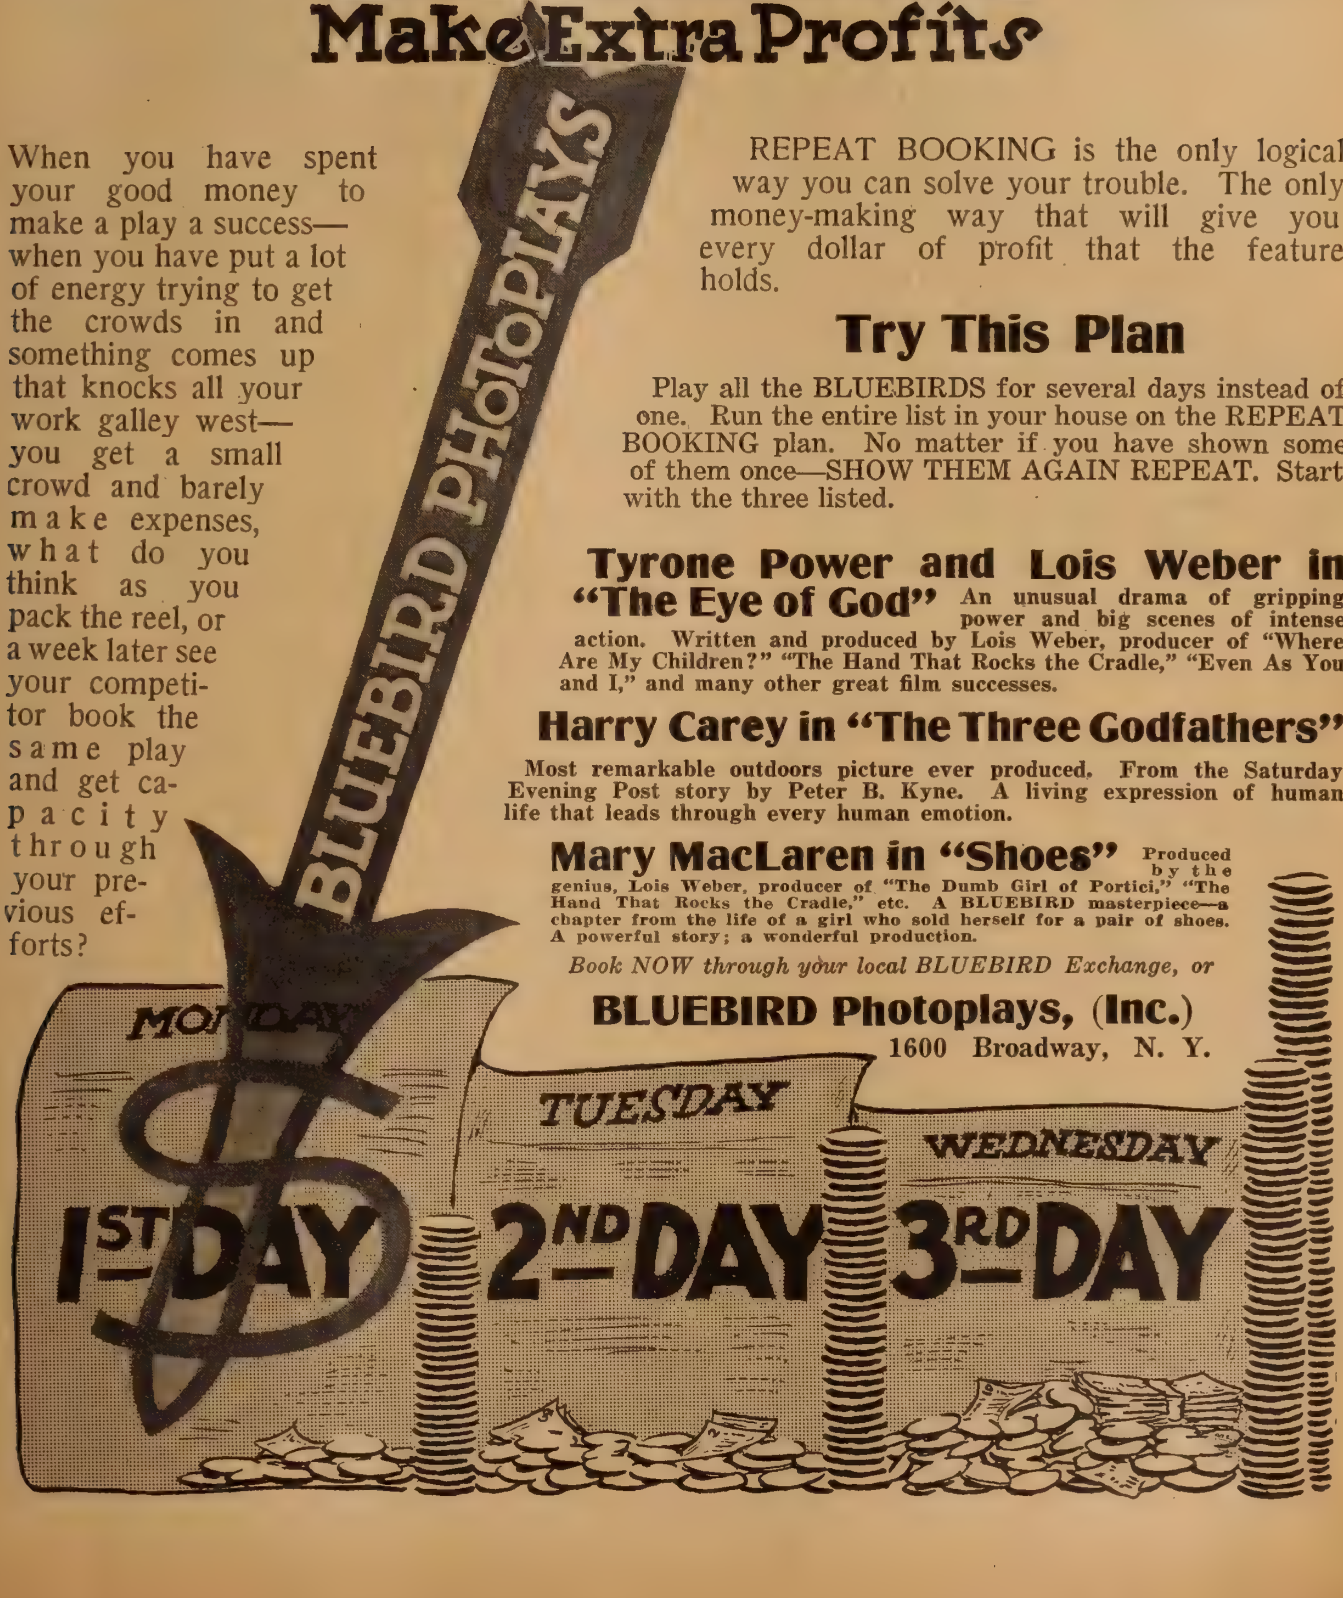
I HAD TO GO ALL THE WAY FROM CALIFORNIA TO KENTUCKY TO FIND HAPPINESS. THEY CALL ME "A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA" AND YOU CAN SEE ALL THE HAPPINESS I FOUND, AT THE (Name) .... THEATRE ON........ ....(Date)...........

A little colored girl, about eight years old, to accompany CINDERELLA would greatly add to the interest of the ballyhoo.

Have your nearest book-seller set up a window display of F. Hopkinson Smith's Book, "A KENTUCKY CINDERELLA" and have him place a card in a conspicuous spot telling the public that this story is to be shown at your theatre, giving the date. As a return courtesy use a slide for the dealer, telling your audience that the story may be purchased at his store. Explain to them that this is an extraordinarily beautiful story, splendidly told.

REPEAT BOOKINGS

Make Extra Profits



When you have spent your good money to make a play a success—when you have put a lot of energy trying to get the crowds in and something comes up that knocks all your work galley west—you get a small crowd and barely make expenses, what do you think as you pack the reel, or a week later see your competitor book the same play and get capacity through your previous efforts?

REPEAT BOOKING is the only logical way you can solve your trouble. The only money-making way that will give you every dollar of profit that the feature holds.

Try This Plan

Play all the BLUEBIRDS for several days instead of one. Run the entire list in your house on the REPEAT BOOKING plan. No matter if you have shown some of them once—SHOW THEM AGAIN REPEAT. Start with the three listed.

Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God" An unusual drama of gripping power and big scenes of intense action. Written and produced by Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "Even As You and I," and many other great film successes.

Harry Carey in "The Three Godfathers"

Most remarkable outdoors picture ever produced. From the Saturday Evening Post story by Peter B. Kyne. A living expression of human life that leads through every human emotion.

Mary MacLaren in "Shoes" Produced by the genius, Lois Weber, producer of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," etc. A BLUEBIRD masterpiece—a chapter from the life of a girl who sold herself for a pair of shoes. A powerful story; a wonderful production.

"HER DARING, CARING WAYS" L-Ko Komedy

L—KO Two-Reel Komedy. Directed by Vin Moore, under supervision of J. G. Blystone, with Merta Sterling and Lucille Hutton featured in a mad burlesque of the woolly Western draymer.

Little Mert	Merta Sterling
Her Lover, Al	Al Forbes
Lucille, Ranch Owner	Lucille Hutton
Mr. Mule	The Donkey

Little Mert is the pride of the rancho.

LUCILLE HUTTON and Merta Sterling carry off the honors of this L-Ko, which was directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone. It is a screaming burlesque of the typical Western, of the old-school, with a jumble of the well-known types of that perennial form of entertainment that would make a cat laugh. Things happen something like this when they get started:

Lucille is the owner of the ranch, but Little Mert is its pride. She is loved passionately by Handsome Al. She goes fishing and he is caught by her hook and they ride home together. Chili Ted and Con Carne are two desperate ruffians who are scheming to get Lucille into their power. But her own men have sworn to protect her. When the two ruffians attack her, she is saved by Mert and Al.

Mert brings a cake and puts it on the table. Al steals some of it and she scolds. She goes away and leaves it, but the donkey puts its head in and eats the whole cake. Mert begins to shoot and Al runs. Chili Ted returns and demands either Lucille or the mortgage. Al has tried to make up with Mert. He is teasing her, when a bear appears, and he runs and climbs a tree. She thinks the bear is Al, and says "Oh, you are so persistent!" When she sees the bear she beats it for the ranch. Al has arrived before her, and Lucille sends him to the bank to get the money to pay off the mortgage. Chili and Con see him go and chase him. He reaches the bank in safety and rides the donkey to the pay window. On the way back the ruffians waylay him and hang him to a tree. Mert sees him just in time and shoots the rope in two. They both mount the donkey to ride to the ranch to warn Lucille. When they tell her, she faints. Al runs for water to the well and falls in. Mert goes to save him and falls in, too. They cling to the ropes and as one comes up the other goes down.

Chili and Con appear and drop the money down the well. Then they grab Lucille. Mert comes up from the bottom of the well with the money and gives it to Chili. But they tie her up and carry off both the gold and the girl. The donkey bites the ropes and sets Mert free. She pulls Al out of the well and gets the boys. They chase the villains who cross the bridge and blow it up. The trusty boys make a bridge of their bodies over which Mert and Al rush to rescue Lucille.

Then they go to a dance in town to celebrate. Al is jealous of Mert. In the midst of the affair Chili and Con arrive and hold up the crowd, escaping with the girl. They board a train. Mert and the boys give chase in a car. She jumps on the last car and the villains uncouple it. She then ropes Chili and the boys finish him.

13 HUNG ON A PEGG.

THIRTEEN was the number given to Vesta Pegg, one of the Universal Company's cowpunchers, when he appeared to register for the selective draft on June 5. Pegg, who was appearing with Harry Carey in a Bison film called "The Wrong Man," hesitated a moment when he saw the number on his card, but smiled and proceeded with the registration and in a short time he was signed up for military duty.

Others in the polling place looked askance at Pegg for his temerity in taking thirteen, several of them frankly stating that nothing on earth could induce them to accept the ever-unwelcome number, but Pegg laughed at them with the remark, "Yes, and every one of you fellows would take thirteen dollars for twelve dollars if you only had the chance."

J. CHURCH, manager of the Plaza Theatre in Detroit, has taken advantage of the scarcity of vegetables to have a potato matinee. But he went one further. Mrs. Church, not having immediate use for the several barrels of potatoes which came in at the Mary Pickford matinee, Mr. Church sold the potatoes at twenty-five cents a peck on his Bluebird night, which was the biggest night in the history of the theatre. He advertised the potato sale in connection with the picture.

The BIG 4 PREPAREDNESS PICTURES That Get the MONEY

The newspapers are printing page after page of war news—the pictorial sections are full of illustrations showing how America is rapidly preparing. All this is FREE PUBLICITY for every Exhibitor showing BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS.

Never before in your history as a showman have you had the wonderful chance to play capacity at every performance, that you now have with the four BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS. Each of these gripping stories holds the fans in enthralled silence — compels their intense interest from the opening to the closing flicker. Book them through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange—or direct—advertise them and they will arouse a greater interest in your theater than has ever been shown.

"The Eagle's Wings" This play has received the endorsement of highest officials in Washington. It has also received a pledge of support from the D. A. R., through their National president. It is far above any silly, weak sham battle, studio "war" picture.

Rupert Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict in "WE ARE FRENCH." A five-reel Bluebird story that sways the patriotic emotions of the audience and thrills them with a force that they seldom feel.

Harry Carey and Edith Johnson in "BEHIND THE LINES," a compelling and timely picture that faithfully reproduces the actual conditions along the Mexican Border. It abounds with intrigue, love and adventure. It entrances and excites the emotions through its realistic atmosphere.

Allen Holubar in "TREASON," with Lois Wilson and Joseph Girard. These three lend their inexhaustible energies to get this true lesson in patriotism over. And they do get it over with a strength and pep that is seldom shown. Its intense scenes and convincing pictures of modern warfare excite the emotions of movie fans to their very depths.

STUART PATON, DIRECTOR.

that raconteurs who can make their audiences laugh till they cry, are as rare as the dodo. Like so many who possess the gift of amusing others, Paton is himself a serious person. His favorite roles are tragic ones, and his favorite book is the rather ponderous "Life of Johnson," by the immortal Boswell.

The opposition of his family, which is a very old and respected one in the Scotch capital, kept him from taking his own name when he went on the stage, and Stuart is the only part of it to which he is really entitled. That may give the inquisitive reader some line upon this noted Universal director's real lineage and ancestors.

Paton's fame in England rests principally upon his work in the roles made famous by Sir Henry Irving, and so successful was he at imitating this wonderful tragedian both in resemblance and manner that he shocked a number of his intimate friends on several occasions by pretending that he was Sir Henry in the flesh again. Paton's faculty of mimicry caused his thoughts to turn to the stage first. He discovered this faculty when he was less than twelve years old, and cultivated it in private, and at the expense of a number of members of his own household, until he was sixteen, when he made a few club appearances. This gave him such confidence in himself that the allurements of chemistry, law, and the church, toward which his family directed his thoughts, had no weight with him.

When he came to this country, Paton discovered that America was far different in its idea of idol-worshipping from England, that Sir Henry Irving meant very little as a remunerative institution, and that vaudeville cared nothing. In desperation the Sir Henry Irving disciple applied to the despised movies for almost anything they had to offer, and after the director at the Imp studio had removed all trace of Sir Henry Irving from Paton's face, he put him to work. Paton's boundless ambition, however, would not be satisfied with acting. He was soon writing scenarios and acting as assistant director, and in the first year of his work at the Imp studio he wrote and assisted in directing twenty-two two, three and four-reel pictures. This record gained him a full-fledged directorship, and the thanks of Mr. Laemmle into the bargain. Since that time his record is known to every film fan in the United States, and the fact that he has just signed a two years' contract with the Universal is the best evidence of their opinion of Stuart Paton.

The picture on page 24 shows Paton at work on a script, wearing the brown glasses which in the full length picture he has taken off for our benefit. At his right is Gene Gaudio, the cameraman he has had ever since he started "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," and for a year before that. Mike Murphy, assistant director, who is at his left, has served Paton in this capacity also for nearly three years. They have done their share toward making the films that Paton has turned out the great success that they have been.

CHIEF JOHNSON DRILLS UNIVERSAL POLICE.

C. L. JOHNSON, Chief of Police at Universal City, and who was a member of the police force at Los Angeles for many years, is busily engaged daily at the motion picture institution drilling his officers so that they will be prepared for any emergency that may arise. The men have been equipped with rifles, and under the direction of Chief Johnson are becoming thoroughly adept in their use.

The head of Universal City's police force only recently returned to the plant after an absence of several months due to a broken ankle. During the first week after his return the Chief moved about on crutches while he was putting his men through the military maneuvers. Chief Johnson is the proud possessor of a heavily mounted solid gold police star studded with diamonds, which was presented to him upon his retirement from the Los Angeles police force several years ago.

FARNUM AND MORAN SCINTILLATE AT BEACH.

FRANKLYN FARNUM and Lee Moran took advantage of the beautiful weather on Sunday last to visit the beach at Venice and make use of the new bathing suits which they won in the prize dancing contest at the Strand Cafe at Venice on Universal City night, and which, with a handsome parasol won by Miss Alice Lake, were donated by Miss Marie Walcamp, fair star of the Universal forces. The contest was held in connection with "Come Through," which just had its premiere at the Broadway in New York City.

The first honors in the contest went to Farnum—"the man with the million dollar smile"—and Miss Lake, his dancing partner, and the next couple to please the judges were Lee Moran and Miss Ethel Davis.

The bathing toggery presented by Miss Walcamp is made of bright red silk with white trimming, and the two Universalites were the cynosure of all eyes while they disported themselves in the surf or raced through the breakers. Both Farnum and Lee Moran are fine swimmers and could have won a water contest as easily as a land dancing contest.

"Money and Mystery"

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama. Story by Robert Von Saxmar. Scenario by Jack Cunningham and produced by Henry McRae, with Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict featured.

CAST.

Mary	Eileen Sedgwick
Charlie Terrill	W. E. Lawrence
Jim Dempster	George Pearce
Ben Jessen	William Dyer
Dawes	Kingsley Benedict
Marion Dempster	Martha Mattox
Agatha Dempster	Mrs. G. Hernandez

HENRY McRAE produced this typical Bison, which was written by Robert von Saxmar and adapted for the screen by Jack Cunningham. Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict are the featured players in the tale which revolves swiftly about the robbery of a mining property by the dishonest superintendent.

Mary Dempster, who has lived all her life with her two maiden aunts, comes of age, and into full control of her property. She hears her aunts talking with the old man about her father, Jim Dempster, who was cast adrift by his family, and who now works in his sisters' employ as bookkeeper at the "Mary" Mine in the Far West. This is owned by Mary and the spinters, and Ben Jessen has just been appointed manager. She determines to go to her father. The aunts refuse to allow her to go, but she disobeys them.

Mary is seen by Charlie Terrill, the sheriff, and by Ben Jessen, as she alights from the old stage at the mine. Terrill gallantly offers his service, takes her baggage and leads her to Jim Dempster's cabin. Jessen is immediately attracted to Mary and begins to plan.

Jessen has for some time been robbing the owners of the mine, diverting carloads of ore, and having Dawes, his assistant, forge Dempster's name to the bills of lading. Dempster has been of no hindrance to this work, for his brain is dulled by whiskey.

But a change takes place in Dempster; under Mary's influence he soon is a different man. He begins to see that something is wrong with the books at the mine and is perplexed. Dawes warns Jessen, but he refuses to be alarmed. Mary and Terrill have become the best of friends, while Jessen still tries to find favor in her eyes.

Meantime, the aunts are so lonely without Mary that they make arrangements to go to the mine. They are terrified by the recklessness of the stage-driver, whom they amuse greatly by their screams.

Emboldened by successful thefts, Jessen diverts more cars of ore, and Dempster informs him of the errors. Jessen is furious. He orders Dawes to fasten suspicion on Dempster, and the assistant immediately begins by insinuating charges against Dempster before some of the working men, one of whom calls him a skunk for talking about a man behind his back. Dawes pulls a gun and fires; the man falls, apparently shot, and Dawes flees, followed by a number of men. Terrill arrives to find the man uninjured, but nevertheless pursues Dawes to Mary's cabin.

Jessen accuses Dempster, but agrees to keep silent if Mary will marry him. She repulses him, and he gives her a week in which to decide. At the end of that time Dempster is taken prisoner, but Terrill goes his bail. Jessen arrives at the cabin while Mary is alone.

The aunts arrive and follow Terrill and Dempster to the cabin. Terrill, hearing a struggle, rushes into the cabin and grabs Jessen just as he is about to kiss Mary. Jessen tries to slink from the room. Mary points out to her aunts the change in her father. Dawes, having ridden frantically to the cabin, dashes into the scene. He reveals Jessen's crime and his own duplicity, while Terrill quickly covers Jessen with his revolver.

Every Exhibitor Should Read Every Word Every Week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

Ruth Stonehouse in "A Limb of Satan." Gold Seal Three-Reel Drama Written by Elizabeth Mahoney, and Produced by Ruth Stonehouse. Released on July 10th. Wherever Nada got her name the orphan asylum did not stop to care. The only thing they knew about her was that she was a holy terror, and that every time she had been adopted she had been "returned with thanks." Ruth Stonehouse plays Nada and she produced the three-reel picture in which Nada is the principal feature. It is called "A Limb of Satan," and you don't want to miss it. The superintendent of the orphan asylum was just about as tickled a lady as you ever saw when Nada ran away. But the big punch in Nada's life comes with her first desire to do good in the world. What would you think if the very first act you ever did in your life brought you plumb up against a twelve-cylinder policeman and the children's society? The court scene where this little drama is worked out is one of mighty real humanness.

"Hearts and Flour." Two-Reel L-Ko Komedy. Directed by Dick Smith, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone. With Eva Novak, Bob MacKenzie, Charles Ryckman and Tom Delmar. If you remember the famous song, "Hearts and Flowers," just take it from us that this L-KO Komedy is nothing like it. Whatever the hearts are in it, the flour is real, and it is catapulted, spilled, tracked and blown all about the combination grocery store and butcher shop, in which this little two-reel whirlwind takes place. Bob MacKenzie is the storekeeper, and, of course, he has a beautiful daughter. There has got to be a beauty in an L-KO, or it wouldn't be an L-KO, and the beauty in this one is Eva Novak. Of course, she has two lovers, and they happen to be the butcher boy and the grocer boy. The struggle for her affections is fast and furious, and so depletes the stock of hams, vegetables, flour and ice from the refrigerator, that poor old Bob would have had to have gone out of business if he did not marry his daughter off soon.

"Three Women of France." Rex Two-Reel War Drama. With Jack Mulhall, Irene Hunt, Adelaide Woods, Virginia Lee and Dick Ryan. Story by Bess Meredyth, produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, and released on July 12. That ought to be a very lucky day for any exhibitor if he books this film. It is a five-reeler compressed into two, and it has all of the punch, all of the pathos, all of the human drama which any five-reeler ever had. It is staged just back of the battle lines in France, and brings together the fortunes of three women who never saw each other before, but all of whom are concerned in the life of Lieutenant Raoul Renfret, who was brought into the base hospital dangerously wounded. One of these women is his wife, one is the girl who refused him, and the other is a Parisian demi-mondaine who reveres him as the only man in her life who treated her kindly. A wonderful little drama is worked out with the wounded soldier and the three women.

"Double Suspicion." Bison Two-Reel Western Drama Featuring Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Produced by George Marshall. Released on July 15th. Real red blood in this Bison drama, boys, and no mistake. Neal is the sheriff, and old Pop is his pal. Into their life comes Joe, a cattle rustler, and his wife. Pop is going to have a birthday, and without letting him know, Neal and the other boys order a present to be sent in order to surprise him. Neal goes to the express office after dark so that Pop will not see him, but Pop is real wide-awake that night, and he gets it into his head that Neal is unlawfully robbing the safe. No greater test of friendship could be asked of a man than that he assume the guilt which he thinks is his friend's. That is exactly what Pop did. He left his own handkerchief there as the evidence. Of course, Neal had to suspect him after that, and that is the significance of the title, "Double Suspicion." It's great the way it works out, though. You've got to see it.

HARRY CAREY ENGAGES IN RURAL PURSUITS.

THE high cost of living holds no terror for Harry Carey, noted Universal Western actor, as he now is the proud possessor of a ranch at Newhall, some twenty miles north of Universal City. He motors back and forth and during the time when he is not engaged before the camera the delineator of cowboy roles may be seen behind the plow or working in his potato and onion gardens.

"They may be able to charge me high prices for a few things, but out here on this ranch," said the actor. "I am raising practically everything I need for my table and the first time I strike an oil well I'll make my own gasoline, too."

However, it has been disclosed by Fred A. Kelsey, his director, that Carey's ranch hands do most of the work, as a great deal of the actor's time is occupied in entertaining the many friends who motor out to the ranch for week ends. Carey declares, however, that he intends to dismiss the ranch hands and make his guests plow and hoe instead of merely sleeping and eating when they spend the time at "Careyville," as he calls his ranch. Carey appears on this week's program in "The Golden Bullet."

Scenario by Harvey Gates.
Produced by M. K. Wilson.

CAST.

Mary	Edith Roberts
Jed	M. K. Wilson
Jack	Earl Page

Mary's ideal was culled from the clothes advertisements in the magazines. When Jack arrived in town for his firm, he seemed to be it. She neglected Jed, the hired man, who adored her, for Jack. She hoped that the traveling man would invite her to the dance at the hotel, but when he did not, she determined to go alone. She found an old dress of her mother's in the attic and dressed up in it. Jack laughed at her, and danced with the other stylishly dressed girls. She went out crying, and found Jed, to whom she confided that she was through with city people.

"IN THE LAND OF MANY TEMPLES."

Powers' Dorsey Educational Split Reel

We see the part of India which is famous for its temples. The old palace of the Nawaks, built in the Moorish style, is now used for government offices. Remains of a temple from the twelfth century are shown. We see a Mogul's fortress, and then the white marble shrines of various Mohammedan saints. The palaces of Abkar follow, with the tomb where the famous Kohinoor diamond once reposed. Some of the ancient Rock temples are seen, two thousand years old.

"LOVE'S TURMOIL."

Big U Drama.

With Edna Maison.

Dorothy Smith, daughter of the owner of the mine, is in love with the superintendent, Robert Blake. John Daly has been put out of the position for bad habits, and is jealous of Blake. He learns that the payroll has not arrived, and stirs up the men to go and demand their money. Blake tells them they will all be paid, but Daly tells them not to believe him. The men are incited to violence and go to wreck the mine entrance, but the sheriff holds them up at the point of a revolver. Dorothy's father cannot cross the river in his buckboard with the money, as the bridge is down. Dorothy rides out to meet him, and he throws her the money accross the stream. She then rides to the mine, and the men are paid while Daly is arrested for causing disorder.

ACCEPT THE HELPING HAND UNIVERSAL PROGRAM OFFERS

Do you have weekly "off nights?" The reason is that you are sticking too closely to features—and folks are getting mighty tired of all features. They want short plays.

Take the hint they are trying to give you and play the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM. It is chock full of variety—drama, melodrama, comedy and love. It gets over with the crowd every time. It brings them out quicker and more frequently each week than the average features you book.

The SPECIALS are bull's-eye hitters. They cost a little more than their pro rated rental at the complete program price, but they certainly are worth every extra cent they cost. They make a good advertisement for your house, too, because they make your patrons tell their friends what a good show you put out. That's the kind of talk that means increased patronage for you.

The REGULARS are fine, wholesome and powerfully dramatic—brilliant and popular stars—masterly direction—complete and lavish productions. They can be booked separately, if desired. But no matter how you book, be sure to get at least a part of them for your house. Get in touch with your nearest Universal Exchange and ask for full particulars.

Eddie and Edith are to be married the next day, and the boys are celebrating with a stag party. On the way home they drive erratically, and are arrested by the county sheriff and sentenced to sixty days on the chain gang. They send word that they have been drafted into the army. They are put to digging ditches, and one day are nearly discovered when Edith's auto breaks down and they are called to give assistance. At last the time is up. They stop on the way home and buy some second-hand uniforms. They are received as heroes, and the wedding ceremony is arranged. In the midst of it the sheriff arrives. He has miscalculated, and they have two more days to serve.

"DUKE DOOLITTLE'S JUNGLE FRIZZLE."

Powers Animated Carton Split Reel.

The African explorer, Duke Doolittle, comes to the editor to sell him his book on hunting. He tells of his voyage and his adventures after big game in Bambazoo, showing the editor the pictures. A leopard pursues him, and he shoots the spots off it. He then loses his gun just as the beast is about to jump on him. The editor asks what happened after that, and the Duke says that it is a serial and he won't finish it for about four years.

"THE DOUBLE-TOPPED TRUNK."

Imp Drama.

Story and scenario by George Bronson Howard and Luther Reed.
Produced by Allen Holubar.

Carey Crane	Allen Holubar
Swithers	Frank Whitson
Inspector	George Pearce
Thiera	Gretchen Lederer

In the custom house, one day, a double-topped trunk in which are secreted several valuable gems, is discovered. Carey Crane, at the head of the service, tells the inspector to leave the case to him. Later in the day Carey, dressed as a baggageman, drives up the rear of the building. It is not long before Swithers, one of the gang, approaches Carey and directs him to get the trunk in question. He gives him an address to which they will deliver it.

Carey takes the trunk to the address designated and deposits it in the room. While Swithers' back is to him, he raises the blind, which, unknown to him, is the signal to the thugs across the street, should anything be wrong with the crooks' plans. In lifting the trunk, Carey loses one of the brass buttons from his uniform under his overalls. Swithers picks it up and confronts him with a gun. Noiselessly Carey dislodges the clock on the mantel, and it falls so that it throws the gun from Swithers' hand just as the thugs appear.

Carey grabs the gun and holds the thugs at bay. He manages to throw the clock out of the window, which arrests the attention of the policemen whom he has told to follow him. Carey leaves one of the policemen to capture the real smuggler, the girl, Thiera, who had taken her departure just previous to the arrival of the trunk.

"THE EAGLES WINGS"

Every city in the country is raising funds for one patriotic purpose or another. You can help this work by booking "The Eagle's Wings," then calling in the Boy Scouts, the G. A. R. and various military organizations and command their help by agreeing to give a percentage of the profits for a patriotic purpose.

"The Eagle's Wings" has been Enthusiastically Endorsed by 1500 Chapters of the D.A.R.

Besides the Daughters of American Revolution, it has also been highly praised by prominent government officials at Washington, D. C. While thousands of American citizens—thoughtful men and women—have given it a thunderous reception after sitting in tense silence as this gripping story was flashed before them.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS

The biggest and best houses in the country have picked "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" for a winner, and it has made good their judgment by packing their theatres and paying them the biggest profits they ever got from any pictures.

Here's what

"Hell Morgan's Girl"

did at the Garrick Theatre, in Los Angeles,; it packed the crowds in at EVERY performance, while the usually popular Mary Pickford, Clara Young, William Farnum, Marguerite Clark, Blanche Sweet and Annette Kellerman had a slim crowd of those who could not get into the Garrick.

Dorothy Phillips work compels the almost breathless attention of the most seasoned fan. The power and dramatic force of her acting can never be eclipsed by any actress. The virile, red-blooded plot holds the attention with a mighty grip.

Book It At Once

What "Hell Morgan's Girl" has done for hundreds of other Exhibitors it will do for you. It's a money-maker. If you are a good showman—a real business man, you won't overlook this play, but will immediately book it through your nearest BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

Lift Your Theatre out of its "Bad Days" Rut

Why do you persist in disappointing a large number of your patrons? Why do you adopt a policy that makes them form the habit of going to another theatre? When you book a BLUEBIRD why don't you BOOK IT REPEAT? You get a sliding scale of prices—you get the full advantage of all your advertising and the recommendations of your patrons who have turned out the first night—your profits are not cut down or killed entirely by a storm—

Mr. Carl Lowenstein, Manager of The Princess Theatre, White Hall, Illinois, in writing of "Love's Lariat," tells the cash advantages of REPEAT BOOKINGS in this sentence: "I BOOKED THIS PICTURE ON A REPEAT DATE AND DID OVER THREE TIMES AS MUCH BUSINESS AS I DID THE FIRST TIME."

Start REPEAT BOOKINGS for your house. Adopt this larger profit-producing plan that is making good for hundreds of Exhibitors—begin with these three:

Harry D. Carey in "Love's Lariat" a romantic drama of the East and West, novel in plot, situation and direction.

Rupert Julian and Louise Lovely in "Bettina Loved a Soldier" the most beautiful love story ever told.

Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley in "Saving the Family Name" a drama of family pride and a chorus girl. Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

"THE CAR OF CHANCE"

"See, Ruth, that's what the car did."

BLUEBIRD Photoplay. Written by Waldemar Young. Scenario by W. Young and E. B. Lewis and production by William Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon starred.

FRANKLYN FARNUM and Brownie Vernon make their reappearance on the Bluebird program with a comedy - drama called "The Car of Chance," which was written by Waldemar Young, with a scenario by the author and E. B. Lewis, and the production in the hands of William Worthington. The jitney is an important member of the cast, which does not appear in the list of players, for the entire plot revolves around the car, which is left to Arnold Baird by the terms of his rich father's will, with a hundred dollars to keep it running, and nothing else. A delightful story has been worked out on these lines, and gives the two popular players an excellent chance to score.

When Arnold Baird is informed that his father has bequeathed him only a seven-passenger car and one hundred dollars to be used solely for gasoline and repairs, he still remains cheerful and happy. But the Bennetts have turned against him and forbid their daughter Ruth to have anything further to do with him, encouraging their hold on the public affection. Mott-Smith, a pompous pillar of society. Ruth, however, loathes Mott-Smith, and loves Arnold.

Mott-Smith hates Arnold because Ruth's preference for his youth and good looks. A bal masque, a great social affair, is to be given soon. Ruth is going as Pierrette; Mott-Smith as Pierrot; and Mrs. Bennett smiles complacently at the thought of her own cleverness. But Ruth phones Arnold to mask as Pierrot and says she will wear a blue ribbon on her arm.

The bal masque is a wonderful success; Ruth and Arnold immediately discover each other and retire to an alcove. Another Pierrette is made prisoner by Mott-Smith, while Mr. and Mrs. Bennett smile and wink at each other. But when twelve o'clock arrives and all unmask, Ruth is found with Arnold.

Arnold has bought a jitney sign, and determines to drive passengers on a regular route in his car. This idea has come to him as an inspiration. Bennett has informed him that when he can command a salary of one hundred thousand dollars a year, he can talk with him about Ruth.

A street car strike is threatened; Bennett is the head of the Consolidated Traction Company. Tom Nolan, leader of the carmen's union, and Israel Heimstone, a labor agitator, outline hasty plans of another sort. After inquiring what Arnold thinks of Bennett, Nolan concludes that here is the very man he has been looking for. They drive to Heimstone's, and there make their arrangements to fight the strike with a new weapon—the jitney.

Meanwhile, Bennett has made an agreement with Mott-Smith, who is to supply the funds for the strike, and Wanda, his stenographer, is instructed to come to the office that night to draw up the agreement. After Bennett has left, she asks permission to go home, but Mott-Smith intercepts her and they struggle, but she finally succeeds in rushing into the other office and locking the door. While he beats at the door, she frantically phones her father, Heimstone, of her predicament and Arnold, who is present, jumps into his car and dashes to her rescue. Arnold kicks down the outer door and enters to find Mott-Smith again struggling with Wanda. The men fight, and Arnold half carries Wanda from the office to his machine. and takes her home.

parents happen to see Arnold assisting Wanda from the building, and the next day Arnold receives a note from Ruth saying that everything is over; she can bear anything but another woman. Wanda notices his sadness, and learning the cause, goes to Ruth and soon has settled her misgivings.

Arnold has enticed all his fashionable men friends into his project, and they are delighted with the situation. The people enjoy riding in their cars; the money fairly rolls in.

The strike-breakers come, but it doesn't seem to do much good, for though the street cars are running, the town prefers the ease and luxury of the new jitneys.

Three days later, Bennett is plainly told by the directors that he must end the strike. So he sends for Nolan and Heimstone to learn their terms. They tell him that the settlement will have to be made through Mr. Baird. Bennett phones Arnold to come to his office, but Arnold replies that he is too busy, Bennett must come to see him. Bennett learns that Arnold's terms are one hundred thousand dollars a year for himself—fifty thousand down, and a six months' vacation in which to spend his honeymoon with Ruth. Mott-Smith as financier of the strike is forced to consent.

The strike is over; the carmen get every demand, and Arnold's "Social Rapid Transit Company" goes out of business that night. When Arnold and Ruth stop at the lawyer's for an order for a tank of gas, Osborne hands Arnold a letter written by his father, which is to be given to his son as soon as he becomes something useful, and Arnold reads that his father has willed him his entire fortune.

Arnold rescues Wanda from Mott-Smith.

"Let me have another tank of gas."

Ruth dresses for the masquerade.

A SAMPLE READER FOR "THE CAR OF CHANCE."

HOW a seven-passenger touring car, guided by an enterprising young man, practically disinherited by his millionaire father, served to break a street-car strike and secured a settlement on most gratifying terms, will be told in Bluebird photoplays at the Bluebird theatre when Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon appear in "The Car of Chance." Said terms of settlement included a $10,000 yearly job for the young man, six months' honeymoon, salary in advance, and the traction magnate's daughter as the bride. Before this happy outcome is attained, however, stirring episodes and many highly amusing incidents fill the screen life of the photoplayers with excitement. The result is sure to provide an entirely agreeable hour for theatregoers who enjoy photoplay entertainment in its best form.

WITH

JACK MULHALL

Enter Eddie Polo the Scrapper

Scene from the fourth chapter of the serial "The Gray Ghost."

IN the Fourth Episode of the serial "The Gray Ghost" which is being produced by Stuart Paton from the Saturday Evening Post success "Loot" by Arthur Somers Roche, Eddie Polo has a chance to show the characteristics which make him one of the greatest serial favorites of the screen. There is a thrilling fight in the restaurant, Bishop's, from which the hero, Hildreth, has just made his escape. Polo, who plays the role of Hildreth's secretary, comes to the cafe looking for his employer, and meets the Gray Ghost's men. He immediately senses the situation, and starts a fight to keep the men occupied so that Hildreth may escape. The men fight over the top of chairs and tables, to the accompaniment of broken furniture and smashed crockery. Polo raises a man in the air, and then hurls his limp body on top of a table full of dishes and silverware all of which crash to the ground. The diners rush for the exits before the onslaught of the fighting demon, who holds six men occupied as easily as one. When at last Polo thinks that they have had enough the floor is strewn with wreckage, and several of the Gray Ghost's gang are nursing broken bones and bruises.

Of course the conclusion of this conflict was settled beforehand by the script, but the actors who staged it with the Universal strong man certainly knew that they had been fighting when Paton cried "Enough!" Polo got up off the floor, settled the remains of his collar and tie, and asked the director if that would do, as if nothing had happened. This episode of the serial is the most sensational, so far. But Polo's work has only begun, and he will have many more opportunities in which his skill as a boxer and his great strength will have full play.

It is good news to the fans, who enjoy Eddie's work on the screen to hear that he has signed a two-year contract with Universal, and will continue to do the sort of thing which has made his name known to the farthest corners of the world. The Universal is constantly receiving letters from far off countries praising the work of Eddie Polo in Universal serials, and asking in what he will appear next.

In all his fights for the screen, he has never received an injury, though he throws himself into the work at hand as whole-heartedly as if he really were the character he is playing, and lives depended upon his prowess as they do in the script. This sincerity is a strong factor in his success, and has helped to make him a favorite al lover the world, wherever pictures are shown.

A Bluebird Frappé

ONE of the most beautiful Bluebirds ever released—and that is going some—is "The Greater Law," which will appear on July sixteenth. The cut gives some idea of the wonderful scenery in which this corking story was staged. Lynn Reynolds, who has earned the nickname of "nature study" director, took his company to Truckee, California, way back last winter, to make most of the scenes. One of the first articles in his creed is that no interiors should be used in a photoplay, where an exterior can be made to do. George Hernandez, Larry Peyton and Myrtle Gonzalez have the leads in the picture, which has an absorbing story, culminating in a brand new situation. All of them had to learn to be expert "snow shoeists" for the photoplay, the scene of which is laid in Alaska.

When the picture was completed and sent in to the New York office for a first view, it made an instantaneous hit with the office force; but it was decided to hold it until midsummer, so that audiences might get the full enjoyment out of the snowy settings, which would come from the contrast with torrid weather outside the theatre.

Miss Gonzalez, who plays the role of avenger of her brother's death, wears a complete suit of furs, in the picture, which was presented to her by an admirer from the North country. Rare skins are used and blended by most skillful of Eskimo fur-workers, whose cleverness in manipulating pelts is famous. The suit consists of trousers and leggings, and top part like a fur blouse, with a hood fringed all around with long-haired fur, which falls over the face and protects it from the freezing temperature.

BEAUTY and the BURGLAR

FATHER invited "Speed" Cannon, a young broker, to his home to discuss a deal. Speed came rather late, and knew that there was something wrong the moment he entered the house, for he found mother lying in a faint on the stairs. He rushed up to the second story and discovered a sneak-thief in the act of appropriating daughter's jewelry. A couple of maids cowered in the corner, for there was a business-like gun in the burglar's fist. Speed jumped on him from the rear, and there was a pretty scrap. When it was over, the burglar in the hands of the law and mother revived, Speed turned for his just reward at the hands of the owner of the jewelry. She had lain passive on her daybed throughout the scene, a placid spectator, and she now gently patted back a yawn, and remarked that burglars were such a nuisance.

Speed was struck all of a heap by the lackadaisical, languid, la-de-da beauty of her, and he determined to play Prince Charming to her Sleeping Beauty. Later, before he has succeeded in cracking the varnish that a finishing school has plastered thick over her natural impulses, daughter is literally nagged into a marriage with a fortune-hunting Count. Father, however, is on Speed's side, as he has the inestimable advantage of having been born under the Stars and Stripes. He assists Speed in a Young Lochinvar stunt, and the young man dashes into the very midst of the wedding, snatches up the bride, and carries her off to his office, where a minister is waiting to tie the knot. Mother follows, but Speed's whole staff keeps her at bay till the ceremony is completed. And that's the story of "High Speed."

TAKE IT

(No. 183. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

YOU don't use half enough newspaper advertising, Mr. Exhibitor!

And most of you don't make the best use of the brains God gave you in the way you apportion the little advertising that you do.

If this is disagreeable reading, don't read it. But if you care a rap about increasing your business or holding the business you already have, listen to me—and listen carefully:

Duty and common sense require you to keep your theatre open this summer, whether you ever kept open in the summer in years gone by or not. And by keeping your theatre open, I don't mean merely keeping the doors open and letting the people walk in. You've got to do more than that, winter or summer. No matter what line of business you might be in you'd be living behind the times if you did not advertise, advertise and then—advertise MORE.

The trouble with most of you exhibitors is simply this. You advertise your heads off when your picture happens to contain a well known star, but you quit advertising when it doesn't. Then you give the credit for full houses to the star, instead of to the advertising. I have said to you a dozen times that if you would advertise all of your shows even half as much as you advertise when you are showing a star, you would get a tremendous response from your public.

Now listen to Mr. J. I. Schnitzer, general manager of the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis, who writes as follows:

"Whenever an exhibitor complains of doing poor business and I trace it down, I find almost invariably that it is due to lack of newspaper advertising. When they are showing a big star the newspaper offices don't have type large enough to carry their ads. It stands to reason that if they advertise so heavily and get the business on these stars, they would also find advertising a mighty profitable investment if they would stick to it whenever they have good pictures, star or no star."

If you don't show a real enthusiasm in your pictures, even when there are no great stars in them, you can't possibly expect to impart enthusiasm to your patrons. And the most practical way to prove your enthusiasm is to advertise, advertise and then—advertise smoe MORE!

Some of the Universal's greatest successes have had no stars in them, and the very fact that they were successes has even made stars of the hitherto unknown actors and actresses who appeared in them.

There are two very significant facts which I would like to have you associate together in your mind. The first is that the Universal company has ALWAYS been the heaviest and most consistent advertiser in the picture business. The second is that the Universal, ever since its inception, has ALWAYS been the most successful company in the business. We would just as soon think of quitting the producing of pictures as to quit advertising! And the very same thing is true of Ivory soap, Steinway pianos, Tiffany jewelry and a hundred other things that you know of.

Apply this lesson to your own business and—advertise.

Advertising once and then quitting is silly. The only successful way to advertise is to keep everlastingly at it, and keeping everlastingly at it COMPELS SUCCESS.

Keep the movies moving all the year around. Give your patrons the kind of selected pictures that we have mapped out for the summer, but don't keep it a secret from them. Tell them what you've got—tell them repeatedly. Never stop. Bang away at it day after day and week after week. Don't expect sensational results right at the jump. The public is a slow moving body, but once you get it moving your way, all the competitors on earth can't stop it.

If you are not skilful at advertising, tell the nearest Universal exchange manager and he'll either give you expert help or call on our own advertising staff to put you on the right track.

Now, LET'S GO!

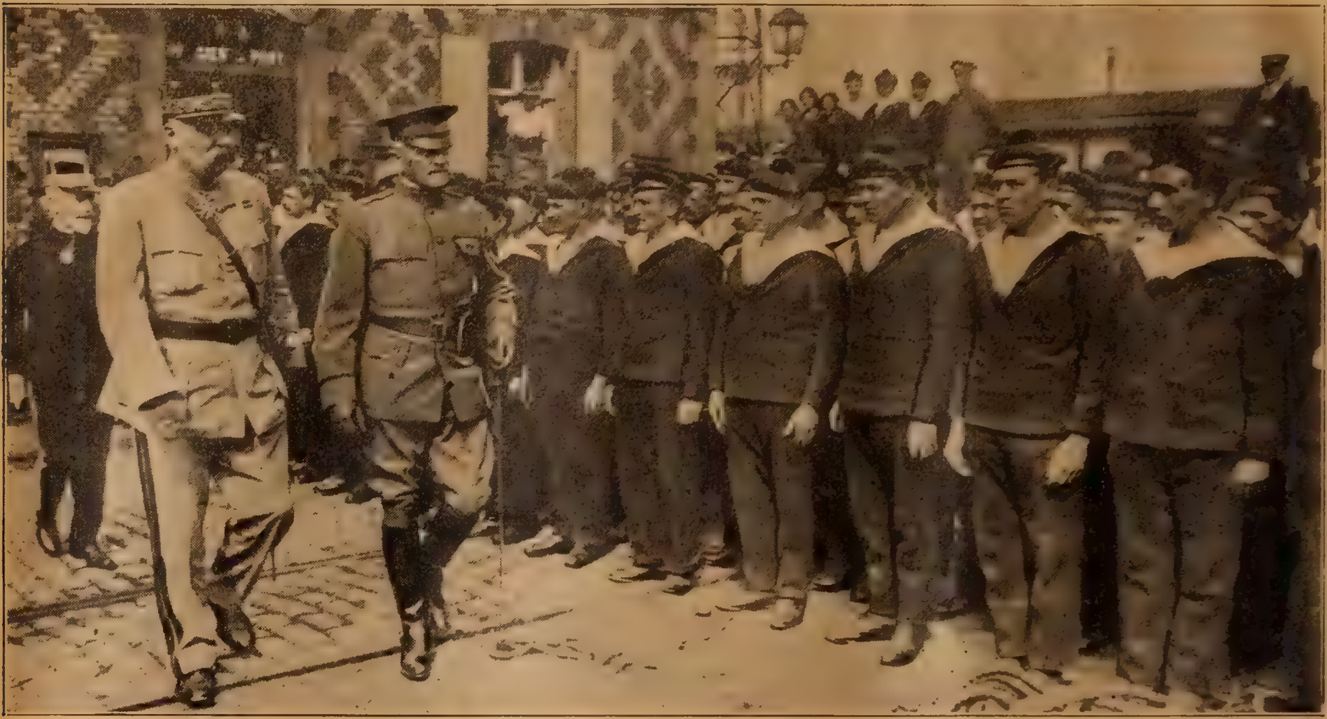
Special Pershing Animated Weekly



SAMMEES! Samees! Vive, Sammees!" France has its poilu, Great Britain its Tommie, and now America has its Sammies. The phrase was born of the enthusiasm with which Major General Pershing's troops were received by the almost frantically jubilant French people as the American transports warped into the quay of a port somewhere in France. Pershing's regulars, as they debarked from one of the most remarkable voyages ever undertaken, understood perfectly this French pronunciation of a name which they instantly understood belonged to them. It added a zest to their landing and a cheerfulness to their workmanlike step as the forces of American regulars marched gaily down the long French quay.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company has scooped the entire United States releasing a thousand-foot picture of General Pershing's arrival, and the arrival of his troops in France for active service. Strange as it may seem, the negative that the Universal has is the only one so far to be sent over here, and by a series of fortuitous accidents the Universal was able to release it on Saturday only a few hours after it was received. So high an estimate is put on the news value of this first picture of the epoch-making arrival of the invading United States troops on European soil, that the first special Animated Weekly ever released was put out consisting entirely of this subject—General Pershing and his troops in France. So great a demand was evinced by theatres in New York for this picture, for which special paper was rapidly gotten out, that a number of prints almost approximating a record was printed by the laboratories, and the demand for new prints is still strong.

This Is It
WATCH
this Mysterious
Deck of Cards

Another unprecedented fact in connection with this picture is that the arrival of the negative in this country is almost in coincidence with the first cable dispatch announcing the arrival of our troops abroad. So strict has been the censorship, and so general the respect of the American newspapermen for the desire of the government to shield future transports from any danger, that nothing at all had crept into the papers. On Saturday a special Animated Weekly on General Pershing's troops was released, only one day behind the cable.

Furthermore, the cable itself was so meagre, and the newspaper office-written description of the arrival so obvious and unilluminating, that one gets a much more complete impression of the scene from looking at this Animated Weekly than they will from reading all of the morning papers dealing with the subject for the last four days. The Universal exchange in Washington, D. C., was commissioned by the Universal to invite the heads of the governmnet to see this print even before it wes released in New York, and this request was so generally complied with, that almost all of official Washington had a view of General Pershing's safe arrival before the country in general saw it. Service like this occurs only once in a great while.

Universal Pictures for Week of July 16

HARRY CAREY'S three-reel Western dramas are always a refreshing spot in any evening's entertainment, and the week of July 16th brings this sterling Western actor in a three-reel Western drama, entitled "Six-Shooter Justice." It was written by T. Shelly Sutton, and directed by Fred A. Kelsey, with Claire Du Brey prominent in the supporting cast. "Six-Shooter Justice" is a typical Carey picture with plenty of Western atmosphere, hard riding, quick shooting, treachery, punishment and reward. And of course, Carey, although sufficiently maligned and mistaken throughout the film, comes into his own in the last reel, as he should.

This week sees the starting of a brand-new idea in Universal pictures. The Universal is fortunate enough to have on its shelves a sufficient number of negatives to start what it is pleased to call an individual feature series. Among others who will appear in this series are Cleo Madison, Mary Fuller and J. Warren Kerrigan. The first of these pictures will be released as a Cleo Madison feature. Its title is "The Web." It is a two reel society drama, was written by Catherine Kingsley, and produced by George Cochrane, and numbers in the cast which supports Cleo Madison, Gretchen Lederer, George Pearce and Jack Nelson.

William Franey appears in a Joker comedy entitled "He had 'Em Buffaloed," and the remarkably humorous effect of the entire picture is very largely due to William Franey's own efforts.

There is also an L-Ko appropriate to hot weather entitled "Surf Scandal," presenting Dan Russell and Gladys Varden in a little sketch beside the ocean.

Other comedies released that week are the Victor two-reel comedy entitled "One Bride Too Many," and Gale Henry in a single reel Joker entitled "Some Nurse." The Nestor comedy is entitled "The Dark Deed."

High Spots in July 23 Universal Pictures

AMONG the Universal pictures for the week of July 23d the Gold Seal drama, "A Soldier of the Legion," is considered very much out of the ordinary for a three-reel picture. It features Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson in a miniature five-reeler if there ever was one. The picture was directed by Ruth Ann Baldwin, and is a story within a story, written by Maud Springer Neeson. Two aspiring authors, in the story, are very hard up for money.

A ragged maid-of-all-work gives them an idea, and they set the characters down in Algiers, and there weave about them a wonderfully dramatic and absorbing drama. Then they dig up ten cents and go out to celebrate. In the meantime the maid-of-all-work, the heroine in the story, in cleaning up puts "The Soldier of the Legion" in the stove, and it goes up in smoke, and we are back where we started again, after one of the most enjoyable pictures in many moons.

Another enjoyable picture is "The Beautiful Impostor," featuring Mary Fuller. In fact, it is to be put out under the title, Mary Fuller Picture, and is a two-reeler of engaging quality and of particular interest to women on account of the remarkable number of beautiful costumes which Mary Fuller wears.

Herbert Rawlinson, who is making such a name for himself in "Come Through," appears also the same week in a more than ordinarily interesting comedy-drama entitled "Caught in the Act."

There are also a number of remarkably fine comedies shown this week. One of them, "Seeing Things," brings Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts to a comedy situation in a lodge in the mountains.

Gale Henry's work in "The Soubrette," a single reel Joker, is also worthy of note.

William Franey's Joker comedy is entitled "Canning the Cannibal King," and there is the usual Powers split reel comedy cartoon and Dorsey educ., Current Events, and Animated Weekly.

Louise Lovely and Allen Holubar in "The Reed Case"

"Now keep as quietly as possible and I'll hide up here."

"The jig is up," said Jerry.

Helen is amused at Schuyler's protestations of love.

SOME of the most remarkable shooting seen in recent pictures is a feature of the Butterfly Picture, "The Reed Case," for which the young director, Allen Holubar, is almost wholly responsible. He wrote, adapted for the screen, produced and played in the picture, and he made a mighty good job of it while he was at it, assisted by Louise Lovely and a big cast of Universal players. Ed Jones, the sharpshooter of Universal City, did some stunts with his trusty rifle which will make the fans open their eyes, and, just for good measure, there is some lovely woods and mountain scenery. Here is an outline of the exciting story:

Chief of Police Grady, of the New York Central Office, informed Jerry Brennon and "Bull" Renfroy, the two principal detectives of the force, that the Grayson gang was pulling a haul that night and, realizing that this would mean promotion for the man who made good, the men set out to capture them.

BUTTERFLY PICTURE. Story, scenario and production by Allen Holubar, who also plays the leading role, with Louise Lovely opposite. A mystery tale enlivened with remarkable shooting scenes.

CAST.

Jerry Brennon	Allen Holubar
Bull Renfroy	Alfred Allen
Chief Grady	Fred Montague
Senator Reed	George Pearce
John Reed	Sydney Dean
Helen Reed	Louise Lovely
Mrs. John Reed	Nanine Wright
Schuyler Hastings	Ernest Shields
"Red"	Edward Brady

As always, Jerry made good. He caught two crooks in Senator Reed's home, for he climbed through a window and surprised them completely. Senator Reed was so grateful that he offered to do anything for Jerry.

After three years of active service, Brennon reached the point where he faced a complete nervous breakdown. The doctor and Reed insisted that he rest up, but Jerry said there was too much to do in the department. Finally he was persuaded to do the sensible thing, and although Grady asserted that he couldn't get along without him, Brennon accepted Reed's offer to occupy his lonely little cabin high up in the Adirondacks.

Helen Reed, the season's debutante, was courted by Schuyler Hastings, whom her mother favored, but of whom the father was doubtful. Helen, however, told Schuyler he would have to do something worthwhile, for the man she married must be some one she could look up to and believe in. Helen determined to go shopping and, bidding her parents good-by, was escorted to the taxi by Schuyler.

Jerry found the cabin lonely enough, but was rather suspicious because of the darky's driver saying that it was haunted. No sooner had he arrived than a shot was fired at him, making a hole in his hat. That night he slept restlessly, waking suddenly at some peculiar sound, and dreaming of a woman playing a piano, and of seeing a woman weeping. When he woke up in the morning, two bullets whizzed past and lodged in the bed. Then he found a note pinned on the door which warned him to get out.

Jerry discovered a secret door and, upon forcing it, found a girl huddled on a bed, weeping bitterly. It was Helen, and though at first afraid of Jerry, she soon was telling him of her misfortune. While shopping, she had been kidnapped by getting into the wrong taxi.

When the gangsters came to the cabin, Jerry climbed into a loft and listened to their planning to return at ten o'clock to remove Helen to a hut ten miles away.

Jerry made his way in haste to the village, where he found the sheriff, and with him and some other men rushed back to the cabin in a wagon. Helen was taken from the room and put in the wagon, hidden among the bushes. When the gangsters arrived a terrific fight took place. One ruffian escaped and got into the wagon, but Helen managed to obtain the revolver from him and forced him to return.

Brady was delighted with Brennon's success, and the Reeds were ready to weep for joy at seeing Helen again. Jerry proudly introduced his future wife won in "The Reed Case."

Jerry insists upon resigning.

HOLUBAR'S GREAT FILM RECORD.

DETECTIVE stories of the unraveling of a mystery by a super-sleuth, are among the most popular type of photoplay. A splendid story of this kind will come to the Butterfly Theatre when the Butterfly picture "The Reed Case," which was written and directed by Allen Holubar, is shown there. Mr. Holubar also played the lead himself, and has added another fine piece of work to the long list of his screen characterizations. He is best known, perhaps, for his interpretation of the part of Captain Nemo in the splendid Universal production of Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," one of the greatest mystery stories ever written. Another recent characterization of the young actor-director was that of the soldierly hero of the Butterfly picture, "The Field of Honor," the scene of which was laid in Civil War times. Mr. Holubar has placed this story in the present day, and the action in the Adirondacks.

FULL OF THRILLS.

WHAT would you do if you went up to a lonely shack in the Adirondacks to recover from a nervous breakdown, and were greeted on your arrival by a bullet through your hat? Then, having convinced yourself that it was an accident, how would you feel if as you lay in bed, two more bullets came sniping through the window and buried themselves in the headboard of your bed? That was the reception which awaited young Jerry Brennon, the cleverest detective on Chief Grady's force, who had put in three years of rounding up criminals and unraveling mysteries and whose nerves had suffered in the process. Jerry did the unexpected, for instead of being chased away by these manifestations, he went right to work and solved the biggest mystery of them all, winning a bride as a side issue, and congratulations from even his worst enemy. All this and much more happens in the Butterfly pictures, "The Reed Case," which was written and directed by Allen Holubar, and in which he plays the leading role supported by Louise Lovely.

Jerry breaks into the secret room.

A FINE CAST.

LOUISE LOVELY is the kidnapped niece of Senator Reed, whose mysterious disappearance is the basis of the story. Holubar is the young detective, Jerry Brennon, who discovers her whereabouts in the most unexpected fashion, and by his courage and resource defeats the plans of the crooks, and captures them red-handed. In the support of these leading players is Alfred Allen in the role of the old-fashioned type of detective who is distrustful of Jerry's modern methods, and jealous of his success. Sydney Dean, who will be remembered for a fine characterization in Holubar's preceding Butterfly, "The Field of Honor," has the role of the girl's father, while Nanine Wright, known at Universal City as "Mother," is her mother. Ernie Shields is a society fop who begins something which he can't finish, and George Pearce is the Senator. Ed Brady gives a good characterization as one of the crooks.

"Come through"!

LOOKING over the list of Universal's recent big special features, one cannot help being struck by their remarkable titles. "Where Are My Children?"—the most imitated title in the business—"The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "God's Law," and now "Come Through"—every one of them carries a punch, or an appeal which makes for success, before anything is known about the picture at all.

When "Come Through" was sent in from the Coast, it was called "Hands Up!" a good enough title in its way, but one which had already been recognized as such by a number of other people. R. H. Cochrane, who named all the winners mentioned above, by the way, saw the George Bronson Howard creation in the projection room, and he said, says he:

"I've got the title for that picture, and I've got a new angle for advertising it that will make the public sit up!"

And that is how the latest Universal film baby was christened with a name which is one of the most arresting and the cleverest which has appeared in a dog's age. As for the advertising angle, it was so clever, so striking, and so "different," that it raised a little whirlpool of discussion even in the deep waters of the New York newspaper offices, and attracted pretty nearly as much attention as the picture itself.

"Come Through" had notices in the critical New York press which are very, very far out of the ordinary. Some of them are going to be quoted here, though it would be easy to fill the entire space alotted to this story with the reproduction of them. But "Come Through" is the kind of a photoplay about which it is a pleasure to write, and I'm not going to give up all this nice white paper to quoting even New York reviewers. In the first place, there is one of the best stories ever filmed. It was written by George Bronson Howard, who has filled up quite a lot of nice white paper on his own account, and who is ready to sign and swear that this is the best "thriller" he ever perpetrated. Enough happens in seven reels to make a twenty episode serial, and the threads are so cunningly entangled, that I believe the author himself had no idea how they were going to be straightened out again until he got to the very last scene.

In the second place, reading from left to right, Herbert Rawlinson has the chance of his career in the role of James Harrington Court, alias The Possum, and he "comes through" in the most thoroughly satisfactory manner. You'll see what the highbrow critics say about him later on. And he has a fine cast to back up his efforts, headed by Alice Lake, one of the best dancers who ever tied a ribbon around her head and made her feet earn a living for her. Decidedly these two factors deserve first and second mention, but for third there are so many contenders that the task of apportioning the awards grows difficult if not impossible. Here is a synopsis of the events, as the Morning Telegraph summed them up:

"Supposing you were a burglar on the trail of a $10,000 necklace. You broke into a house in search of your prey and were confronted with a long deadly-looking gun. You were ordered to throw up your hands, brought before a minister and compelled to marry a handsome, intelligent-looking girl whom you had never set eyes on before. Just what would you have done? That is the situation into which James Harrington Court, played by Herbert Rawlinson, a gentleman burglar known as "The Possum," was thrust one dark night.

Dancing scenes from "Come Through."

STIRRING Universal State Rights feature which caused a real sensation in torrid New York at the Broadway Theatre. George Bronson Howard's seven-reel drama has novel twist. Rawlinson finds his best role.

CAST.

Velma Gay	Alice Lake
Her Aunt	Jean Hathaway
Archie Craig	George Webb
Buck Lindsay	Roy Stewart
Jas. H. Court, "Possum,"	Herbert Rawlinson
John Lysaght	Charles Mailes
Mrs. Stoat	Margaret Whistler
McGinnis	William Dyer

"Now come through, Miss Gay, or I'll bore a hole through this bird."

The girl was Velma Gay, a character just fitting Alice Lake, and the man with the gun was Buck Lindsay, Roy Stewart off the stage, a wealthy Western mine-owner who found that he was being betrayed by Velma, or rather her gold-seeking aunt.

"This is the situation about which the plot revolves in a whirl of action—good, clean action that compels interest.

"The story is this: Mrs. Sylvester Van Deek, played by Jean Hathaway, seeks to barter her niece to a wealthy man. Velma loves Archie Craig, but he has no money and is in the same boat as Mrs. Van Deek. Comes East one Buck Lindsay, who has an income he cannot spend. Mrs. Van Deek believes her niece is just the one who can dispose of Lindsay's money and plots their marriage. A couple of Buckaroo friends of Lindsay's come East to see that his marriage is properly done, and buy for his wife-to-be a valuable necklace. It so happens that they run into Jimmy Court, who learn of the haul they carry. He plans to "cop" as soon as possible.

"Everything goes along well with Lindsay and Velma until the former learns that the girl is in love with another. Then he plots on his own account. "Possum" comes after his haul, and, as noted before, all that awaited him was a gun, a wife and a minister. It was hard on the girl, for she had to make up her mind in ten seconds or see "The Possum" shot. (She had been expecting Archie Craig all the time for a sentimental farewell before her marriage.)

"Things happen fast after that. Craig throws down Velma for a wealthy widow, and it is then up to Court to make good. He turns square and becomes a dance artist assisted by his oddly won wife. They make good, and are going great until Lindsay finds out the terrible mistake he has made and tries to win Velma from Court. The latter gains the aid of "the honest Alderman" John Lysaght, and fighting hard, ultimately not only triumphs in the plot laid for him by Boss McGinnis and Lindsay, but also has the pleasure of having the latter come to his rescue while he is battling with McGinnis and his gang in their own lair. The climax is reached at this point——"

Well, there is the story, shorn of all detail, and many of the surprising features. What do you think of just the bones of it? Promising, eh? Audiences seemed to find that the promise is fulfilled, and a whole lot of the Broadway patrons asked for more. They found seven reels of the adventures of Jimmy and Velma all too short.

And now let's see what the professionals had to say about it.

"Come Through" George Bronson Howard's "epic of the underworld" came through last night at the Broadway in the form of an entertaining, thrilling seven-reel photoplay feature, with a punch and dash which should make it a success. The dancing scenes introduced into the restaurant scenes are so realistic that one is almost inclined to applaud the art of Rawlinson and Miss Lake. Rawlin-

Third Episode of "THE GRAY GHOST"

"Why don't you kill me?"

Marco waits for Hildreth.

"You are Ted Daly!"

"THE WARNING" is the title of the third chapter of the new serial which is adapted for the screen and produced by Stuart Paton from the Saturday Evening Post success, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche.

IT is Hildreth, the young Englishman, whose mission to take a two-million-dollar necklace across the ocean causes all the trouble, who receives the warning, which gives the third episode of the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," its title. And it is the beautiful heroine, Morn Light, who gives him the warning. The story is adapted from the screen and produced by Stuart Paton, from the Saturday Evening Post success "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche.

At the theatre, Hildreth sits in a box with two crooks, who were seated before he arrived. He appreciates Morn Light's beauty and splendid dancing and sympathizes with her when, without any cause, she falls, spraining her ankle. The manager informs the people that Miss Light will appear in the next act, but will be unable to dance again. When the men leave to smoke, Hildreth follows them and in the smoking-room is handed a program by a boy who whispers to him that there is a message inside it. The two crooks are determined not to let Hildreth return to the hotel. Morn Light becomes more anxious every moment.

The note urges Hildreth to come at once to Morn Light's dressing-room and, greatly perplexed, he goes. The maid listens at the door, and realizing this, Morn Light laughs, calls Hildreth Ted, and then sends the maid to the drug store for a headache powder. Morn Light writes on a piece of paper and hands it to Hildreth; he reads, "For God's sake laugh." The situation is very strained. Writing again, she tells him he is Ted Daly; not to ask any questions, but to meet her at twelve in the private dining-room at Bishop's; to ask for Jacques, who will understand and show him to the room; not to go back to the theatre; to say something polite about her injury and not to forget that he is Ted Daly. Just then the maid enters to say that she sent a boy for the headache powder. Hildreth leaves.

Two hours later The Gray Ghost is told by the crooks that they have again been foiled and he is eager to kill them.

Piqued with curiosity, Hildreth calls up the Arabin home and learns from the butler that Mr. Arabin has not been in New York that day, but is in Boston. Hildreth is flabbergasted, but he goes to the restaurant and asks for Jacques, who shows him a private room, with a special exit. Hildreth sits down to wait.

Morn Light is helped home by her maid, whom she sends to the drug store for a forgotten package. When the girl is gone she rushes to the phone and calls up Hildreth at Bishop's. She is just warning him not to return to his hotel, when The Gray Ghost enters her room. She hears him, and changing to a light tone, she laughs and thanks "Ted Daly" for calling her up again. The Ghost says, "I hope this is not a love affair, for remember, you belong to me!" He goes toward her to take her in his arms, but she seizes a paper-knife and keeps him off.

"Three Women of France"

Aimee lays her plans.

The nun and the grisette recognize the man.

HOW one man became the first consideration in the lives of a nun, and a little grisette of Paris, and how his own frivolous butterfly wife was brought by the chances of war to devote herself to him at last, is wonderfully told in this strong story, "Three Women of France," written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Three different types of women are concerned with one man, and it is the little grisette who makes the supreme sacrifice in the end, which gives him his chance after he is grievously wounded.

The war had turned a splendid chateau into a hospital. It was guarded by a number of gendarmes, and inside were many wounded soldiers. Sister Genevieve, a woman who knew the sorrow of suffering but not the sorrow of sin, and who, therefore, could not be wholly tolerant, helped to care for these men. Fifi, on the contrary, had known sin in all its ugliness, but like many another of the half-world, had given everything to the great war, even herself. She cheered the sick, sang to them and brought fresh, beautiful flowers to them. All looked for her and anticipated her coming. In the village near the chateau, even the old people and the children loved Fifi. Sister Genevieve disapproved of Fifi's light-heartedness, especially after she had sung a frivolous song at the request of a dying soldier, but Fifi's answer was that she could see no real difference between a prayer and a song.

REX Two-Reel War Drama. Written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, with Jack Mulhall in the role of the one man in the life of three women of different stations in life.

Lieutenant Dubois, of the guard, knew he was a handsome fellow. He was at the time in love with Aimee Renfret, a pretty woman and a weak one, whose husband was in the trenches. She returned his admiration and made arrangements to go to Paris with him during his furlough. Fifi overheard their talk.

The enemy began a sharp attack on Wednesday, and on Thursday the stream of wounded poured into the hospitals. Among them was Raoul Renfret, whom the war had broken like a thing of clay. When Sister Genevieve saw him, she vividly recalled the days when he and she were sweethearts; they had quarreled and he had never returned. After three years with no word from him, she had become a nun.

While thinking of the past, Sister Genevieve was startled by Fifi, who sank to her knees by the bed of Raoul. Asked by the Sister if she knew him, too, Fifi told her that he was the first man who ever treated her as a good woman and who made her want to be good in return. She said that while trying to protect her from a jealous lover, he had been stabbed and she had taken care of him for three long months. After he had gone, she couldn't go back to the old life.

The doctor made an examination and said that there was no hope for Raoul, who called continually for Aimee. Fifi hastened to her cottage, and in spite of Aimee's protests, forced her to come to her dying husband's bedside. The change for the better was so marked when Raoul quieted down with his arm around Aimee, that the doctor cheerfully said that there was now a chance for his life. Fifi determined that Aimee should stay there to save him.

Running to the cottage, she found the lieutenant waiting for Aimee to start to Paris. She told him that Aimee had to stay with her husband, and suggested that he take her to Paris instead. At first astonished, he agreed, for she, too, was a pretty woman. As they were leaving, Dubois with Fifi's bag, they passed the chateau, and Aimee saw them from the window. She looked at the lieutenant and then at Raoul, and, with a moan, fell on her knees by the bed and buried her head in the covers, while her husband's hand tenderly stroked her hair. Fifi had made her final sacrifice.

BROWNIE AS

"How I got into the Movies" told by th

By Marj

THE sort of a girl to whom nothing much ever happens" is the modest way in which Brownie Vernon once described herself to an interviewer. Yet her record as a picture actress shows that she rose from the obscurity of playing "atmosphere" to leads in less than eight months, and this with no previous stage experience, dramatic school training, or any professional ancestry behind her. Merit, pure and simple, the habit of doing things better than the next one, aided by an appealing little face and a pair of the loveliest brown eyes in pictures, put Brownie Vernon in the proud position she occupies today—that of a Bluebird star whose appearances are eagerly awaited by an ever-growing public.

There may be no sensational episodes in her career, but there is certainly plenty of interest. "Brownie" is a nickname which was given to the little girl when she was a tiny thing, because of the immense eyes which were the first thing any one who looked at her always saw. Her godfathers and her godmothers in her baptism thought that "Agnes" was just the right cognomen for the baby girl, who was the pride and joy of her mother's heart. But they soon found that the dignified, not to say saintly, cognomen, was anything but appropriate to the little witch, who had ways of her own of "getting round" everybody in the family and achieving what she wanted. As she grew older, Brownie kept on developing this faculty of getting her desires fulfilled in a quiet little, sweet little way of her own. She always seemed to be perfectly ready to do what the other person wanted, and the other person seldom realized until afterwards, that Brownie's way had been the one that everyone followed.

Brownie was born in the state of Oregon, twenty-two years ago, and she is the authority for saying that there was nothing particularly interesting about her childhood.

"I was perfectly normal," she says, "I went to school and played with dolls, and had an occasional spanking just to break the monotony of my life. After a while, we went to Chicago, where I was sent to a convent school. We seem to have moved about a good deal when I was a little girl, for later we were established in Kansas City, where I attended another convent school, until I was considered 'finished.' Then we came out West again.

"I had always had a sneaking desire for the other side of the footlights. I daresay that every girl has, at one time or another. But my people had never been connected with the stage in any way, and of course, they would not have considered it for a moment. Probably it would have died a natural death, if chance had not taken us, one day, to visit Universal City.

"The very minute I saw a scene in rehearsal I knew that I had found the life of all others for me. I daresay every girl who goes there thinks the same thing, but really, in my case, it was an intense conviction. My mind was all made up on the spot, and it only remained to convince my mother that this was a serious proposition and not the daydream of a stage-struck girl.

"At first she was absolutely against it. Then I decoyed her out there again, and she began to see its advantages. She realized the reasonable hours of the actors, and their out-of-door existence. The chance of living, as she expressed it, 'like a Christian instead of traipsing all over the country,' gradually converted her to the idea of letting me try my luck. I had no influence, and no introductions, no stage experience—nothing at all but a consuming desire, and a very firm determination to keep on asking until I got what I wanted. I really don't see, now, how I had the nerve to think that I could possibly succeed, but after some agonizing days, in which I vibrated between faint hope and black despair, I finally succeeded in getig my name on the 'extra' list of Universal City. Of course, I ally had no idea of what I was going in for! Why, the year be- re, I had been in a convent! But if some magic vision had revealed y future in one flash, I should have chosen just the same. Pictures e a real career and worth one's best efforts.

"I seem to have been born under a lucky star, or something, for in short time I was playing leads in the Nestor company. It was st eight months, to be exact—I remember my first lead, you see. en I did a lot of work with Herbert Rawlinson, and people were id enough to say that we made an ideal couple! Last fall, I was nsferred to Bluebird, to play with Franklyn Farnum. Our first ture, 'The Man From Somewhere,' was released in November, d since then life has just been one Bluebird after another, and I ve enjoyed them all."

Brownie's specifications include a slender figure, five feet five hes tall and one hundred and fourteen pounds in weight—a rming profile—a slow, insinuating smile—a lot of fair hair—and a pair of eyes that any poet might be pleased to write a sonnet to. She does everything that even a screen actress can be asked to do—rides, drives, runs a car, swims, dives, dances, plays any and every game, and will perform stunts with the best of the daredevils if the director says so. She jumped out of a third-story window, to put a punch in a picture, one time, and in another she dived off the deck of a steamer into the ocean. She understands the art of wearing clothes, and as one of her admirers said the other day, "She wears the sort of thing that a real girl would wear."

If she were not a screen actress, she would probably be an interior decorator, for she has definite and sometimes revolutionary ideas on house arrangement. Her hobby of hobbies is a pretty bedroom.

"A screen actress has not very much time to herself, as it is," she says, "and when she has a few hours, she should spend them resting in the prettiest, brightest surroundings. Everything about her should suggest cheerful thoughts. What is the use of resting the body if you do not rest the mind at the same time? Haven't you lain in bed and just worried yourself into a nervous fit, because one of the pictures on the wall was crooked, or because the pattern of the wallpaper made faces at you? A girl's room should suggest all that is dainty and simple. Nothing rests me so well as an hour in my charming room, which is all in soft French gray, without anything fussy. I put on a pretty negligee, and lie at perfect ease, conscious that I look really nice, and am as much of a credit to my surroundings as they are to me. I could not rest a moment in an untidy, shabby room, or if I had on a hideous wrapper, or curl papers, or anything like that. Mother heartily agrees, and I am afraid she deserves most of the credit for keeping my retreat in apple pie order, for you know time is the very most precious thing that a busy screen actress possesses."

The "double exposure" effect in the centre of the page shows Brownie as she posed for a trailer to the Animated Weekly, with Priscilla Dean and Dorothy Phillips, as an aid to recruiting and the sale of Liberty bonds. Brownie stood very erect on one side as a "Jackie," with Dorothy on the other as a "doughboy," and Priscilla in the middle, as Columbia. The masked figure which appears behind her, holding the gun, is not the shadow of her past, but a character study from a coming Bluebird on which she is now at work, and which is called by the suggestive title "The Fourth Glove." It looks as though Brownie were going to play the role of a crook for the first time in her life, but judging from appearances she is going to get away with it.

This Bluebird will be the first to be directed by the new man, Elmer Clifton, who has just been put in charge of the company of which Brownie and Franklyn Farnum are the stars. They will continue to appear in comedy-dramas of the type which has made them both popular favorites.

SUCCESSFUL

WEBSTER THEATRE

The Webster Theatre, New York, and its Manager, H. Pollack.

ONE of the successful exhibitors in New York who is using Bluebirds as frequently as the program will allow, and is rebooking and holding them over two weeks and trying in every way possible to keep this meritorious brand before his public, is H. Pollack, manager of the corporation operating the Webster Theatre of New York. This house is a new one, situated at 157th street and Webster avenue, seating 900, with a very attractively arranged lobby, screen and auditorium, and an airdome adjoining.

In spite of the fact that he is surrounded by houses much larger than his, most of which charge only five and ten cents, he has made a lot of money this year in booking attractions after all of the other houses in his locality have played them, and charging higher prices than they have done. This is possible through careful attention to the comforts of an audience, and in his creating the conviction that every time they come to the Webster Theatre they are going to see a good show. It also is due to the fact that Mr. Pollack understands advertising for his locality. On all of his big Bluebird productions he uses anywhere from twenty to thirty 24-sheet stands especially printed in block type for him. He also places 500 half-sheet window cards, and sends out an announcement to a mailing list of 500 preferred names, and 1,500 on the general list. He also gets out a beautiful program with a rotogravure cover. The one that came to our hand the other day contained three Bluebirds, as fellows: Monday, Dorothy Phillips in "The Flashlight" Wednesday, Dorothy Phillips in "A Doll's House;" Thursday, Franklyn Farnum in "Bringing Home Father," with Brownie Vernon, and on Friday and Saturday he played "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" as a special attraction. In spite of the fact that it had played at almost all of the large houses which surround him, Mr. Pollack charged a straight admission of ten cents in all parts of the house, and literally turned them away for two days. Saturday morning he had a special school children's matinee at 10:45 and this also was overcrowded.

So successful have been his children's matinees that he has made a feature of them, and holds one every two weeks. For the next one he will play either Ella Hall in "The Little Orphan" or "A Kentucky Cinderella." Both of these have been passed by the Federation of Women's Clubs Committee, which Mr. Pollack asks to look at all of the pictures intended for exhibition at this children's matinee, and it only depends on booking conditions which one he will have on July 4th. "A Little Orphan" has already played the house and is due for a rebooking.

Mr. Pollack incidentally has been in the moving picture business eight years; in fact, ever since there was any moving picture business. It is interesting to note also that he is the first customer of the Universal after they broke away and became what was later known as the Independent. He was at that time operating the Van Buren Theatre in Brooklyn, and later the Murray Hill Theatre in Flushing. That was a little over three and a half years ago, and ever since that time he has been taking the service from the exchange manager who happened to be operating the Universal exchange at that time. When S. B. Kramer became manager of the Bluebird he was only too glad to take the opportunity of booking Bluebirds, and with his rebookings which are very frequent, he has probably run as many Bluebirds as any exhibitor in this territory. He is a great disciple of rebookings.

Another evidence of Mr. Pollack's progressiveness is the close touch he keeps with the various organizations in his territory for the betterment of the industry and of the protection of the youth of Yorkville. In addition to his regular Saturday morning juvenile show he has contracted for a show at the Webster Theatre on Wednesday morning, July 4, from 10:45 to 12:30. The Board of Education has given its sanction for the performance, and the picture to be shown, Ella Hall in "The Little Orphan," has been duly viewed and approved by the Yorkville branch of the National Juvenile Motion Picture Board, Mrs. Adele F. Hayward, president, and Mrs. Robert S. Mullen, chairman. These two ladies will act as a committee of guardians for the children on that day, and they will be assisted by a delegation of boy scouts under the direction of their scout master.

NEVER A COMPLAINT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen—In regard to your "Bluebird" program, beg to state that I have been using it since it was wrapped in swaddling clothes and can truthfully say that I have never had a complaint of a bad picture produced by your company, and I attribute a great deal of my success to the splendid pictures which you have produced and which I have had the profit of showing.

Your organization at Oklahoma City, that is, Mr. Sam Benjamin, who is manager of your office, in my opinion is a great asset to your wonderful organization, for the simple reason that Mr. Benjamin is an untiring worker and is always ready to put himself out to accomodate his exhibitors. He is loyal to his "Bluebirds" and his word is as good as his bond. Many exchangemen, in my opinion, make a grievous mistake by throwing a good account up for some mushroom exhibitor on account of their offering a little more money, not realizing that this fly-by-night exhibitor cannot last long in the business. But this is not the case with Mr. Benjamin. When he opened up my account he had a great many other exhibitors come to him and try to undermine me and get the Bluebird pictures, saying that it was impossible for me to last on account of not being in the right location and off the main drag, but his faith in me was unshaken and he would not listen to them.

As I have said before, I have used the Bluebirds for fifteen months and believe them as good, if not better, than any program produced today; and I say this without any favoritism whatever, but simply because it is a business proposition with me to use the program that is most consistent in my success.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) W. S. BELLINGS, Mfg.

"A LIMB OF SATAN"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama. Written by Elizabeth Mahoney and produced by Ruth Stonehouse, who also plays the leading role. The history of a lovable waif and her self-sacrificing crime.

Naida will not tell her story in the Children's Court.

CAST.

Naida	Ruth Stonehouse
Giovanni	Jack Dill
Hugh Converse	Chester Bennett
Mrs. Converse	Mrs. Witting
Mrs. Westlake	Mrs. Pratt
Mr. Westlake	Wadsworth Harris
Matron	Martha Maddox

RUTH STONEHOUSE has relinquished the director's authority for the present, and is working under the direction of Louis Chaudet. But before she did so, she produced this Gold Seal three-reel picture, called "A Limb of Satan," from a scenario by Elizabeth Mahoney. Ruth plays the role of the terror of the orphan asylum, who is returned with thanks every time that she is adopted, and finally runs away with an Italian, who makes a precarious living as a strolling musician. How love comes into her life, causing her to commmit a crime to help the man to whom she has become devoted, and how everything comes out right in the end, makes a charming picture.

Naida, the terror of the orphan asylum, has been adopted three times on probation and each time returned "with thanks." The superintendent is about wild because of the pranks played on the visitors and the other childden by Naida. When Mrs. Westlake comes to the orphanage, Naida ruins her chances at the Westlake home.

Unknown to the heads of the institution, Giovanni Rossi, a strolling musician, comes each day to play for Naida, and the two become fast friends. Finally Naida tells him of her loathing for the asylum and begs him to take her with him. Naida slips from bed one night, and with her few clothes tied in a bundle, climbs over the fence to the patiently waiting Giovanni.

Two years later, Giovanni is rapidly failing in health, and one day Naida returns to find her only friend dead. Stunned with grief, the child is in no condition to be bothered by a truant officer, a sharp-nosed woman, who tries to force Naida to enter a home.

Hugh Converse, overtaken by blindness just at the beginning of his career as a sculptor, is now totally dependent on his loving mother. Late one evening Mrs. Converse opens the door of a side entrance and finds Naida on the step, almost asleep. Mrs. Converse, following the suggestion of Hugh, urges the child to enter the house. Naida tells the story of her escape from the policeman and the truant officer and, realizing her youth, these two kind people decide to take care of her until a home can be found for her.

Weeks later, Naida and Hugh, having become close, confidential friends, the child questions him as to whether his eyes could be made well again if he had enough money and, being answered in the affirmative, she determines to get that much-needed money. She responds to an advertisement for a maid at the Westlake home, and some time afterward, robs Mr. Westlake of five hundred dollars, which he has locked in a table drawer. Then getting a public stenographer to write a note without any address, Naida sends the money to Hugh by a messenger boy.

The loss is discovered and the detective questions all the servants and finds a carbon copy of the note in Naida's pocket. She confesses to stealing the money, but resolutely refuses to tell to whom she sent it. In the juvenile court, the problem is taken up. In the hospital where Hugh has

A KIDNAPPED heiress figures importantly in "The Reed Case," the newest Butterfly feature, and this affords the exhibitor an opportunity to put over a very novel teaser campaign.

On an ordinary wagon, place a triangular sign-board with the following legend painted in bold letters:

> I will pay $5,000 reward to the man, woman or child furnishing information that will lead to the discovery of the whereabouts of my kidnapped daughter, Helen Reed. For complete information apply at (address of theatre here).

Have your printer set up a newspaper item, scare head and all, telling of the kidnapping of Helen Reed, daughter of a millionaire, and of the father's offer of a reward for information leading to the return of his daughter. The man in charge of the "Make-It-Pay" Department at your Universal exchange, will be glad to work this story up for you and prepare it for the printer.

The story should be set in one column width and the address of the man offering the reward should be the address of your house. Print enough of these to thoroughly cover the neighborhood. Naturally all this should be done several days in advance of the showing of this Butterfly, so that when you finally come out with your advertisements on "The Reed Case," the public will at once connect the teaser campaign up with your presentation of the feature.

Should you consider the wagon sign board too expensive, a substitute idea that would do almost as well consists in having a sandwich man stroll around with the notice above painted on his fore-and-aft signs.

CANADIAN NOTES.

TORONTO, Ont.—Mr. R. S. Peck, who is succeeding Mr. Cambridge in charge of the Publicity Department of the Canadian Universal Film Company, has lately been doing special advertising work for the Toronto Daily News. He is well known in newspaper circles throughout Ontario, having held editorial positions on a number of leading Ontario dailies, as well as American papers.

For the past few years he has been devoting time to sales work in automobile field, both in Canada and the United States, though he is Canadian by birth.

The possibilities of the motion picture industry attracted Mr. Peck's attention so much that he decided to break into the game through the medium of the above position. No doubt with his ability and enthusiasm he will be a big success in the business.

G. A. Margetts, of the St. John office of the Universal Film Co succeeded in booking "The Gray Ghost" at the Strand Theatre in Halifax.

Mr. A. A. Huttlemayer, proprietor of the Queen's Theatre, Niagara Falls, spent a few days in Toronto on business recently. Mr. Huttlemayer says that business in Niagara Falls has been splendid.

Mr. Franklin of Halifax was a recent visitor at the Universal Film Co.'s Montreal office. Mr. Franklin did not lose much time in booking "The Gray Ghost" serial, as he has always been a Universal booster and believes that Universal serials are in a class by themselves.

HALIFAX, N. S.—Business in Halifax keeps up and the raise in prices does not seem to affect exhibitors.

ST. JOHNS, N. B.—As the weather has shown signs of warming up, the attendance in the theatres here has a tendency to drop off; for the month of May is reported to be the best month they have had in years, owing to the fact that the weather was much cooler than usual.

The "Voice on the Wire" has been booked to the London and St. John Opera House. This serial has also been booked in Liverpool, Shelburne and Joggin Mines in Nova Scotia during this week. A number of other exhibitors are inquiring for dates.

The Bijou Dream Theatre, Bigby, N. S., has booked Bluebirds for regular runs, also the Peoples Theatre, Yarmouth, N. S. Universal offices at St. John also report considerable increase in business.

MONTREAL, Que.—The New Holman Theatre, opened here recently with seating capacity of 1,032, charging 10 cents and 20 cents Paramount Pictures, Universal Current Events, have been booked by manager, Geo. Rotsky.

OTTAWA, Ont.—A party of nineteen from Government House visited the Imperial Theatre to witness the presentation of Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter."

WINNIPEG, Man. — The Monarch Theatre, Winnipeg, recently booked the Bluebird Feature, "Bugler of Algiers," prices for this production were raised and Mr. Morton, the Monarch manager, reports that he did excellent business with this feature. This he attributes to the fact that he gave it extensive advetrising. He says he wishes all his feature productions would do as well.

BROCKVILLE, Ont.—The new theatre, which has been run by Nugent & Morton, has been closed indefinitely, no reason given.

son never overdoes a part that is so often ruined by screen actors. The directing of Jack Conway is of the best and the lighting effects and photographphy fine. The entire cast was well chosen and admirably suited to the characters."— Morning Telegraph.

"Upon this tense state of affairs the plot of "Come Through" begins to thicken. The action speeds up, the meledrama thrills, there is a veritable murrain of events. Through it all the romance struggles, strengthens and eventually scintilates with success. Mr. Herbert Rawlinson, who has the role of Jimmy, is the featured player. His performance is intelligent and forceful; an interesting young actor."—N. Y. American.

"The main virture of "Come Through," aside from the exquisite minutiae of the detail of its technical photographic side, lies in its originality. To begin with, as the advertisements boast with reason, it was not called "Hands up!" . . . For a burglar who goes straight without indulging in "dese, dose and dems," to prove that he has been a burglar, Herbert Rawlinson as the hero does surpassingly well . . . The plot? Tut, tut, and again tut. Who would spoil the effect of those beautiful ads? Its there, and you get it all right, and the auto gets there in time, and the Big Fight lasts longer and stays realistic longer than any stage fight ever seen before, and so why worry? Come through, yourself!"—Evening Sun.

"We can go no further than to say that this feature, revealed at the Broadway last night, is the best screen melodrama the Broadway has seen this season, and a whole lot better than most of those we have seen recently in other photoplay houses.—" Evening Mail.

"At the Broadway the latest and best crook play of the films is "Come Through." It fairly vibrates with thrills and quick action."—Evening Telegram.

"The Universal Film Company with the skilled assistance of George Bronson Howard, has turned out a vivid and thrilling screen story with realism in every foot of the film. The underworld of the movies is even more realistic that the lower stratum of such plays as "Kick In" and "Cheating Cheaters."—N. Y. World.

"In an advance announcement of the photodrama, dramatic critics are invited to come through with their opinions, but one is appalled by so much cleverness and is almost inclined to cry "Hands up!" Certain it is that no one will cry "Thumbs down," for the new picture is all that it is claimed to be and then some. What the audience will know is that they are being thrilled and kept on the edge of their seats, figuratively speaking, for two hours. It would be difficult to find a better hero than Herbert Rawlinson. Of course, being a George Bronson Howard hero, he had to be a sort of Raffles; but he reforms so nicely and dances so devinely that no one, not even his wife, remembers that he once owned several aliases. To use up the allotment of adjectives, the cast is excellent, the story novel, the exteriors extremely attractive, and the lighting wonderful."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Remarkably thrilling—wonderfully entertaining—the best suspense drama New York has seen in years, not forgetting a charming love story entwined throughout."—N. Y. Journal.

LIBERTY

Read what Mr. J. A. Lemke, of the Crystal Theatre, Waco, Texas, says about "LIBERTY."

"This wonderful serial is undoubtedly the greatest picture for drawing power that has ever been offered to the public. AFTER HAVING SHOWN IT TO CAPACITY HOUSES AT ITS FIRST SHOWING WE ARE AGAIN REPEATING OUR FORMER EXPERIENCE. It makes us feel good to see the same big crowds turning out to see this picture as we were in the habit of seeing last summer. We have come to the conclusion to ask one question and answer it with the same words: WHAT'S THE USE OF BUYING FIRST-RUN PICTURES WHEN GOOD REPEATERS WILL GET MORE MONEY."

Anything we might add to this letter, Mr. Exhibitor, would be anti-climax.

NEAL HART in

"DOUBLE SUSPICION"

A STORY of the affection between a young man and an old, which makes them each try to take the blame for a crime which neither in reality has committed, is told in this Bison two-reel picture, "Double Suspicion," which was written and produced by George Marshall, with a scenario by George Hively. Neal Hart is the younger man, and George Berrell the older, and there is lots of riding and shooting, a daredevil fall by Joe Rickson, who plays a typical badman.

Neal, the sheriff of Red Rock County, is trapped by a gang of cattle rustlers. He is fighting desperately when his partner, Pop, comes on him. Pop manages to draw the fire of the rustlers and enables Neal to escape. Neal does not like the action of the old man and tells him so, although he appreciates the fact that Pop risked his own life to save him.

In an adjacent town, Joe is chased out of a building which he has robbed and, in the getaway, he wounds one of the men. He escapes and arrives at his near-by camp, where his wife and baby are. Quickly harnessing a horse, he drives out with the wagon and eludes his pursuers. Several days later, Joe arrives at Red Rock. Leaving his wife, who is almost without food, Joe goes to the saloon and starts gambling with the money stolen in the other town.

Neal comes on the wife and, knowing her to be a stranger, asks if there is anything he can do. She tells him about Joe's gambling the money. Neal orders Joe out of the saloon.

Neal tells the proprietor of the store that he has a package coming on the stage that night for Pop's birthday. The storekeeper gives Neal a key to the store, telling him that he will leave the package where Neal can get it. That night Joe breaks into the store. After Pop and Neal have retired, Neal gets up, satisfies himself that Pop is asleep and starts for the store to get the package. Pop, however, wakes and decides to follow him. He approaches and hides.

Neal gets the package and leaves, but Pop, hiding behind some of the buildings, does not see him leave. Pop then goes to the front of the store to see what Neal is doing. Joe, barely visible in the store, is robbing the safe. Pop sees the figure of Joe through the window, and believes it is Neal and that he has taken this method to obtain money, which they need to develop their mine. Pop enters the store and places some of his things conspicuously near the safe so that the blame for the robbery will be placed on him. He then leaves town.

The next morning the robbery is discovered and Neal is sent for. He notices that Pop has not returned during the night. Going to the store he is shown the evidence against Pop and comes to the conclusion that the old man is guilty. A little later Neal finds Pop in the mountains, and he surrenders. Pop is down-hearted, as he can hardly believe that Neal is arresting him for a crime which he himself committed.

Arriving at the town, Neal suddenly takes off his badge and releases Pop, telling the men that he resigns on the spot. He and Pop jump on their horses and ride away. Shortly afterward, a posse from the town originally robbed by Joe, come upon Joe's trail in the mountains and give chase. Pop and Neal cut across to head Joe off. They get into a fight, in which Joe is shot. They find on his body the package of money taken from the Red Rock store, and both realize that the other is not guilty. The posse comes up and decides to take Joe to Red Rock.

After explanations Neal is again made sheriff. He learns that there is a large reward for Joe's capture. They decide to divide the reward with Joe's wife and Neal assures her that she will be taken care of. Returning to the cabin, Pop finds the birthday package under his bunk, where Neal had placed it. Neal reminds him that it is his birthday.

CARTER DeHAVEN in "Kicked Out"

"KICKED Out" is the suggestive title of this Victor two-reel comedy, which was written by Harry Wulze and produced by the comedian, Carter De Haven. A young reporter loves a girl, but her father does not appreciate him. However, he tells the cub that if he can secure an interview with the richest man in the world, with pictures, the girl is his. Carter gets the interview, and then he gets kicked out, and there are some laughs in the process which no one wants to miss.

Carter calls on the girl's father and asks for her hand, but the father refuses until Carter proves himself worthy. Carter is sent to get an interview with one John Dollar, notorious for his hatred for all things connected with newspapers. Carter is delighted and goes to tell his girl.

While there, his kodak unconsciously snaps a picture of Carter and the editor's wife, and the kodak later comes into the hands of the editor, who orders the film developed and brought to his home that evening.

Carter has a hard time getting into the house of Dollar, but finally does so in a laundry basket. He is caught and hurriedly ejected. Later he overhears a plot to kidnap Dollar. Carter calls the police, then single-handed he collars the crooks and their prey in a limousine and drives them quickly into the very yard of the jail, where the crooks are captured and Dollar is rescued. Dollar, out of gratitude, offers Carter anything he wants, and Carter at once demands an interview.

He gets it and then hurries to the editor's house with his scoop. The editor is pleased and Carter gets the girl, but even as they embrace, a clerk arrives with the printed kodak picture. This proves to be Carter's undoing, for before he can explain, the editor grabs him and throws him outdoors and Carter finds himself alone with the "welcome" doormat under his arm. There he is with a wonderful interview and no place to print it.

"Keep the Movies Moving"

From the "Rocky Mountain News" Denver, Colorado.

IT would not aid in winning battles for the nation to go about in sackcloth and ashes; in fact, such a step would be a hindrance to the cause upon which all good citizens are united. To give a proper account of itself the nation must be in tune, mentally, spiritually and physically, to render true account in the great exigency. A nation in the dumps will look at things with a distorted vision.

All of which preamble brings us to the focal point that innocent amusement must not be blackballed at this time, either by government or public opinion. This applies most particularly to the cosmopolitan "movie," which affords a delight to the million every day, which is instructive and educational as well. An ill-advised movement is on foot in the East to close picture theatres during the summer.

As a matter of fact, psychologically patent, in times like this the people crave amusement — we had almost written "excitement." We all are living in a tenser state. The contagion of the battle front is over all the world and the ocean is no insulator. We are feeling now the ups and downs of the supreme effort being made on another continent, and daily it is coming closer and still closer until the angel of death will be soon hovering at the door.

It is necessary that there should be release from the tension and this can be had, we believe, better for the many from the screen than anything that we know of. The moving picture is not a burden upon the mentality. It appeals to the average intelligence. The man who has been under strain loves the relaxation offered. We have this testimony from Great Britain and France. In these countries cheap amusements are encouraged as good for the people. This summer the American will be in need of popular presentations through the most modern art.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS FOR "THE CAR OF CHANCE"

THIS story concerns a happy-go-lucky young chap who absolutely refuses to take life seriously—until "the girl" gives him the much-needed incentive. As a result of his care-free ways his legacy from his millionaire father's estate is an automobile and $500, to be expended for gasoline only. This situation presents an opportunity for a stunt that should arouse the desired curiosity.

Get a young man to drive a car about the streets of your town. Arrange with the police department so that he may wear a black hood or mask. On the wind shield have a sign reading:

TAKE "THE CAR OF CHANCE"
TO THE (name) THEATRE
(day and date) ONLY!

Have banners on the sides and rear reading:

If you have jitneys in your town, co-operation will help you. Get them cards for their windshields similar to the one above. Have them use them as it will mean increased business for both of you.

When not plying the streets, have your own car stand in front of your theatre. When a crowd collects have your driver rush out, look hastily about him, jump in his car and drive speedily away. Do this with just a suggestion of mystery.

The attached letter to all the names on your mailing list will help you put "The Car of Chance" over in a way that will bring you big returns!

My Dear Friend—If Arnold Baird had not been made of "the right stuff" he surely would have started down the toboggan of life when his legacy from a millionaire father's estate proved to be an automobile and $500 worth of gasoline.

But that's where "the girl" saved the day. With his legacy Arnold broke up a traction strike, secured fair treatment for a host of underpaid workmen, made a fortune for himself—and won the girl of his choice!

It's a great story—"The Car of Chance"—and it is well played. Franklyn Farnum as Arnold Baird gives a vivid portrayal of this happy-go-lucky young chap, and Brownie Vernon simply could not be more charming as Ruth Bennett, "the girl" of Arnold's choice. You will like "The Car of Chance" so remember the day (day and date).

HEARTS AND FLOUR" is the title of this L-Ko, and the director is Dick Smith, upon whose work the L-Ko head, J. G. Blystone, cast an approving eye from time to time. When two men love the same girl, there's bound to be trouble, and when they are employed in the same general store, and she is the boss's daughter, you can see that all the necessary complications for a first-class intrigue are on hand.

Like all ambitious young men, the grocer boy loved the boss's daughter. So did the butcher boy, but Eva favored the former. When she showed her preference too plainly, it started a fight, in which the stock of the store suffered severely. The boss checked the fray just as it was becoming exciting, and they went reluctantly back to work. The minister comes in to ask for a subscription, and the boss, giving him one, drops his roll, which the grocer boy finds for him. Some gossips come into the store and stay so long that the boys let loose a mouse from the trap to drive them away. This succeeds splendidly, and the boss is pleased with the grocer boy, so the other decided to get even. When the boss carries out a bag of flour on his back, Tom cuts a hole in it, and it all pours out. He then blames Ryck. The boss goes into the refrigerator, and Tom shuts him in, letting him out when he is nearly frozen and saying that Ryck did it. Both fall on Ryck and beat him up, but the girl explains the truth.

Tom is sent out to deliver the orders. Ryck fixes the wagon so that on the hill the horse breaks away from it. The wagon runs down-hill and is knocked to bits by an auto. Tom returns almost dead. but a small boy has seen Ryck tampering with the wagon and tells on him. So the boss and Tom beat him up again.

Ryck and Eva have planned an elopement, and he puts a ladder up to her window for her to climb out on. Pa sees them, but Ryck ties him to the tail of a huge kite, cuts the string, and Pa falls into the field. Ryck and Eva are just getting out of the window, when pa takes away the ladder. There is a fight, but Ryck succeeds in getting away with the girl. Tom and the boss follow them. Ryck and Eva are in a buggy, and the others in a car. They are arrested for speeding. Ryck manages to exchange the buggy for a car, grabs the minister, and makes him marry them, while the disappointed Tom beans the boss with a flower-pot.

"A Soldier of the Legion"

Here is one of the cleverest novelties ever filmed. It is a story within a story, that can be told only in pictures. Two needy writers evolve a tale of "A Soldier of the Legion," and choose for their heroine the maid of all work. They transform her into an Oriental Princess, and tell the story of her romance with a soldier of France. How his commander, thrilled by her beauty to forgetfulness of his honor, attempts to kidnap her, makes great entertainment.

A Fine Picture That You Can Feature

HERBERT RAWLINSON

Supported by Neva Gerber

Handsome Herbert Rawlinson wakes with an "awful head." The telephone bell rings and a friend informs him that he is forever disgraced. Herbert is too miserable to care, but when a half dozen others tell him the same, he begins to worry. Then when he gets to the street he is arrested and taken away on a train, handcuffed to an officer. He continues to worry about the awful crimes he has committed.

"CAUGHT IN THE ACT"

Directed by T. N. Heffron

On the train is his sweetheart, and though she does not know what it is all about, she helps Herbert to escape. There is a fast and furious fight, and a lot of tense situations as well as some good comedy, before the affair is straightened out and we learn that it is a case of mistaken identity. A very pleasing picture that will be well received. Book through your nearest Universal Exchange.

HE GETS THE MONEY.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City:

Gentlemen—Received your letter of the 7th inst., in regard to showing "The Voice on the Wire" to a tremendous crowd which is correct, but Mr. Dodge is misinformed in stating that this is the first Universal serial I have ever run, because I have shown them all and am repeating "Liberty." I think that is going some.

I also use the complete Universal program, as I am a strong believer in the short program for getting the money.

When I say getting the money I mean profits.

I am showing "Liberty" a second time and am cleaning up. I am always on the job. When there is any money to be gotten out of a serial, I get it. Yours truly, JOS. SINKL,

"MEET MY WIFE."

Victor Comedy.

Written and produced by George Marshall.
Scenario by Karl Coolidge.

CAST.

Neal	Neal Hart
Violet	Mignon Anderson
Bill	Bill Gillis
Skeeter	Bud Osborn
Pete	Pedro Leon
Jack	Jack Walters
Tom	Tom Grimes
Joe	Joe Rickson

While the boys of the Flying W and Circle C are fighting, Neal sits behind the desk in the hotel and reads poetry. Violet arrives with a tale of woe, and every one of the boys falls for it. She relieves them of all their money, but each thinks himself the only contributor. Neal thinks Violet his ideal, and is inspired by reading Lochinvar to try to steal her. The boys arrange a championship fight, the loser who represents one side, to stay away from Violet. Bill and Skeeter are selected. They commence to train. Violet's brother arrives and goes to her room. She tells him that she is sick of this business of cheating and lying, but he insists upon her going through with it. He offers to train the boys for the fight. He is a real pugilist, and they prevail upon him to take Skeeter's place. The big fight is staged, and while it is on, Neal grabs Violet and runs away with her. He ropes the minister and makes him marry them. When the boys appear he calmly tells them "Meet my wife!"

"MINDING THE BABY."

Nestor Comedy.

Written by Fred Palmer.
Produced by Roy Clements.

CAST.

Mr. Youngwed	Eddie Lyons
Mrs. Youngwed	Edith Roberts
The Janitor	Lee Moran

Mrs. Youngwed goes out, leaving hubby with the baby. The janitor comes up to turn on the water, and when the baby cries, Mr. Youngwed gets him to make faces for it. But baby goes on crying, and they consult the doctor book. While they are looking, the nigger baby from next door crawls in and their baby crawls out. They think that child has turned black and try all sorts of things. Mrs. Youngwed comes home, and is in despair, when the colored woman rushes in with the white baby and the mystery is solved.

Gentlemen—I really believe you are rendering the public a real service through your Animated Weekly. I feel that I am not only passing on the good work, but I know that I am profiting by so doing.

MY PATRONS ARE VERY FOND OF THE WEEKLY AND NEVER MISS A SINGLE ONE, SO THAT IT ENABLES ME TO BUILD UP MY PATRONAGE AND HOLD IT. This, I consider, is very good business.

Just as long as the Universal Weekly continues to get the real live news as it now does, it will convince me that I POSITIVELY CANNOT AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT IT EVERY WEEK.

With best wishes for your continued success,
I am, very truly yours,

7 Reasons Why YOU Should "START A BLUEBIRD DAY"

"We have shown practically every feature program on the market. At times the quality of these programs are wonderful. Then again they come pretty bad. They have no CONSISTENT quality. On the other hand, we haven't shown a single bad Bluebird in the last three months. Picture for picture, you are away above the others in quality. Bluebirds can be DEPENDED upon for quality that BRINGS OUR PHOTOPLAY PATRONS BACK." H. Schoenstadt & Sons, Theatrical Enterprises, Chicago.

"I have shown your Bluebirds in my theatre for some time and find them consistently good, and they always please my patrons, which is the best indication that I know of as to the absolute reliability of Bluebirds." Ida Aronson, Mgr. Cameraphone Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Allow me to congratulate you on one of the best features that I have ever rested my eyes upon, in your Bluebird subject, 'THE FLASHLIGHT,' which I am showing to-day. Photography excellent—scenes beautiful—the cast extra good, cannot be beat. I have never in my five years of business received so many compliments from my patrons as I have to-day on this subject." C. D. Haug, Mgr. Majestic & Rex Theatre.

"We played capacity business on the first day of showing 'A Jewel in Pawn' to 2,900 people, and on the second day, we had to stop selling tickets at 7:45. Business being so good that we re-booked it for a return engagement." Sam Bernstein, Mgr. Globe Theatre, Montreal.

"Thanks for 'A Doll's House.' A few more plays of this sort would, I feel certain, bring to the theatre new patronage, people that come to the theatre only for such plays as this. 'A Doll's House' attracted people to the Regent that I do not see often, if at all, or, as I heard a lady say, 'I have never been in here before.' If given enough publicity it would have played to capacity business both nights, and to a class of people that I would like to have attend the Regent a little more often." J. M. Connors, Mgr. Regent Theatre, Washington, Pa.

(Telegram)

"'MEASURE OF A MAN' ONE OF THE BEST MOST SATISFACTORY PRODUCTIONS SHOWN HERE FOR MANY MONTHS. PHOTOGRAPHY AND CAMERA WORK AMONG THE BIG TIMBER OF CALIFORNIA TRULY REMARKABLE. ALTHOUGH I HAVE SHOWN MANY PERSONALLY PICKED FEATURES EVERY WEEK, I CONSIDER THIS PRODUCTION WILL HOLD ITS OWN ALONG WITH MANY OF THE SO-CALLED SPECIALS, AS IT HAS BEEN SOME TIME SINCE MY PATRONS HAVE SO UNANIMOUSLY PRAISED A PICTURE AS THEY DID LAST NIGHT. PLEASE RUSH WINDOW CARDS AND ONE SHEET EXTRA ON 'WE ARE FRENCH.' THIS FEATURE PICKED BY LOCAL COMMITTEE HERE FOR RED CROSS BENEFIT NEXT THURSDAY." JOE YEAGER, Mgr. Raton, New Mexico.

"I have been using BLUEBIRDS about five months. I am showing Fine Arts, Fox, Vitagraph, K. L. E. S. Gold Roosters, and special features. I am more than pleased with your BLUEBIRDS. The stories, acting, settings and photography are excellent. I consider BLUEBIRDS among the best of my features. My patrons are very much pleased with them, and I find them an excellent box-office attraction. Give us more good stories like 'The Mysterious Mrs. M.,' 'Mutiny,' 'Polly Redhead,' 'The Clock,' 'Bringing Home Father' and 'A Doll's House.' Such stories are clean, and are sure to please the whole family. You have my permission to use this letter in any way you may desire. G. A. Loveland, Mgr. Odeon Theatre, Colorado Theatre, Colo.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Issue no. 27.

A demonstration of the evils of bad sitting postures while working at a desk is the first subject of the screen magazine, Issue No. 27. Exercises to counteract the bad effects of sedentary pursuits are shown. Then comes the manufacture of a baseball, from the winding of the heart of yarn, to the stamping of the trade-mark. The Screen Magazine has started a question department, which furnishes a lot of humor. Science is represented by a demonstration of the unsuspected properties of well-known substances. At the end is a clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins entitled, "The Vegetable Kingdom."

"MONKEY LOVE."

Powers Animated Cartoon Split Reel.

The flirt, a comely young lady monkey, tries to make monkeys of all the other animals in the jungle. The elephant, the leopard and all of them fall for her, but she loves another monkey. They are broken-hearted when she marries him, but their revenge is complete when they see him out walking with a whole row of little monkeys, and the cost of living going up

"IN THE ROCKS OF INDIA."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel.

Some of the wonderful rock carvings of India are shown in this educational. Temples cut from the solid rock and then adorned with sculptured elephants and lions are seen. The elephant has been a favorite subject with Indian sculptors for thousands of years. Some of the strange, many-armed gods are seen. Pilgrimages to famous shrines are caught by the camera. All Hindus love pilgrimages.

"THE PUNISHMENT."

Big U Western Drama.

Big Bill was down on his luck, and his family were starving. He rushed into the saloon where a game was in progress, and grabbed what money he could lay his hands on, taking it to his wife, and then trying to make his escape. The sheriff and the boys pursued and caught him. He accepted his fate, but when the boys saw the pitiful condition of his family, they relented, and decided to let him go. They even took up a subscription for his wife, sending her the money with a note to say that they had given Bill a chance to make good.

"HATTON OF HEADQUARTERS."

Imp Drama.

Written by Crawley and Maude.
Produced by Donald McDonald.

CAST.

Frank Hatton	Lee Hill
Big Tim	Charles Hill Mailes
Rose	Agnes Vernon
Slim	Clyde Benson

Rose refuses to work as a tool for the gang of which Big Tim is the leader. Her father has betrothed her to Tim, but she loves Hatton. Slim tells Tim about it, and the boss goes to her room. Frank Hatton, the detective who has rescued Rose, and whom she loves, is there, and she has just time to hide him. Tim tells her that his men are awtching for Frank, and that he intends killing him. Frank pounces on him, and there is a fight in which Tim is knocked senseless. Slim and the others come to the door, and Frank props the unconscious Tim in a chair, and lets them see his head through the door. Rose tells them he does not want to see them. After a while they become suspicious, and break down the door. There is an unequal fight, in the midst of which the police arrive.

Gale Henry in "KITCHINELLA."

Joker Comedy.

Written by C. B. Hoadley.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Kitchenella	Gale Henry
Count Jassbo	Milton Sims
His Confederate	Charles Haefli

Kitchenella has two stepsisters who are preparing for the Street Sweepers' ball. She wants to go, too. Count Jassbo has left a note of vital importance in the toe of one of a pair of old slippers, for his confederate Mike. The landlady throws the slippers out of the window, and Kitchenella finds them. She puts them on, takes the window curtains, and makes a gown out of them, using the workbasket for a hat. She goes to the ball. So do the count and Mike. They search the feet of every woman in the place, hunting for the slippers, but fail to find them. The next day the count puts an ad in the paper that he will marry the girl who has the mate of the slipper which he has found at the ball. Kitchenella had thrown it at her stepsister. She reads the ad, and rushes to meet the count. His confederate drops a brick on her head, and she collapses into the horse-trough, while the count beats it with the slipper.

Victor Comedy.

Written by W. Warren Schoene.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Miss Prued	Margaret Whistler
Mrs. Newlywed	Eileen Sedgwick
Mr. Newlywed	Ralph McComas
The Boss	Charles Haefli

Miss Prued refuses the boss of the paperhangers, so he refuses to finish his job. She promised the house to Mr. Newlywed, and he determines in order to have it ready in time, to do the papering himself. But the boss rushes in revenge to Mrs. Newlywed and tells her her husband is spending all his time with Miss Prued. Mrs. Newlywed rushes to the house, and finds her husband just changing into overalls. He tries to hide in the cupboard, but the overalls stick in the door, and she finds him. At last she is pacified by seeing the receipt for the rent.

First Again!

Again the Universal Animated Weekly scoops all other news Weeklies. Again the Universal presents to the American public the first moving picture in news form of Charles E. Hughes, Republican candidate for President. The first picture was taken in Washington on Sunday morning, June 11th, 1916, showing the Justice going to church with his family. Next, we scooped them all by securing and first showing the very first specially posed picture of him at the Hotel Astor on Monday morning, June 12th. Secured exclusively by the

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

We've scooped all other so-called News Weeklies so often that there's simply nothing to it. Rather than shoot the bull in the Trade Papers, the Universal Animated Weekly accomplishes first—then mentions it afterwards. You will never read a statement made by the Animated that isn't true. That's why the biggest moving picture theatres on Broadway, New York City, use the Universal Animated.

The Animated huge and original staff of correspondents and official cameramen in the war zone are still on the job sending in absorbing news of action from everywhere. Every week in the U Animated you will see FIRST, the most interesting news in pictures of the world's events. The novelty and variety of the U Animated has made it FIRST CHOICE in theatres throughout the land. Book it and play it up right and you'll find it a whale of a drawing card and Box Office attraction. Write your U Exchange or the Universal Animated Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

How Much Mone

(No. 139. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

The time has come for the exhibitor to pause a moment in his reckless expenditure of money and ask himself this question——

Where Do I Stand?

As I write, there lies before me a list containing the number of houses that closed their doors this last year. The figures for one city alone—Greater New York—reveal that more theatres went out of business during that period than at present exist in the states of New Mexico and Nevada combined!

Why did these theatres fail? Here is the answer——

Their Owners Forced Themselves Out of Business!

How many of you exhibitors are running your houses at the barest margin of profit?

How many of you are just about breaking even?——

How Many of You Are LOSING Money?

Here is the whole story in a nutshell. Never before has the exhibitor—running a big feature every day—paid so much for his shows. In spite of the occasional big business that comes as the result of some extra special subject, his feature rental bill is the millstone about his neck that has been dragging him down to financial death.

Last? Of course, it can't last. Even now exhibitors are awakening to the fact that a regular service show, advertised as aggressively as the feature show is advertised, will bring them as much business and at a lower rental cost. They are awakening to the true state of affairs and are going back to the diversified regular service that brought them the money.

The letters on the opposite page are representative of the hundreds that have reached me during the last month. They contain a message that YOU must take to heart, unless you desire YOUR house to be among those marked "CLOSED" on the License Bureau records next year.

Gentlemen:-

I agree with you on the fast that the public prefers the regular service show to features. I have tried both and have found that regular service makes more money for me.

Gentlemen:-

Several weeks ago we decided to discontinue our big feature policy and in place of the five-reel productions we began using the Universal's varied program.

Our attendance increased immediately and we are now doing twice as much business. This is ample proof that we are now giving our patrons what they like, or as we might better put it, what they demand, since our business during the feature policy was very discouraging.

Yours for Universal Success,

Manager.

Gentlemen:

I, too, think that the regular service is coming back to its own. Features made my house such a losing proposition that I decided to give the people what they want and therefore cancelled all features.

The public demands one, two and three reel subjects and I have acted wisely in catering to this demand.

Yours very truly,

"IN THE SEEKERS"

The Strange Case of Mary MacLaren

By Peter Pepper

DOZENS of moving picture stars have obtained their first opportunities in moving pictures in strange ways, but it is safe to say that no star before the public today has as unusual a story to tell of her first part as has Mary MacLaren, the star of the Bluebird photoplay, "Shoes," written and produced by Lois Weber.

Mary MacLaren is Lois Weber's discovery, and it is entirely due to her chance meeting with the totally inexperienced girl that a new screen star has risen in the photoplay firmament. The story reads like a fairytale, and in itself would make an extremely interesting photoplay if Lois Weber should ever be at a loss for a striking plot.

To go back to the beginning—Lois Weber, as every one knows, is the best known woman director of photoplays in the world, and as such she is the object of ceaseless solicitation for an opportunity to appear before the camera from a thousand different sources. Any one who can appear in a picture directed by the Smalleys is, indeed, lucky, and the hundreds of extras and would-be extras who besiege the gates of Universal City every day always cast longing eyes in the direction of Phillips Smalley and his wife, Lois Weber, and unless they take precautions they would find their time occupied for the most part in interviewing people who want to appear on the screen.

One of Lois Weber's most important discoveries.

There is quite a little walk between the garage where Lois Weber leaves her car, and her office in Universal City. Progress along this walk had come to be like running the gauntlet for Lois Weber until she discovered that if she were apparently occupied on this walk she was seldom interrupted. Even the boldest thought twice before interrupting the pursuit of genius. In this way, either writing or reading a book, Miss Weber contrived to escape interruption quite successfully.

One day during the early part of December, while she was practicing her usual defense against interruption, she had a strange feeling that there was some one near her whom she herself wanted to see. The feeling was so strong that she turned around and found herself face to face with a bevy of young girls.

Among them was one whose face arrested her attention immediately. There were others in the group, but she does not remember to this day a single face except that of Mary MacLaren. With her usual directness, she bowed to Mary and said: "Are you looking for work?"

"Yes, indeed; I have been here for several months, but have not been able to get a hearing with any one of the directors," said Mary, quite beside herself with agitation.

Mary MacLaren.

"Have you had any experience?"

"Not in pictures," said little Miss MacLaren, with a sinking heart, "but I danced one year at the Winter Garden in New York."

Miss Weber at the time was working on "John Needham's Double," and she managed to make a small part for Mary in this Bluebird photoplay. She gave her the part of a maid, and she took part in three or four scenes —a very inconspicuous part. Her part in "Where Are My Children?" was not much larger.

In Miss Weber's next play, "The Eye of God," there was no part for Mary MacLaren. Miss Weber tried to have Mary put on a regular salary as an extra in stock, but there seemed to be no demand for her services, and in spite of Miss Weber's own earnest endeavors not one of the directors at Universal City would give her a part. So it was some little time before she acted again.

In the meantime Lois Weber read the story of "Shoes" in Collier's Weekly, and as she read the story the face of Mary MacLaren fairly swam before her through the printed pages. She could not rest until Mr. Davis had bought the story for her, and she immediately started upon it

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

ANIMATED FILMS $2,000,000 SAN FRANCISCO FIRE.

ONE of the interesting pictures in the Animated this week is the scene showing the two million dollar fire on San Francisco's waterfront, in which a great deal of damage was done to shipping, docks, cargo, and many huge vessels were threatened. The Animated Weekly cameraman was aroused from a well-deserved sleep at 2:15 in the morning to get this picture, and half an hour after the start of the fire he was on the job. The fire burned for almost four hours after he reached the scene.

PRESIDENT WILSON MARCHES AHEAD OF FLAG DAY PARADE.

THE President of the United States marching at the head of a parade is enough to interest any Animated Weekly cameraman, even during a period when parades are extremely prevalent. This unusual spectacle took place at Washington, D. C., when President Wilson headed the thousands of government employees engaged in the Flag Day parade, the number of people being made possible through the day having been declared a holiday throughout Washington. The Animated Weekly has an excellent close-up view of President Wilson, both at the head of the Parade, making the address; Secretary Lansing, several views of the parade itself, and the meeting held in the shadow of the Washington Monument.

POWERFUL BATTLESHIP PLACED IN COMMISSION.

THE ceremonies incident to putting a gigantic battleship into commission are interestingly portrayed in the Universal Animated Weekly this week. Incidentally it may be stated that any views of the United States troops or war vessels have to be submitted to Washington, and passed upon there before they are released. The pictures of the super-dreadnaught Pennsylvania, the most powerful battleship afloat, being placed in commission, were submitted to Washington, and were duly passed by the censors there. The scenes show the ship tying up at the Navy Yard, the crew coming aboard with their baggage and outfit, Admiral McLean boarding the vessel with due ceremony, a mass formation of the officers, bluejackets and marines, Captain Henry B. Wilson reading his orders, and Commander F. E. Ridgely. Then the interesting scenes incident upon the ceremony of placing a battleship in commission are shown in full, after which the Admiral and his party leave the ship.

The ceremonies took place at the United States Navy Yard at Norfolk, Va. The vessel had just been brought to the Navy Yard from the builders, The Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Company, and her dimensions are as follows: Length 608 ft., draft 28 ft. 6 inches, displacement 32,000; horse-power, 32,000; speed, 21 knots; armament, twelve 14-inch breach-loading rifles, twenty-two 5-inch breach-loading rifles; four 3-inch anti-craft guns, four submerged torpedo tubes. The 14-inch guns are mounted in four turrets, three in each turret. The armor of the Pennsylvania weighs approximately eight thousand tons.

BATTALION RECEIVES COLORS.

ANOTHER interesting ceremony reproduced in the Animated Weekly this week is the presentation of the Colors of the Thirteenth Royal Regiment to the 120th City of Hamilton Battalion, filmed by the Animated cameraman at Hamilton, Ont. The ceremonies were held in Victoria Park, and were witnessed by thousands of Hamilton citizens. The battalion had been drilling in that vicinity for a long time, and local interest and admiration in it had reached a high pitch. The battalion will be leaving for the front to join the other units of the division in a few days.

GENERAL GALLIENI'S FUNERAL

THE funeral of General Gallieni, who saved Paris with his taxi army shift early in the war, is shown in the Animated this week lying in state at the Chapel of the Hotel des Invalides, Paris, where thousands of grateful French people pay honor to the great French general. Both President Poincare and General Dubail, the Governor of Paris, are shown in the sad cortage.

DARIO RESTA WINS AGAIN.

IT is getting to be a habit with the Animated Weekly to chronicle the triumphs of Dario Resta. This week shows him winning the second annual automobile Derby at Chicago on May 11th, breaking the 300-mile record and winning the $12,000 prize. Close-ups of the winner, and De Palmer, who came in second, are shown, together with those of Barney Oldfield, Richenbacher, McCarthy, Starter Wagner, and the scenes are completed by interesting views of the line-up of the drivers, the start, the fight for the lead, and the battle at the finish of the races.

GLEN SPRINGS RAIDERS.

FROM Marathon, Boquillas and El Paso, Texas, Beverly Griffith, in charge of the Animated Weekly's invasion of Mexico, sends interesting views, not only of captured bandits in Mexico, but of the life of the United States border patrol, and of the inspection of guns, horses, men and equipment for the troops in Mexico. These are the first views to be shown of the captured bandits who took part in the Glen Springs Raid, These bandits were taken by Major Langhorne a few days after the raid, and were brought back and tried at Alpine, Texas. There is also an interesting scene showing the Animated Weekly men with their camera in an automobile suspended 296 feet in the air by cable over the Butte dam. The scene that they took from this exalted height is a very interesting one.

PHILLIES HOIST FLAG.

WILLIAM J. GANZ, whose bailiwick is Philadelphia, secured views of the raising of the National League pennant won last year by the Philadelphia National Baseball team. These scenes are shown in this week's Weekly. Pat Moran, Manager of the Phillies, his son, and Mrs. Moran, Captain Wagner and Manager Callahan, were the principal participants in the actual ceremony, but the entire rank and file of the Phillies joined in the joyous parade which signalized the raising of the pennant.

SYRACUSE WINS.

Saturday's Varsity eight-oared shell race on the Hudson River, the annual sporting event of the college world, was filmed on Saturday by the Animated Weekly, which secured an advantageous situation, and consequently wonderful views of the race over its entire course. The finish in particular is shown to advantage, particularly the sprint whereby the Syracuse Varsity crew won so handily over Cornell, which was badly whipped at the finish, whereas the Syracuse crew had plenty of fight in them as they dashed over the finish line. Cornell led Columbia by five lengths, with Pennsylvania an almost equal distance still in the rear. From start to finish this was one of the greatest, if not the greatest race, in the history of inter-collegiate rowing.

“SHOES”

A BLUEBIRD Photo Play written and produced by Lois Weber, from the original story by Stella Wynne Herron in Collier's, which in turn was suggested by Jane Addams.

Eva felt that the end had come.

NO other comment on the latest Bluebird Photoplay, with the strange title, “Shoes,” is necessary, after reading the following criticism by Miss Louella O. Parsons, the motion picture critic of the Chicago Herald. Miss Parsons writes as follows:

After sitting through five reels of the vice commission's villainous pictorial investigation at the LaSalle Theatre we whose duty it is to review the films made a solemn vow to give all moving pictures with the minimum wage theme a wide berth. The enigmatical title of “Shoes,’” terse, undescriptive and meaningless, took me to the Bluebird offices. I am glad I did not know the story of “Shoes,” else my readers would have missed hearing about and I would have failed to see one of the best moving pictures of 1916.

Risking even the vitriolic pen of my co-worker, Richard Henry Little, I am compelled to call into play some of the superlatives I have been saving for just this auspicious occasion. Mignonettes and other blossoms gathered as symbolical of Richard Henry's professed idea of moving picture criticisms are scarcely fragrant enough to express what I really think about “Shoes” as a moving picture drama.

It loosens the heartstrings, stirs the pulse and makes one choke with emotion. All of these things I saw this one five-reel picture do when I reviewed it in the company of some exhibitors.

It deals with a subject difficult of discussion with a delicacy that cannot bring a blush of shame to the most modest cheek. It takes for its subject, instead of the craving for immorality, the sadness of poverty and the unspeakable misery which an empty pocketbook causes.

“Shoes” is the title that was given a story by Stella Wynne Herron which appeared last January in a current magazine. The story in turn was based upon a statement made by Jane Addams in a book called “A New Conscience and An Ancient Evil.” The book has been used as authority by many societies and organizations which are working night and day for the establishment of a minimum wage scale for woman.

Neither the statement nor its fictioned garment is entirely responsible for the beauty of the cinematic “Shoes.” To Lois Weber, the producer of this Bluebird masterpiece, belongs most of the credit—her delicacy in treating an awkward subject, her fine perception in introducing the pathos and her psychological analysis of the deplorable situation.

The picture is not released yet. I am reviewing it in advance because I feel the exhibitor deserves to be told about this picture. It has a pink slip attached to it, I am sorry to say, but even ticketed with this censorial criticism it is the cleanest version of a distressing story I have ever seen.

And Miss Parsons is a severe critic.

This pitiful story is based upon an actual case which is recorded in all the simplicity of its tragedy in Jane Addams' book, “A New Conscience and An Ancient Evil.” Out of this reality Stella Wynne Herron made her story for Collier's and then Lois Weber took it and her magic turned the simple material into the most poignant photoplay which she has ever put upon the screen.

The photoplay relates three eventful weeks in the life of a shop girl. Eva Meyer works by day in a five and ten cent story for the magnificent sum of five dollars a week. At home her mother takes in washing to support two smaller children and a lazy, good for nothing father who "rushes the can" and reads dime novels in preference to seeking work with any purpose of finding it.

For some time Eva's shoes have been growing more and more tattered and worn until finally through great holes in the soles, she picks up splinters from the floor where she stands behind the counter. To give her feet some measure of protection, she inserts pasteboard soles, but these flimsy excuses cannot withstand the siege of rainy weather which sets in and further rots and destroys her worthless shoes.

In a shop window which Eva must pass in going to and from her work, there is a pair of shoes which she has set her heart upon, and for weeks when she takes home her pay envelope, she asks her mother for money to buy the shoes. But each week the mother has some good and valid excuses through which the girl is deprived of her necessary shoes.

First the rent is due and must be paid. Then the butcher will trust them no longer and they must pay cash for their meat; and the other merchants will not trust them while the father remains idle. And so it goes from week to week until one Saturday night, Eva demands of him money to buy her shoes. The best she gets from the old man is the statement that he needs shoes himself.

There is during this time going on a lure and temptation which Eva has steadfastly resisted. The girl who stands beside her at the ten cent store wears better clothes than Eva, largely because she has the acquaintance of several sporty young men of the neighborhood.

She longed for strength to make him work.

One of these sports is a cabaret entertainer who meets Eva through an introduction and invites the foot-sore and almost shoeless shop girl to come to the cabaret where he is employed and be entertained. Eva's working companion has been to the cabaret and tells Eva that it is all very nice and urges her to go.

Every night when Eva comes home and sees her lazy father reading novels with a "can of beer" by his side, and she wonders if it is worth while to wear shoes with holes in them to keep food in the stomach and "beer in the can" of her lazy parent.

She finally demands that her father shall contribute to her support and when she sees money that she needs for shoes being spent on this eventful Saturday night for meat that her lazy father might eat his fill, Eva soaks her tired feet, as customary, in warm water, and makes a resolution.

She puts on a clean shirtwaist and lowers her skirt by pinning it far down on her hips until it covers her shoes and gets carfare from her mother, saying that she is going to spend Sunday with her girl companion from the store.

Claire McDowell Famous Film Star Joins Universal Stock

CLAIRE McDOWELL, well known as a film actress, especially for her work as a member of the Biograph Company, has joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company at the Pacific Coast studios and for the present will appear in general stock.

Miss McDowell comes of a long line of theatrical ancestors, and has appeared not only on the legitimate stage, but in many of the big productions before the camera.

She admits that her birth had the dramatic effect of causing a "stage wait." Her father, Eugene A. McDowell, was playing in Brooklyn at the time, and at a matinee was seized with curiosity to see his new daughter and dashed away from the stage. When he returned he found an understudy had taken his part, so that he was free until the evening performance.

Miss McDowell is known as "the girl of the people," and plays all parts from heavy emotional to light comedy.

BABY KERRIGAN AGAIN ACTING

THE youngest featured player in the world, Baby Virginia Kerrigan, five months old, is again appearing before the camera at Universal City.

This time the niece of the famous star, J. Warren Kerrigan, has a part in a one-reel drama, entitled, "In His Service," being filmed by Director Francis Powers.

Alice Howell in "Lizzie's Lingering Love."

Her father, Wallace Kerrigan, declares that her bank account is increasing by leaps and bounds, as every cent the baby earns is put out on interest to her credit.

In addition to being the youngest featured player in the world, she is also noted for the fact that she never cries.

MISS GERTRUDE SELBY PRAISES ALICE HOWELL.

THE unqualified praise of an associate is one of the most musical sounds that you can make in the ear of a photoplayer. When it comes from a rival star in the same company it is doubly sweet and ten times as convincing. Alice Howell, the principal funny woman of the L-Ko Komedy Kompany, and the star of one of the funniest of all the funny features which the L-Ko has contributed to the joy of nations, "Lizzie's Lingering Love," cannot help being flattered at the praise of Gertrude Selby, who has resigned from the L-Ko to go with the Universal in a more gentle kind of comedy.

Miss Selby was in the Universal offices last week and she was looking at the cut of Miss Howell shown on this page. Julius Stern, who was saying "Good-bye" all around as he hustled for the train to take him out to Hollywood, where he will be associated in the management of the L-Ko, had just come out of the projection room with Miss Selby and Lillian Greenberger, the new eastern representative of the L-Ko. The film at which they had been looking was "Lizzie's Lingering Love."

"There is no doubt about it," said Miss Selby, "Alice Howell is the greatest comedienne on the screen today." And she meant every word she said. "And I admire her more than any other woman I know for the work I have seen her do and for the difficulties she has labored under. She is a wonder and she will do anything they ask her to, no matter how much risk there is in it. Half the time that woman is covered all over with bruises. She deserves every bit of success she receives. And she is going to get more and more of that."

Claire McDowell.

MARIE WALCAMP TACKLES MOTORCYCLE.

MARIE WALCAMP, one of the best known actresses at Universal City, thoroughly fearless, is known as a girl who will try anything at least once.

A few days ago she rode into the film capital on her horse, and, alighting, noticed a motorcycle standing nearby. Miss Walcamp is an expert automobilist, but she had never tackled a motorcycle.

Curiosity got the best of her, and finding out how to start the machine, she climbed aboard and bent off down the street like an old-timer. She laughingly said that she had run railroad engines, automobiles and aeroplanes and now has add the transportation of the speed cop to her list of accomplishments.

DOROTHY MOURNS FOR DOG.

ONE of the saddest little actresses at Universal City these days is Dorothy Davenport, the leading lady of Director Lloyd Carleton's company, who is mourning the death of her pet St. Bernard puppy, who was killed by an automobile delivery truck. The owner of the machine had his driver discharged and declares that he will do all in his power to secure another pet for Miss Davenport.

"It Happened in Honolulu"

RED FEATHER PRODUCTION, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Larry looks even better to Mabel in Honolulu than he did at home.

DIRECTOR Lynn Reynolds, who wrote and produced the Red Feather, "It Happened in Honolulu," certainly got hold of a good idea for his story. The plot is original, and there is something doing every minute in all five reels. Reynolds is in the habit of writing all his own scripts, so that no one else will have to take the blame, according to his own account. He must have been quite willing to be made entirely responsible for this one. The excellent cast, including such well known names as Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul, Fred Church, Lule Warrenton, Bertram Grassby, Jack Curtis and George Hernandez, seconded the efforts of their director in every possible way and all did their utmost to make the latest Red Feather one of the best so far issued.

Many of the scenes were taken at San Diego, but to film seven of them Reynolds took his company to Palm Canyon, a distance of 280 miles, there and back, from the exposition city. The trip was accomplished and the scenes filmed in one day, thus establishing a kind of record. The atmosphere of the Hawaiian Islands has been reproduced with remarkable fidelity, and it is hard to believe that the picture was not taken in Honolulu itself. The interesting story runs as follows:

CAST.

Mr. Wyland	George Hernandez
Mrs. Wyland	Lule Warrenton
Mabel Wyland	Myrtle Gonzalez
Jim Crane	C. Norman Hammond
Larry Crane	Val Paul
Clarence Velie	Fred Church
Lord Percy	Bertram Grassby
Detective Boggs	Jack Curtis

CRANE & SON
WHOLESALE FISH

Larry bribes the janitor.

Larry Crane is the junior partner in the firm of Crane & Son, wholesale fish dealers. Old Jim Crane, the head of the concern, is a self-made man. From a small beginning he has built the business up until it is known from coast to coast. Larry will not take his work seriously, and arrives at work nearer noon than morning. He has an arrangement with the janitor by which the latter is accustomed to smuggle in his breakfast in order to keep his father from finding out what time he arrives for work. In his spare time Larry finds much pleasure in the company of Mabel Wyland. The two have a distinct understanding and are only waiting until Larry becomes settled before they marry.

Mabel's father has risen from the bottom himself, and is now the proud possessor of a shoe factory. In his early days, the old man owned a tannery, but this part of their life is a secret. Mrs. Wyland carries the family affairs with a high hand, and her husband is a henpecked individual. The mother's conversation is all of ancestral halls, blue blood, titles and high society, and when the story opens, mother has definitely decided that Mabel shall be married to Percy Weatherfield, a fortune hunter with an attractive title. Mabel, being typically American, is not easily converted to her mother's love of the nobility, much prefering the careless, happy-go-lucky young fish merchant. Father thinks a great deal of Larry, but being henpecked, is afraid to come out with his own opinions.

"Only a sea voyage can save her!"

Larry and his father have a quarrel because of the former's late habits, and the old man proceds to give him some hard, practical advice, the substance of which is that he must settle down and display more interest in the business.

The Wylands are giving a week-end party in their mountain home to celebrate the Fourth of July, and Mother Wyland has it all arranged so that Lord Percy and Mabel shall have a clear field. Larry breaks up this arrangement, however, and, securing an invitation to the house party, succeeds in side-tracking Lord Percy, while he takes the young girl for his own. Larry enlists the assistance of young Bobby Wyland, to whom the Fourth of July is one long series of exciting explosions. Bobby is persuaded to throw a bunch of small fire crackers beneath the bench on which Lord Percy is sitting, but decides to have a "real" celebration; in addition to the small ones given him by Larry he puts in several large fire crackers of his own. The explosion is a great one, and Lord Percy is rendered unfit for duty for some time. Bobby is severely reprimanded, and laying the blame for his punishment to Larry and Mabel, he determines upon revenge. This opportunity comes while he is scouting about with a camera and is enabled to catch Larry and his sister in a very lover-like embrace. Returning home, this picture is developed and is in due course of time seen by Mother Wyland. She immediately has a fit of the worst kind and nothing but an ocean voyage will help her. Father weakly protests, but is sternly ordered to get ready, as they will leave in a short time for a visit to the Orient.

Clarence Velie is the head clerk in the Cranes' establishment. On every occasion Clarence has endeavored to disparage Larry's work and unknown to the firm has been secretly taking money from them. He has altered his books to cover the discrepancies, but is in daily fear that his action will be found out. Had Jim Crane not been so busy looking for his son's faults the peculations would have been discovered by the guilty appearance of Velie.

Mabel notifies Larry of their departure and he implores his father for a vacation to accompany them. His father flies into a rage and tells him that he has not deserved a vacation and will not get one, and refuses to allow him to leave. There is a sad parting between the two sweethearts, but on the pleasant journey Lord Percy is given every assistance. He and Mother Wyland come to an agreement by which they agree to pay him a dowry of $50,000 in return for marrying the girl.

A big consignment of money is received for Crane & Son and Larry is sent to the office to get the money. Clarence hears the arrangement and his cupidity is aroused by the large sum. Larry secures the money and after many delays reaches the bank too late to deposit it. He is forced to bring the money to the office and put it in the safe. Larry receives a telegram from Mabel telling him that her parents insist that she marry Lord Percy on the third of July, and she begs him to meet her in Honolulu so that she may marry him instead. When Larry brings the money to his father he tells him of this latest development and again pleads to get off. Father refuses again, and tells him he can take $5,000 of the money he has as his share in the business and go, but he need not expect to come back. Father leaves in a rage for home. Larry thinks the matter over and decides to take his father's offer. He takes $5,000 of the money, leaves a note to his father and places the balance of the money in the safe. He then hurries to catch a boat for Honolulu. The boat doesn't sail until morning and Larry spends the night there in order to be sure to get off.

Clarence has worked late at the office and sees Larry when he places the money in the safe for the night. He erases the word five and makes it fifteen thousand, taking the additional ten thousand dollars himself. The shortage is discovered the next morning and father, believing Larry to blame, decides to give him a lesson. A detective is put on the track, who catches the same boat on which Larry sails. The detective's orders are to make a quiet arrest and bring the prisoner home without any publicity, and he decides to wait until they reach Honolulu before acting. On

Bill	Billy Mason
The Girl	Peggy Coudray
Pinpoints	O. C. Jackson

It is the night before the big championship baseball game between the two village teams. At different places the teams are rehearsing signals for the coming game. Bill is the star player of the Town Picks and they are depending on him to win the game. Bill is in love with one of the girls in the village and naturally tells her of his hopes of winning the game next day. The girl's father and Bill cannot get along and the father, meeting Bill that night, orders him off the place.

An opera troupe has visited the village, and when they depart Pinpoints, their manager, is left stranded in the town. While Pinpoints is wandering about the village he sees the notice about the championship game the next day.

Bill's father runs a confectionery store and Bill is kept pretty busy the day of the ball game. The father cannot see the science or sport in playing ball and refuses Bill's request to get off. One of the women of the town phones an order for ice cream and Bill is sent to deliver it. Meantime the two teams have arrived on the field and prepare to start the game. Bill's absence is noted and they stampede to get their tickets returned. Matters are finally straightened out and the game is started. The captain of the Town Picks sends one of his men to locate Bill. Pinpoints attends the ball game and notes that the Town Picks are being beaten. The boy sent by the manager finally locates Bill, who has had a breakdown and the ice cream is nearly melted. The woman who has ordered it arrives on the scene and the two boys take refuge in flight. They arrive at the ball park and Bill enters the game. With the addition of their star player the Town Picks give their opponents a merciless beating and Pinpoints proposes to Bill that they go to one of the large towns, where Bill will have an opportunity to develop his ability. In order to carry out this scheme Pinpoints takes up a collection from the merchants and tells them what a wonderful advertisement it will be to their town to have it known that Bill came from there. They arrange to leave next day. Bill decides to make one more effort to win his girl. Together they set out for the minister's. Pinpoints, fearing to lose Bill, follows him. The girl's father learns of the intended elopement and makes all haste to the minister's. Bill's father, too, gets wind of the affair and hurries to swell the crowd.

The different parties arrive as the ceremony is just beginning and Bill, seeing all is against him, again takes refuge in flight. Pinpoints grabs him and rushes him to the station. The train is just pulling out, but the two succeed in catching it and leaving their pursuers behind.

Charley	Charles Conklin
The Widow	Gale Henry
Heinie	William Franey
Lilly	Lillian Peacock
Rev. Mr. Fish	Milburn Moranti

The widow lives in a houseboat near one of the beaches. Charley is her devoted lover, but his bashfulness prevents him from proposing. The widow schemes various methods to force a proposal from him, but without avail. She has one daughter, Lilly, who is visiting in a nearby town. She accepts Heinie subject to her mother's approval. The mother cannot see it and wires her daughter that she cannot marry the young man unless he shows her $5,000. She orders the girl home. Heinie says that he has a brother living near the widow's houseboat and that he will accompany Lilly home so as to be on the ground.

Charley tells of his difficulty in proposing to the widow and Heinie offers to propose for him for $5,000. Charley accepts and Heinie clips his mustache to correspond to Charley's.

"PEG O' THE RING," Episode Nine

The Mexican mob storms the house where Peg and the circus people have taken refuge.

LATEST 2-reel chapter of current Universal Special Serial. Scenario by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford. "The Leap."

EPISODE eight left Peg bound to a post in the burning shack, while Doctor Lund lay unconscious on the beach. Her hands were tied behind her, and she manages to sever the rope by rubbing it against a nail in the post. Then she leaps to freedom from the window into the sea. She is washed up on the beach near the doctor, and she draws his body out of the water. She half drags him to the hut of a fisherman and his wife, and there they resuscitate him. Then Peg returns to the circus, where Flip is overjoyed to see her.

The place where the circus is showing is on the Mexican border, and Peg has joined them there. An uprising of the populace against the American residents has taken place, and the circus arrives in the midst of it. Doctor Lund remains with the fisherman until he has recovered from his partial drowning. Notwithstanding the threatened uprising, the first performance of the circus is held. The Hindoo has followed, and is surprised to see Peg, whom he left in the burning shack. Mrs. Lund has also followed the circus. She and Marcus bribe the Mexicans to get Peg out of the way again. The outbreak begins in earnest on the night of the first performance, and the circus people join with the other Americans to keep the mob at bay until help can reach the town. Peg holds up the telegraph operator, and gets a message through to Doctor Lund, just before the wires are cut. The old fisherman tells the doctor that a circus has wired for help. Lund sets out at once to enlist the services of the cowboys to help the town. He knows that Peg must have sent the wire.

In the meantime the circus people have been doing all they can to protect the American citizens of the town. Peg has crawled into an outdoor oven, from which she accounts for many of the Mexicans. General fighting takes place through the streets, and many on both sides fall. Most of the Americans retire to a house, into which the Mexicans are just about to make their way, when Lund arrives with the cowboys, and surrounds them. But a band of them, acting under Marcus' orders, kidnap Peg as the picture fades out.

Universal, Unaided, Wins Fight of Entire

VICTORY in suit brought against it by The Moti hibitors, too. Had the Universal lost, it woul payment of a royalty on his machi

ANOTHER great victory was won by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, a few days ago when Justice Augustus N. Hand, handed down a decision in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals which will save twenty-two thousand exhibitors in the United States from paying large royalties on their projecting machines as a condition of being allowed to continue in business.

The case was the Motion Patents Company against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Universal Film Exchange of New York, wherein the complainant claimed the right to collect royalties on all machines having the Latham-Loop—a small mechanical contrivance which is attached to the machine.

The decision affirmed the ruling of Judge Hough who demurred the complaint when the case was before him in the lower court.

Without the aid of the Motion Picture Board of Trade, or the assistance of any other company the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has won one of the greatest victories in the entire history of the trade. The whole industry is affected by this decision, and directly and tremendously benefited, for it is of the most vital interest to every exhibitor, exchangeman and producer in the United States, and, had the case been decided in favor of the complainant, it would mean that every exhibitor in the country might be compelled to pay a royalty on his projection machine, even after he had bought it. It would also mean that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company would be compelled to pay about $150,000 in back royalties.

In rendering its decision, the Court said:

"It was held by this Court in the case of Victor Talking Machine Company vs. Straus, 230 Fed. 449, that a license to use a patented talking machine upon payment of an initial royalty to cover the life of the patent and upon condition that the licensee purchase all sound records to be used with the machine from licensor was valid even though the license provided that title to the machine should pass to the licensor upon the expiration of the patent if the terms of the license had been observed. The present case differs from that case because here the title to the machine at once passed by the sale of the projecting machine to the 72nd Street Amusement Company. We think this case comes within the doctrine of Bauer vs. O'Donnell, 239 U. S. 1, rather than that of Dick vs. Henry, 224 U. S. 1. This is especially true since the enactment of the so-called Clayton Bill which provides:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce in the course of such commerce, to lease or make a sale or contract for sale of goods, wares, merchandise, machinery, supplies, or other commodities, whether patented or unpatented, for use, consumption or resale within the United States or any territory thereof, on the condition, agreement or understanding that the lessee or purchaser thereof shall not use or deal in the goods, wares, marchandise, machinery supplies or other commodities of a competitor or competitors of the lessor or seller, where the effect of such lease, sale, or contract for sale or such conditions, agreement or understanding may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

"This Act was not regarded as applicable either in the District Court, or in this Court, in the case of Victor Talking Machine v. Straus, supra. because that case was decided upon a demurrer to the bill upon the face of which no substantial restraint of competition or monopoly in any line

ACTOR BRAVES DEATH OVER CLIFF TO FILM BIG SCENE.

WHAT was probably the greatest death-defying scene ever enacted in motion pictures was performed by Joe Rickson in one scene of "The Committee on Credentials," which has been filmed at Universal City by Directors Harry Carey and George Marshall, and that he lives to tell the tale is considered almost a miracle by those who witnessed the feat.

Peter B. Kyne's story, as prepared for the screen, featuring Harry Carey and with Miss Olive Fuller Golden playing opposite, calls for one man to play the part of a brutal, drinking husband, who finally commits a crime and is run out of the Western town by the cowboys.

The film play shows the mad race of this man in a light wagon, lashing the horse over the road, with the posse in close pursuit.

Finally he comes around a curve in the road, and, apparently losing control of the horse, dashes over the edge of a cliff, which is 120 feet to the bottom and at an angle of forty-five degrees. As he does not strike the brink head on, but with only two wheels first going over, his horse breaks loose and does not even lose its balance, but the man and the wagon turn a complete somersault. Joe Rickson is thrown out while in the air, and as they both crash downward, more than once he is endangered not only from the rocks on which he is falling, but from the wagon as it hurtles toward the bottom.

The horse slid along to the bottom of the precipice without losing its balance at all, but Pedro Leon, who is one of the champion ropers of the world, threw a lariat over its head and held it securely until the other men brought it safely up the bank to the road. It was absolutely without a scratch.

A battery of three cameras was used on this particular scene, as there was no chance for rehearsal and it had to be recorded on the film either then or not at all.

Rickson was practically unconscious when the two actors reached the bottom of the precipice, but the first question he asked was, "They won't think it was a dummy, will they?" And he was not fully satisfied until he had the scene run off in the projecting room at the film capital.

After the scene had been taken, it was necessary for the cowboys to join their ropes together and throw them down the hill in order to pull up Rickson and Carey, the cameraman and the others from the bottom of the cliff.

Carey has played for years in motion pictures requiring feats not only of skill, but of daring, and many of these have been filmed by Cameraman Milton Moore. They have each told Rickson it was the most daring feat that has ever been attempted.

Four visitors to Los Angeles were witnesses of this feat of daring. One of them was Rr. Herman Hille of Oak Hille of Oak Hill Park, Ill.; another, Dr. E. M. Wemster of Oconomowoc, Wisc.; also Frank P. Lodge, a lawyer of commerce appeared. Here, however, the testimony shows that the complainant has a monopoly under its patents on projecting machines so that if no films not manufactured by complainant can be used upon these machines the complainant will obtain an absolute monopoly of the film business in spite of the fact that its patent on films has expired. If the prohibitions of the Clayton Act mean anything at all this case falls within them and the restrictions as to use of films other than complainant's with the projecting machines are, therefore, void. Indeed, the Report of the Judiciary Committee of the House concerning the Clayton Act shows that its purpose is to reach the film monopoly. A portion of this report, quoted by Judge Dyer in his opinion in United States v. United Shoe Machine Co., 227 Fed. 507, is as follows:

> "Where the concern making these contracts is already great and powerful, such as the United Shoe Machinery Company, the American Tobacco Company and the General Film Company, the exclusive or 'tying' contract made with the local dealers becomes one of the greatest agencies and instrumentalities of monopoly ever devised by the brain of man. It completely shuts out competitors, not only from the trade in which they are engaged already; but from the opportunities to build up trade in any community where these great and powerful conditions are appearing under this system and practice."

"Judge Sessions has held in the case of Elliott Machine Co. v. Center, 227 Fed. 126, that this act applies to contracts made before the passage of the act, and we think his opinion justified by decisions of the Supreme Court on which he relied. Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co. v. Mottley, 21 U. S. 467; Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56; Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington R. R. v. Schubert, 224 U. S. 603. In the case of United States v. United Shoe Machinery Company, 227 Fed. 507, Judge Dyer reached the same conclusion in regard to the Clayton Act.

"Inasmuch as the contract with the Precision Machine Company involved and restrained interstate commerce, it makes no difference that the particular act of infringement occurred within the State of New York, and the prohibitions of the Clayton Act apply.

"Marienella v. United Booking Offices, 227 Fed. 170; Nash v. United States, 229 U. S. 373.

"It is urged that the defendant, Prague Amusement Company, cannot rely upon the license and repudiate its terms. It does not rely upon the license, but obtained a lease of the machine from the owner, the 72nd Street Amusement Company, which acquired it after having paid the purchase price, and this freed the machine from the unlawful restrictions. The remarks of this Court upon the motion for a stay pending the decision of the appeal from Judge Dickinson's decree in the criminal prosecution for violation of the Sherman Act, 235 Fed. 800, would be applicable to the case if the restrictions we have held illegal had been held valid. Then it would have been true that the defendant, who was using the patented article under a license, could not question the validity of the patent, or claim it lacked invention. These remarks are not applicable when the restrictions are held invalid and the article having been thus freed from all restrictions may be used at the will of the licensee.

"In view of the foregoing considerations it is unnecessary to discuss the other defenses raised by the defendants and the decree dismissing the bill is affirmed."

The attorneys for the complainant were Mellville Church and George F. Scull, while Edmund Wetmore, John B. Stanchfield and Oscar W. Jeffery acted as counsel for the defendants.

of Detroit and Lowell Hoit, a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. The two doctors made an examination of Rickson, and aside from digging sand and dirt out of his mouth and eyes, they found him none the worse for wear except a few scratches. They declared afterwards that never again would they permit anybody to say that dummies were used in Universal pictures.

CAREY VISITS SAN BERNARDINO

HARRY Carey and his company, including Olive Fuller Golden, leading woman, and his "bunch of cowboys," went from Universal City to San Bernardino a few days ago to film some scenes for his production of "Well Represented."

As the cowboy company went by train, the members created no small sensation among the passengers when they entered, dressed in the garb of the Westerner and armed to the teeth.

However, their fellow travelers soon learned that they were not only cowboys but actors, too, and the entire company enjoyed the trip very much.

CLEO MADISON NEAR DEATH BY SADDLE TURNING OVER.

WHILE taking some scenes for "An Eye for an Eye," Cleo Madison, the star and co-director with Wm. V. Mong, of her company, had what is declared to be the nearest escape from death any actress has experienced at Universal City.

Miss Madison was to ride a horse, and in the scene Charles Gunn was to jump on behind the saddle and dash away.

Miss Madison jumped on her horse and things went well until Gunn made his leap. This frightened the animal. The girth had not been tightened sufficiently and when the horse jumped the saddle turned.

Miss Madison clung to it, and as the horse dashed off both the saddle and rider were underneath the animal's body.

It meant almost certain injury to let go and be trampled, so she clung to her perilous position. The animal hit the post of a barbed-wire fence and fortunately the actress was thrown clear of the wires.

She was scratched and considerably shaken up and congratulates herself that she is alive to tell the tale.

BECKER TO AID COMEDIANS.

BRUNO BECKER has returned to his first love at Universal City and has been installed as assistant director to Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who will film Nestor comedies at the film capital.

For some time Becker has been with the property department, but first came to the Pacific Coast studios as an assistant director. He says he is glad to get back to the comedy work and away from the demands for "props" wanted by other assistants.

Becker is very popular among his associates at Universal City, and they are congratulating him on his return to the production end of the business.

Galwin McDonald and his son John.

GAVIN McDONALD, a product of the unfettered North, had fallen in love with a beautiful girl from the city. After their marriage the wife persuaded her husband to give up his wild life and enjoy the luxuries of civilization. The father's heart was set on raising his boy in the wild and open Northwest. He had recognized the hollow mockery of society and had often pleaded with his wife to return with him to the wilderness. She preferred the life of the city. At a reception McDonald sees several men, supposed to be friends, making love to each other's wives.

Hale McGraw, of the N. W. M. P., and his wife are great friends of the McDonalds. McGraw begins to neglect his own wife and show attention to McDonald's. McDonald, disgusted with the way things are going, can hardly withstand the longing to return to the wilderness. McGraw and McDonald's wife indulge in a love scene, but the wife, in a moment of regret, hastens to her husband. He again pleads with her to leave the city and she angrily returns to McGraw. He suggests that they elope, and she easily agrees to the proposition. The two go off together, leaving a note for McDonald telling of the elopement. He decides to take the child far from the abode of women and raise him in a masculine world.

McGraw and Mrs. McDonald arrive in a distant city and the realization of what they have done suddenly comes over both of them. They determine to return and right the error, if possible. Mrs. McDonald finds her husband gone with the baby to parts unknown. McGraw's wife refuses to forgive him for the part he has played and both homes are broken up. Some time later McGraw's wife dies, leaving to his care her baby girl, and to the last refusing to forgive her husband. He, unable to bear the sight of familiar places, gets transferred to the far North and takes charge of the Post.

"PIRATES OF THE AIR"---L-KO

Two-Reel Komedy of the Sensational Kind, with Alice Howell, Fatty Voss and Bill Bevan.

WHEN Alice Howell is suddenly awakened from a sound sleep in the middle of the night, she is apt to shriek something like "Draw one in the dark!" or, "White Wings, let 'em fly up and down!" These unladylike expressions come instinctively to her lips as the result of her constant association with the typical L-Ko beanery, in which, as a so-called "waitress," she is maltreated in a fashion to arouse the sympathy of all the S. P. C. C.'s and S. P. C. A'.s in existence. If conditions like these exist in any institution of feeding, then it is more than time that a Society-for-the-Prevention-of-Cruelty-to-Waitresses were started by some philanthropic and tender-hearted soul. What Alice has to suffer in order to earn her three dollars a week, is enough to bring tears to the eyes of a sphinx. Wet dish towels in her hair are like a caress to her. Swinging doors which knock her flat are to her as love pats to other women. A plate cracked over her head is a permanent mark of the proprietor's esteem, and sitting down on a hot stove forms for her a mild diversion. Through it all, in the latest L-Ko melange, "Pirates of the Air," she clings to her tulle bow under the chin, and to her faithful parasol which in the end proves its gratitude to her by saving her life. While other than comedy film companies of slapstick morals are shouting the slogan which they have borrowed from Shakespeare as their contribution to the Tercentenary celebration, "The play's the thing;" the L-Ko people have adopted one of their own, namely, "The Chase is the Thing!" The pursuit of somebody, who has done something, and is trying to get somewhere, to elude some one somehow, for some reason or other, is the backbone of a good old-fashioned, roaring comedy and well the L-Ko's know it. When they put on "Pirates of the Air" they certainly gave competition a blow from which it will not recover for some time. They had chased people in every sort of vehicle which goes upon the face of the earth, and so what did they do this time, but take possession of the air for the occasion and film the most extraordinary hue and cry through the clouds, where two aeroplanes—the real thing, mind you, no fake fixed up in the studio—pursue each other across the horizon, while the occupants bombard each other with bombs from mid-air.

It all begins in a beanery, of course, because Alice is in it and a beanery is her chosen milieu, as it were. She is the usual plaything on which the proprietor and the cook vent their attacks of temperament. But she discovers an airship model, stolen from the U. S. Secret Service, in the attic, and then, Oh! how the boss does love her. He bribes her with a whole quarter to hold her tongue, and Alice, who has never seen so much real money in her life, tucks her tulle bow under her chin, takes her trusty parasol and goes out to spend her fortune. Incidentally, just in the ordinary

AT WORK AND PLAY WITH THE S

No. 1—Clifford Elfelt and his company of players in which Vola Smith, Hayward Mack, Norbert Myles and Edwin Brown play the principal roles, in a picturesque location at Mt. Baldy, near Los Angeles. The company is temporarily stationed in this picturesque spot, where Elfelt will produce three or four mountain pictures.

No. 2—Timothy Dobbs (Carter DeHaven) instructing his gigantic valet, Jeff (Robert Milash) in what is bound to be one of the most famous comedy series ever filmed. The Timothy Dobbs series, being directed by Wallace Beery.

No. 3—Director Robert Leonard and his all-star feature company, consisting of Ella Hall, Herbert Rawlinson, Thomas Jefferson, Doris Pawn, Gretchen Lederer, Marc Fenton, in front of the Coronado Hotel at Coronado Beach. Mr. Leonard brought his company here to film a number of scenes for his next feature, Eleanor H. Abbott's story, "Little Eve Edgarton." This is one of the strongest feature companies ever gathered together.

No. 4—Cleo Madison, Universal director and star, discussing the details of a scene from "Tillie, the Little Swede" with her co-director, William V. Mong. Mong wrote the story, and is reading a portion of the script to Miss Madison in one of the settings provided for this coming picture.

No. 5—Carter DeHaven is one of the grandest little jokers that ever came down the pike, and has Universal City, and the various companies operating on its huge stages, u arms every day with some practical joke. In scene depicted above, Carter is being paid o stage money by Harry Carey to leave the pany which he is directing in the three drama, "Well Represented." Carter has ref to return to his own company without a settlement from Carey. The scene is on lower stage showing the ranch village at versal City.

camp should have appeared in this picture, for she was also prominent in one of Fritzi Scheff's companies a few years ago.

No. 7—J. Warren Kerrigan is an out-door enthusiast, and when on location with his company from Universal City takes advantage of every opportunity to indulge in hunting and fishing. In addition to his talents as a screen actor, he also lays claim to be an expert angler, but the members of his company tell a fish story on the acter since his return from Coulterville, California, a mining town, where the scenes for "The Beckoning Trail" were made. The course of a mountain stream had been changed to permit the building of a new road. Kerrigan happened along just after a blast had been fired n the wall. Shortly after the explosion the vicinity of the bank was littered with dead and dying fish. Kerrigan had his pole and line and he returned to camp with a big basket of trout. He was congratulated upon all sides and was the pride of the village until some heard how the fish were caught and told the story. The actor finally admitted that he had played a joke on the others and had been caught in his own trap.

No. 8—Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, co-directors at Universal City of the Nestor Company in a comedy, most appropriately named, "Kill the Umpire." Moran is the umpire and Eddie the excited fan with the murderous mein.

No. 9—Phillips Smalley and his feature company photographed at the Elliott-Brandt Rancho, near Los Angeles, where "Wanted—A Home" was partly taken. This is one of the finest and largest cattle ranches in the West, and they turned over the whole ranch to Mr. Smalley for his use. In the company are Mary MacLaren, in the centre with a hat, "Kewpie" Morgan, at the extreme left with a dog, and just above him, the director, Phillips Smalley.

No. 10—Vola Smith, who supports Carter De Haven in the Timothy Dobbs series and is at the same time the featured player in Clifford Elfelt's company, on the running-board her Overland car and Mabel Condon, the Los Angeles representative of the Dramatic Mirror, probably the best known newspaper woman in the film world to-day. The picture was taken in front of the visitors' gallery at Universal City.

"Jackals of a Great City"

Leila Hughes	Stella Razeto
Her Grandmother	Jeanne Hathaway
Tom Duane	Harry Carey
Clay Wimburn	Hayward Mack

LEILA HUGHES is the sole support of her aged grandmother. Independent and self-reliant, Leila is typical of the present day and has given little thought to affairs of the heart. Her grandmother cannot reconcile the aggressive ways of Leila with the timid manner of the girls of her generation.

Tom Duane, a young contractor, has become acquainted with Leila and finds much to admire in her. Aggressive with his men, Tom always becomes timid and embarrassed in the presence of a woman. He has visited the house several times and the old grandmother approves of him as a man, but not as a lover. One day she calls him to task for his timid advances and shows him a page from her diary in which she has written that she wished her lover would take her by main force and marry her. Tom believes this to be Leila's writing, and the grandmother does not tell him that it is her own diary. Tom's courage revives and he decides to take affairs into his own hands. Leila has another admirer in the person of Clay Wimburn, supposedly a man about town. Clay's independence appeals to her to a certain extent and she finds pleasure in his company because he treats her more like a companion than a woman. In real life, however, Wimburn is connected with a gang of white slavers. They are clamoring for another girl and Clay's real object is to turn Leila over to the gang. He has come to love the girl, and although he has told the gang of his find, he decides not to let them have her. One evening Clay invites Leila to attend a dance with him and she promises. Shortly after Tom calls at the house and she tells him of the date with Clay. Tom's courage urges him to try out the new theory. He upbraids Leila for going with another man. She flies into a rage and slaps his face, ordering him out of the house. Tom determines to use force. He secures a marriage license, and, going to Clay's room, he forces him to telephone to Leila to meet him at a certain place. Leila thinks that this is part of the arrangement for the dance and promises. Clay is tied up and left alone in the room. Tom hails a cab and goes for a minister to marry them.

The white slave gang have been notified that this is the night Clay will get the girl and they have a taxicab with their own driver to see that Clay carries out his part of the bargain. Tom gets into this taxi and is driven to the appointed place, where Leila is waiting. She thinks it is Clay and jumps into the car. The driver, having his own orders, hurriedly takes them to the headquarters of the gang. A raiding party of police has been sent to the gang's headquarters to round them up. When the taxicab arrives at the house both Tom and the girl are hustled inside before they can see what is happening. Leila thinks that it is a plan of Tom's to force her into marriage and she tells the men that she will not marry Tom. They give her the laugh, and upon the arrival in the lighted room, discover that Tom is a stranger, and attack him. He puts up a brave fight, but is overpowered by force of numbers. Leila takes one of the men's revolvers

Bud Dorgan	Marc Fenton

JOHN MURRAY, a division superintendent on the West Coast Railroad, is in serious financial troubles, as he has borrowed several thousand dollars from money lenders, has lost the funds in speculation and is unable to pay back the borrowed amounts. His creditors appeal to the railroad officials and they notify Murray that unless he soon pays his debts he will be dismissed from his position as superintendent. Murray has a beautiful daughter, Alice, just budding into womanhood, and she is an enthusiastic automobilist. On one occasion she barely averts a collision with a railroad train. The engineer of the train, Jack Howard, sees Alice's carelessness and admires her good looks. Hickman Bruce, an attorney, has long admired Alice and plans to win her as his bride, but she does not like him. Bruce meets Murray and the latter informs Bruce that he is in sore financial straits, whereupon Bruce tells Murray that if he will persuade Alice to marry him he will settle all of Murray's debts. Alice appears and Murray induces his daughter to go to lunch with Bruce. At the cafe Bruce asks Alice to marry him, but she refuses.

Two shippers of explosives meanwhile, Messrs. Lytell and Brown, visit Superintendent Murray and persuade him to agree to send a trainload of explosives over the railway, secretly, as the shippers desire to evade the interstate laws. Lytell and Brown agree to pay Murray $10,000 for his work in sending the train through, and they draw up a signed contract. Murray is glad to have a chance of raising enough money to pay his debts. Bruce is attorney for Lytell and Brown and they turn over to him the agreement signed by Murray, in which document he agrees to bill the explosives as fruit. Murray tells Conductor Bangs to handle the train and pays him some money for his share in the matter. Bruce realizes that if the train plan succeeds Murray will have enough money to free himself financially and thus be able to keep Alice from him. So he employs two thugs, Bud Dorgan and

"GOD AND THE BABY."

Story by Richard Shelton.
Scenario by Calder Johnstone.

William Rock	Malcolm Blevins
His Wife	Marjorie Ellison
Celia, their daughter	Zoe DuRae

William Rock, assistant cashier in a wholesale drug company, and his wife live happily with Celia, their little daughter, who is an invalid as the result of an accident. A well known physician advises a warmer climate, but Rock has been unable to get ahead enough to take the necessary trip. The doctor insists that the change is imperative. The privilege of advancing money to employees has been abused and the company has issued a drastic order refusing to advance money under any consideration. William sees his wife's anxiety for the little girl and decides to make an appeal to the head of the firm. He does so and the manager tells him that they cannot make an exception in anyone's case. William is heartbroken, and that night when he returns home finds the child is much worse. To ease his wife's mind he tells her that he has a friend who has promised to let him have the money the next day. The little child, hearing the discussion, writes a little note to God, begging Him to arrange for the trip. That night William finds the note tightly clasped in her hand.

It is part of William's daily duties to carry the deposit to the bank. The next day the cashier delivers to him the portfolio containing the money and he conceals it among his clothes. He turns up a deserted looking alley, and is attacked by two thugs, who take the porfolio from him. The attack is witnessed by several people and a crowd soon gathers. William is taken back to the store and all gather about him. The portfolio is missing, but the manager discovers the money in William's pocket, and when he comes to, he thinks that his plot has been discovered. He hears the manager telling someone that William's forethought was very good, and that his hiding the money has saved it for the firm. As an expression of thanks, the manager gives William $500 and William hurries home to tell the good news to his wife and child. Celia says that God has answered her letter.

CAST.

Jeanne	Gretchen Lederer
Seth Thorne	Norbert Myles
Muggins	Elizabeth James
Fred Bradley	C. Norman Hammond
Marcia	Adele Farrington

Jeanne had been accustomed, all her life, to have whatever she desired. Seth Thorne, a man whose chief asset was a healthy body and a great longing for outdoors, had entered her life. She was attracted by his strong ways, and the two were soon married. Jeanne's sister Marcia, a rich widow, had vigorously protested against the match and told Jeanne that the glamour of her romance would soon wear off. At the time the story opens Jeanne is beginning to feel vague stirrings of dissatisfaction. Seth is still a dreamer and only works their little farm enough to get an existence out of it. Muggins , their child, is very much in love with her father and he slights his work in order to play with the child. After a particularly hard day Jeanne tells Seth that she cannot stand the poverty any longer.

Marcia decides to pay a visit to Jeanne. She is very much shocked at the commonness of the house in which the Thornes live. She sees Jeanne's dissatisfaction and pleads with her to come back to the city with her and enjoy the happiness to which she is entitled. Seth learns of the new arrangement and is dazed by the loss of both Jeanne and the baby. Marcia, fearing Jeanne will change her mind, tells Seth that he has had his chance to make them happy and failed. She contrasts the life that Muggins will lead left on the farm, with the many advantages she would have in a wealthy home in the city. Seth realizes the logic of her reasoning and, although it is difficult

CAST.

The Girls	Margaret Joslin Marcia Moore
Ernie	Ernie Shields
Janitor	Harry Todd

Can a young man become engaged to two ladies at once? Ernie was convinced that one could not before he got into the predicament himself, but unfortunately through some unlucky incidents he found himself in this identical situation. Also unluckily, one of the ladies was rather husky and very demonstrative in her affections. He thought he might elude this lady through the help of the janitor. The idea was all right, but the execution of the plan was all wrong, and Ernie and the janitor found themselves in very unpleasant circumstances. Also the janitor got mad at Ernie in a very impolite moment. Then the fat fiance got mad, the other girl got mad, the cops got mad, and a mysterious gentleman in a black hat got mad. In fact, every one got mad and the result was that there was almost a murder, almost a suicide, a couple of asphyxiations and a hari-kari. Nothing turned out as anybody had expected, and a perfectly inoffensive spectator fell off a high building, into the bargain.

"SUCH IS LIFE IN CHINA."

Powers Travelaugh.
The First of a Clever Series.

By Hy. Mayer.

This is a combination of Hy. Mayer cartoons and travel pictures, which go to make up a travel comedy. Architecture typical of China is shown, a pagoda, a street scene, with soldiers marching through an arch. Cartoons show how Europe taught China to hold the gun, and how China learned to drive the white man out of his country with the European gun. Cartoons caricaturing the fashions follow. The jinrikisha is contrasted with the auto. The children are shown with their living toys, birds, fish, etc. A cartoon shows that a very good boy may some day have a rhinoceros. Market scenes and restaurants in the open air follow. Trades, the shoemaker and barber are illustrated, with comic comments in the form of cartoons. Chinese theatre scenes come next. The interiors of the theatres are shown and the strange antics of the country traveling troupes. The music reminds Mayer of his janitor turning on the steam. The first Chinese skyscraper is shown. When the Chinese cut of their queues they freed themselves from backwardness and bigotry.

"BLIND MAN'S BLUFF"

Jane reads to the supposedly blind young man.

IMP two-reel Comedy - Drama written and produced by Matt Moore. A rich young man fails to arouse any enthusiasm in the heart of a philanthropically inclined beauty whose penchant is the care of the blind. So he pretends blindness. Then he is shot in the eye by accident and the maiden is won.

CAST.

John Livingston	Matt Moore
Jane Reynolds	Jane Gail
Mrs. Patter-Jones	Nellie Slattery
Butler	Howard Crampton
Matty	Matty Rubert
Andy	Andy Clark

JANE REYNOLDS, a young society woman, tired of the strain of high society and determined to do something worth while, sees an advertisement in the paper requiring the services of a young lady to take care of a helpless blind man and decides to apply for the position.

Meanwhile, John Livington, a wealthy young bachelor, is induced by two young boy acquaintances to take a ride in their new auto. Preparing him for the ride with goggles, they drag him out of the house and into their car. They are riding down the hill when they hit a tree, causing a general spill. Mistaking John for the blind man to whom she is going to apply, Jane assists him to his feet and walks with him to the address specified in the advertisement. John tells her she is leading him to the wrong house, as he lives next door. Thinking that there is a mistake in the address, Jane leads him to his own house. They are admitted by the butler, who does not understand the situation until a sly look from John over his automobile goggles puts the butler wise. John, in order to appear blind, continues to wear the goggles. Jane takes care of him until one day she catches him reading a paper. Horrified at the deceit practiced on her, she upbraids John bitterly and flies in a great rage from the house. John feels very badly, as he has learned to care for her.

Later the two boys are out in the woods shooting. After one of their random shots they hear a cry of pain. It comes from John, who has been shot by their carelessness, the shock causing total blindness. Not knowing what to do, the boys go to Jane and tell her what has happened.

The doctors are called in and they advise an operation. After the operation they tell Jane that they won't know the result until morning. Jane remains in the hall all through the night and in the morning she goes at once to John's room and there she finds him already dressed. It is apparent that the operation has proved a success and as she leaves Jane says: "You won't need me now; you can see." The two boys who were the innocent cause of all the trouble have been waiting on the porch all night, and they see Jane as she leaves the house. When John comes out in pursuit of Jane, the boys succeed in bringing them together.

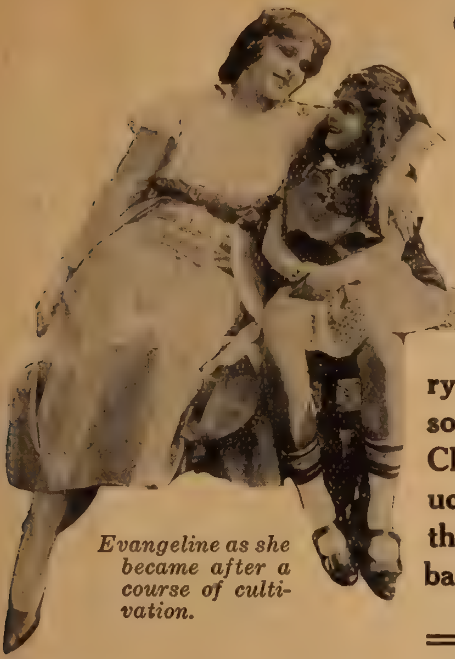
"The Human Cactus"

LAEMMLE two-reel Society Drama, produced by Rupert Julian from a story by Elsie Jane Wilson. Scenario by E. J. Clauson. Theorists educate girl of slums and then try to put her back again with an unusual result.



Evangeline as she became after a course of cultivation.

Evangeline, as she was before.

ELSIE JANE WILSON has written an original story of the Pygmalian and Galatea type which Bernard Shaw has made so famous, only Miss Wilson has put new life and a new twist in the old story which afforded Rupert Julian, who produced it, a fine chance for an unusual two-reel picture. The story is as follows:

Henry Roylance, an eminent sociologist, has written a book on his pet theory and he and Dr. Smead, an intimate friend, have been discussing it. The doctor calls him to task for several of his theories. The doctor insists that ladies and gentlemen are born and not made, and to end the controversy Roylance cites the example of the transformation from the spiked wild cactus to the cultivated spineless cactus. In spite of this evidence of the power of cultivation Smead declines to agree with him. So Roylance determines to prove his theory and to select a specimen from the lowest walks of life and make a perfect lady out of her.

In one of the lower alleys of the city lives Evangeline Dugan. The neighbors are unanimous in the opinion that she is the wildest of the wild. Her father is a typical loafer; her mother a ragpicker, while Evengeline sells flowers on one of the street corners. Her affections are bestowed upon one Jimmie O'Toole, a typical tough of the dive variety. Jimmie pretends to reciprocate, as it enables him to work the girl for money. Roylance and Smead, looking for a likely specimen, find Evangeline. They try to talk with her, but when they become inquisitive she refuses to speak to them. One of the gutter snipes nearby volunteers to show the two men where the girl lives and they decide to ask permission from the girl's parents for their experiment. Evangeline's curiosity is aroused and she follows them to the house. Dugan and his wife are quarreling as usual, but he sees their evidence of prosperity and becomes cringing and servile. Roylance makes his proposal to take the girl, and Dugan pretends that Evangeline is their sole support and speaks tearfully of the affection in which they hold Evangeline.

CAST.

Henry Roylance	Douglas Gerrard
Dr. Smead	Rupert Julian
Evangeline Dugan	Elsie J. Wilson
Mr. Dugan	Doc Crane
Genevieve Dugan	Zoe DuRae
Jane Toplady	Lena Baskette
Mrs. Dugan	Lule Warrenton

Arrangements are finally made and Evangeline is taken to the Roylance home. Mrs. Roylance is one of the creme de la creme of society and does not like the idea of having the street urchin brought into the house. Roylance overrides her objections, however, and Evangeline is placed in the first clean room she has ever seen.

Resentful and stubborn at first, Evangeline finally blossoms out into a beautiful woman. Roylance, winning her confidence, finds her an apt pupil, and at the end of a year she is admitted to be externally a perfect lady. According to his agreement, Roylance returns the girl to her parents and she finds the contrast almost insupportable. She again meets Jimmie, now a dope fiend, and shudders at the fate she has escaped. Her father and mother sneer at her ladylike manners, but the younger sister tries to imitate her ways. When the father finds she has no money he angrily upbraids her for returning to live on them.

Roylance and Smead talk over the experiment and Smead is forced to admit that his friend's theory has been proved. He asks Roylance what he is going to do with the girl, now that he has made a lady out of her, and Roylance is at a loss to answer. Smead tells him that the girl can never live the old life now, and that unless she is given some assistance the experiment will be a crime instead of a success. Evangeline is on the point of being cast out when Smead arrives at her house and is met by Dugan. Evangeline is surprised to see him and he tells her that he has come to tell her something he had forgotten. Not willing to take him into the squalid room, Evangeline suggests they take a walk The girl presses Smead for an explanation and he finally tells her that he has always insisted that they could never make a lady out of her. He confesses that he not only believes it now, but he hopes she will undertake the job of making a gentleman out of him. She accepts and the two start their plans for the future.

Director Jacques Jaccard has resumed the production of one-reel film plays of the "Little Stories of Real Life" series, four of which already have ben made by him.

Peggy	Edith Roberts
Stanley Rose	Harry Benham
Mandy	Nellie Slattery
Judge Harkness	Frank Smith
Sheriff Perkins	William J. Welsh

With the death of her grandfather Peggy Sanford is left with a heavily mortgaged home and Mandy, a faithful servant. Judge Harkness, an old friend of the family, calls and tells Peggy that Stanley Rose, a city chap, has foreclosed the mortgage. In answer to his query as to where she and Mandy are going to live, Peggy says: "I reckon we're goin' to live right here."

Soon afterwards Stanley Rose calls at the office of Judge Harkness and requests him to take the necessary steps in the matter of the foreclosure. The judge is in a quandary as to what to do, but finally says to the sheriff: "We've known Peggy since she was a baby, but the law is the law, and you've got to put her out." The sheriff and his deputy have to perform their disagreeable duty.

Mandy exclaims: "Jess' lemme see somebody put ma honey out." The sheriff and his deputy have scarcely left when Stanley Rose arrives in person and Peggy comes demurely in to face him. Stanley has imagined Miss Sanford to be a tall, gaunt old maid, probably too mean to pay anything she could avoid. He smiles pleasantly and says: "I asked for Miss Sanford, the tenant here. I suppose you must be her niece." Peggy explains that she is the only Miss Sanford, and the one against whom he has set the mighty mechinery of the law in motion. Stanley assures her that the lawyer must have made a mistake, and says she must remain with him. Neither he nor Peggy give any thought to the question of propriety and they spend a delightful afternoon roaming about the place. That evening Mandy annouces that it is bed time. "Run off to bed, honey," she says, "Ah found a place in de barn fo' the gemman to snooze." Peggy protests at this, but Stanley insists that he intended to sleep there and Mandy makes him as comfortable as possible.

The next day Stanley realizes that his stay at the house would occasion gossip, so he goes to Judge Harkness and requests him to draw a lease in favor of Miss Sanford, as he is going to board in the village. Meanwhile Peggy tells Mandy that they can't stay there. Armed with a lease, Stanley starts back to the Sanford homestead, where he finds Peggy in the parlor surrounded by her most treasured possessions, including the cat, which she intends to induce him to sell to them. Stanley hastily exhibits the lease and Peggy, in her excess of joy, throws her arms around his neck and kisses him. Then, realizing her unmaidenly action, she runs like a scared rabbit out of the room, while Mandy kneels down and kisses the hem of his coat. Stanley runs after Peggy and finds her.

"Don't you think the parson could arrange it so I could stay, too?" he asks, as the willing captive nestles in his arms.

"THE BROWNS SEE THE FAIR."

Nestor Comedy.

Produced by Horace Davey.

CAST.

Henry Brown	Neal Burns
Mrs. Brown	Stella Adams
Passenger	Betty Compson

Harry Brown is given a vacation—the first one in years. He decides to take his wife and children to see the San Diego Fair. The wife has a lame back and is always complaining. That night they give the youngsters a bath in anticipation of the trip. The next morning everything woes wrong. They only have gone a short distance when Stella discovers that they have forgotten the baby's bottle, so Neal and the baby return for it. They arrive at the station just as the train is pulling out, but with the assistance of several onlookers they are helped on board. Neal leaves Stella to mind the children and goes into another car, where he starts a flirtation with Betty, but this only brings trouble, for Stella comes in and takes him out by the ear.

Arrived at the fair, they start in to see the sights. Betty's sweetheart is one of the concession men. Neal is anxious to enter some of the concessions, but Stella refuses. He finally manages to break away and runs in to Betty. He invites her to have some ice cream with him, which she does, but one of the children, who has wondered away from his mother to ride on the merry-go-round, discovers his father and goes back to tell his mother on father. Meanwhile the concessionaire has discovered Betty's duplicity and starts out after her. Stella also starts after her husband. They chase each other through the fair grounds. Stella discovers an officer and solicits his aid. They finally catch Neal and all go home.

"THE CHILDREN'S PARADISE."

Powers Split Reel Educational.

This split reel shows how the children of the New York lower East Side live, eat, play and sleep. The dangers to which they are exposed in street games are graphically illustrated. The gutter games, which are all they have in the way of amusement, are shown. The over-crowded conditions of the districts are shown and the noise is suggested so vividly that we can almost hear it. Children are seen sleeping on the fire escapes close to the elevated.

The contrast comes when the weakly city children are taken by the Christian Herald to the Christian Herald Home at Nyack-on-the-Hudson. Three thousand enjoy a ten days' outing there every year. They are bathed and given fresh clothes on arrival. They are then free to play where they will. They have enough to eat for the first time in their lives. They are provided with swings, seesaws and other forms of amusement which are safe and good for them. They are shown reveling in big dishes of ice cream. The picture closes with a group on the lawn waving flags.

THINKS ACTOR IS BEGGAR.

IN filming "Men and Women," the first episode of the "Dollars and Sense" series being produced by Director Jacques Jaccard, many of the scenes were taken at Venice, one of the summer resorts on the seashore near Los Angeles.

Dr. H. F. Crane, dean of the actors of Universal City, played the role of a blind beggar with an old violin. Robert E. Clarke, a personal friend of Jaccard, was with the director most of the time during the making of the picture, and he told Dr. Crane, jokingly, that he could probably make more money as a beggar than he could as an actor. The two men laughed about it and finally agreed to try.

Clarke fixed the actor on a stool in front of a leading hotel at the summer resort and put a sign, "Blind for twenty years," in front of him, then moved away to watch the results. In less than a minute a well dressed woman came along, stopped and looked at the old man intently, then she opened her purse and dropped fifty cents into the tin cup and went on.

However, Jack Connolly happened along and spoiled the performance by grasping the money and rushing after the woman, who was astonished when told the fact, but then thoroughly appreciated the joke.

their arrival at Honolulu, Larry is arrested. The detective searches his belongings and finds the $5,000, but no sign of the additional $10,000. Larry asserts his innocence and claims there is a mistake. Through a clever trick he eludes the detective and joins Mabel at their hotel. Father is told of their scheme and agrees to witness the ceremony, and they hurriedly set out for the church. Detective Boggs pursues the two, but doesn't succeed in locating them until after the ceremony. He takes Larry in charge. The latter, not wishing it to be known that he is arrested, tells Mabel and her father that the detective is an old friend and that they will be back shortly.

Larry is thrown into the native prison and Mabel and her father, returning to the hotel, break the news to mother. Mother collapses, but finally revives sufficiently to take out her spite on poor father. Larry wires his father that there has evidently been a mistake, that he only took the $5,000. Jim Crane believes in fair play, and orders an investigation. Velie's dishonesty is discovered and the forged check is traced back to him. The matter is not straightened out for some time, and meanwhile poor Larry languishes in a Hawaiian prison, the natives and flies being his companions. He is given hard work to do, and Mabel and her father do everything to get Larry's freedom, but without avail.

The Fourth of July approaches and Larry is taken out with the other prisoners. He absolutely refuses to work on the national holiday of America and has a fight with the guards. It would not be a holiday without appropriate celebration and Larry decides to have one of his own. He lights the fuse that is connected with a big store of dynamite and yells for the prisoners to run for their lives. Mabel and her mother have returned to the prison and meet the fleeing prisoners. Just as Larry is about to be taken back, Detective Boggs receives a cable from Larry's father stating that there has been a mistake and Larry, realizing that he is forgiven, makes plans for a happy honeymoon with Mabel.

course of events, she is run over by an automobile, containing the Secret Service man, who is hunting for the stolen model, but no L-Ko actress minds a little thing like that. The only effect it has upon her is to cause her to become violently enamoured of the youth, whom she leads back to the beanery. He spurns her when she won't reveal the secret of the airship, and, overcome with grief, she falls asleep and dreams.

With the S. S. man she mounts her trusty monoplane, the model safely hidden. Up they mount to a height of 17,000 feet. Alice looks over the edge. Horrors! The boss and the cook are in pursuit! "Out with the trusty bombs, boys, and let us blow the miscreants into——" Oh! I forgot that Alice is a perfect lady. She probably said "next week." A rain of bombs descends upon the other machine, without hitting it. "Aim lower and to the left, boys," screams Alice. They try to follow her instructions, but an aeroplane is hard to hit. See descriptions of the European war. No good giving the job to any one else. If Alice wants those miscreants annihilated she has just got to do it herself. No sooner said than done. Alice is an L-Ko actress, and no stunt is impossible for her. Over the edge of the machine she clambers and drops down, down to the machine below. Do the boss and cook welcome her arrival? They do not. They seize her and heartlessly throw her to perdition. But the S. S. man has an inspiration. He throws Alice's parasol after her. She catches and opens it. It acts as a parachute and she lands—kerplunk—and scares herself awake!

Attention of Mr. Joseph Brandt.

My dear Mr. Brandt:-

Congratulations on your latest serial, "PEG O' THE RING"! Both the story and the stars are extremely popular, and is one of the biggest winners you have put over for some time.

I am showing "PEG O' THE RING" at my Victoria, Lawrence; Orpheum, Haverhill; and Eagle Theatre, Roxbury, and am doing a tremendous business on the picture.

Now that you have a "money winner" why not increase the serial to 20 or 22 episodes? I, for one, would be more than delighted to hear of such an increase.

Hoping to hear a favorable reply, I am

Very truly yours,

Harry I. Wasserman

Monday night Eva comes home from work and her mother tells her that she now can have her shoes, because the lazy husband and father has finally gone to work. Eva has not raised her eyes from the time she entered the room and her mother, observing this, looks down at Eva's feet —and there is disclosed the girl's new shoes.

This is an outline of the tale, but there is nothing in this cold and colorless telling of the story to reveal the supreme and human struggle through which this shop girl passed until she has finally obtained her shoes.

The last reel deals with Eva's fate as it might have been in happier surroundings. The overwhelming pity of it all is impressed upon the spectator by the little scenes from the life of a normal country girl, and from those of the fortunate daughter of a sheltered home.

The production is made with all the skill and attention to detail which we have learned to expect from Lois Weber. The contents of a whole five and ten cent store was transported to the studio in order to film the store scenes. Real corned beef and cabbage were cooked on a real stove, with real fire in it, and the furniture which was used in the interior of the Meyer home was specially bought from just such people as the Myers were.

"BASHFUL CHARLEY'S PROPOSAL."

Rev. Mr. Fish has decided to go fishing and casts his line. Heinie arrives at the houseboat, and the widow, seeing the minister nearby, calls him to the boat to marry them at once. This does not suit Heinie at all, and he takes refuge in flight. Running to the upper deck, he discovers the disconsolated Lilly. She does not recognize him at first, but he explains nd they embrace.

He persuades Lilly to elope with him, and arriving at the mainland, they search for a justice to perform the ceremony. The widow grabs the minister and takes him to land also, expecting to catch the fleeing bridegroom and make him marry her. Heinie and Lilly find a justice and the ceremony is started. The widow and the minister, seeing them from the distance, make a short cut and run into Charley. The widow still believes that it is Charley who has caused her anguish and insists that he marry her. This just suits Charley, as he has not been able to make up his courage to propose. Heinie and Lilly return to the house of Charley, but find that Charley and the widow have followed suit. Heinie demands his five thousand dollars, which Charley pays.

Eva couldn't eat her lunch.

with Mary in the leading role, that of a girl who virtually sold out for a pair of shoes.

Those who have been fortunate enough to see this Bluebird photoplay know the tremendous success which Miss MacLaren scored in this her first real part in pictures. And it need only be said that as soon as the feature was shown in the projection room at Universal City every one of the directors was falling over himself to produce a photoplay with Miss MacLaren featured.

Miss Weber saw the tremendously sympathetic quality in Mary MacLaren's face with unerring accuracy, and it is due to her determination to bring it out on the screen which resulted in adding one of the choicest stars to the Bluebird firmament. She is being featured by Phillips Smalley in a five-reeler, "Wanted—A Home," written by Lois Weber.

for him to let Muggins go, he finally consents.

Jeanne easily takes up the gay life she lived before her marriage. A young doctor admires her very much and the two are together a great deal. Little Muggins is left in care of a nurse and has every conceivable toy to make her happy, but thinks more of the plain doll that her daddy made her than she does of all her new things. The mother, several times, has told her to throw the old doll away. The child misses her doll and slips out of the house to look for it. She becomes tired and, lying down in the grass, falls asleep. The searchers find her asleep, wet and bedraggled.

The days have been sad ones for Seth; he misses the companionship of Muggins more and more, and one night is troubled by the thought that the little one needs him. Unable to shake off the thought, he sets out for the city. The exposure has resulted in sickness to little Muggins. Her mother still leaves her to the nurse and her condition becomes serious. Seth, knowing that Jeanne and her sister would probably refuse to allow him to see the child, decides to sneak into the house. He prowls about until he locates what he thinks is Muggins' room, but is seen by one of the gardeners, who shoots at him. The shot strikes him in the neck and he falls among the shrubbery. The man thinks the intruder has left and Seth stealthily makes his way to the window of Muggins' room. The nurse has left the room for a few minutes and Seth finds the little one very still. He takes her up and finds that she is delirious and calling for her daddy.

The young doctor and Jeanne are together, when Jeanne suddenly feels that she must go and see the child. The doctor offers to accompany her, Jeanne realizes that after all Seth means a great deal to her and goes to him. A short time later the parents are both back home at the old cabin and the child is on the road to a quick recovery. Jeanne and Seth understand each other better now, and little Muggins is the link which brings them together.

hood to early manhood. He is known among the trappers and traders as "John o' the Mountains," and is famed for his hunting and trapping ability. He has never seen a woman and only very few men. One day he stumbles upon a magazine and while looking through its pages sees pictures of women. He is captivated by their beauty, and the father, coming upon him, tears the magazine from his hand, angrily telling him that all women are a sham. The boy is surprised and the old man is on the point of telling him his story, but decides to hold the confession until a better time.

John is sent to the Post with the annual catch of skins and realizes quite a sum of money from their sale. He also meets Cherry Mellotte, one of the inmates of the dance hall and becomes infatuated with her. She is tired of the life she leads and is only waiting an opportunity to get away. She tries to steal the money from John, but he catches her at it and angrily throws the money in her lap. Returning home, he runs into a fight between one of the N. W. M. P. and a gang of timber thieves. He brings the policeman, seriously wounded, to his father's cabin. When old McDonald sees the uniform he angrily refuses him any assistance and his son cannot understand it. The wounded policeman reaches the headquarters and turns in a report. McGraw, who has charge of the district, gathers his men together and sets out in pursuit of the bandits. Abbie, McGraw's daughter, has grown up with her father in the wilderness. She begs him to take her with him and he, although knowing the mission is dangerous, consents.

McDonald has told his son why he is so bitter against the M. P. It is because his wife eloped with one of them, and the boy learns why he has been kept from the sight of all womankind. Soon afterwards McGraw and his party arrive at the cabin to ask John to guide them to the haunt of the timber thieves. He meets Abbie and there is a mutual attraction between them, and, although the father protests against his son's going, the boy is unable to resist the opportunity to be near the girl. They all reach a deserted cabin and the girl is left there, while the others set out to capture the thieves. There is a fierce battle and the leader of the thieves, seeing his men getting the worst of it, takes refuge in flight. He returns to the cabin and finds the girl. He determines to take her with him. But John, who has been watching the cabin, enters and frustrates the bad man's plan. He and the theief have a terrific battle and John proves to be the better man. Flushed with his victory, he claims the girl as his own, won in a man-to-man fight. He is just about to carry her away when Cherry enters the cabin. She is on her way to the city, and feeling gratitude to John for the money he has given her, she tells him of the mistake he is making and he lets the girl go.

Old McDonald had followed the officers and comes upon the scene to find McGraw dangerously wounded. He has recognized the officer before, but kept the knowledge a secret. McGraw begs for water and McDonald is about to refuse when his better nature prevails and he eases the last moments of his old enemy. McGraw then tells him that his wife has always been faithful and still awaits his return. He also tells of his own wife's death and begs McDonald to care for his girl. The story ends as McDonald leaves to search out his faithful wife. John's guardianship proves very acceptable to the girl and woman, tired of the strain of society.

"THE MONEY LENDERS."

Whitey Hale, to go to Carson's Cut in the mountains and fire bullets at the train of explosives to explode the dynamite. As the train passes through the rocky pass. Dorgan sends a bullet into the center car and the train is blown to atoms. Engineer Howard and Conductor Bangs narrowly escape death, while two breakmen perish. Engineer Howard sees Whitey Hale on the top of the pass, fires at him, and Hale falls to his death in the ravine, while Dorgan escapes. Bruce calls at Murray's office, meeting Alice and Murray there. The dire news of the destruction of the train is received by telephone and Murray almost collapses as he realizes that he has lost the opportunity to raise money. Dorgan visits Bruce and demands blood money, but Bruce spurns him, and Dorgan vows to be revenged on Bruce.

Murray, greatly alarmed over the investigation which is being conducted to fix the cause of the train disaster, visits Lytell and Brown and demands a return of the agreement, but they tell him that Bruce has the contract. Murray then asks Bruce for the agreement, but Bruce boldly tells him that he will return the contract to him only on one condition—that he compel his daughter, Alice, to marry him. Murray confesses to Alice and she resolves to use startegy in trying to get the agreement away from Bruce. She calls on Bruce and manages to get the keys of his desk.

That night Dorgan invades Bruce's office in revenge, and while he is there Alice creeps in and begins searching the place for the agreement. Bruce appears, surprises Alice and they struggle, their figures being silhouetted on the window blind. Engineer Howard, passing below, is alarmed and runs up to the place. Dorgan, hiding behind a bookcase in the office, shoots Bruce dead as he struggles with Alice. Dorgan escapes down the stairs. Howard runs into Bruce's office, sees Alice with a revolver in her hand and takes the pistol from her. She runs home with the agreement and gives the document to her father. The police find Howard in Bruce's office with the revolver in his hand, and they arrest him and lock him in prison as the slayer of Bruce. Murray and his daughter read the papers the next morning and see Howard's portrait there, with an account of his arrest. Alice then determines to confess everything, as she believes herself guilty. She sets out in her auto and meets Dorgan as he crosses a street. Dorgan, trying to get out of the path of Alice's auto leaps in front of a street car and is fatally hurt. Dying, he confesses that he slew Bruce because he would not pay him for blowing up the explosive train.

Alice goes east to try to borrow money from relations to aid her father. She meets Howard, who is on his way to take over a rich legacy just bequeathed him. They make the trip together and Howard asks Alice to become his bride, to which proposal she agrees.

and turns out the lights and when the lights flash on again the window is seen to be open. The chief believes she has fled, so he orders two men to go up the fire escape, while the others are sent below to cut off her escape. Leila then comes from her hiding place in a davenport and finds Tom unconscious. When Tom revives his first words request Leila to marry him that night. She confronts him with a pistol, however, and threatens to have him arrested for his joke. While they are talking, the officers come in with their prisoners, and Tom, hearing footsteps, hides. The officers then tell Leila that she must accompany them, but Tom comes from his hiding place and holds them up. Two of the gang return and attake the officers and Tom and Leila escape in the confusion. She takes him to her home to have his bruises dressed. Poor Tom receives a crushing blow when he finds that the diary he has based his hopes on is her grandmother's. Completely crushed in spirit, Tom starts out dejectedly, but Leila asks him timidly if the license he has secured won't be good the next day.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

MONTREAL, Que., June, 1916.—Mr. Sam Bernstein, of the Globe Theatre, has been the centre of much interesting speculation lately. Owing to his splendid success with the Globe Theatre he has been the recipient of many flattering offers from other well known houses in Montreal, but so far, has refused all of them, preferring to remain with his first love, for the present at least.

THE National Biograph Theatre of this city, one of the oldest houses in Montreal, and one of the very few to maintain a steadily successful record, has, after nine and a half years of continual use of one service, made a change. Mr. Bourget, the manager, is now using Universal Service, and seems well pleased. The house is quite up to date and seats over eight hundred people.

VALLEYFIELD, Que., June, 1916.—The Valleyscope Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Joe Martineau, has been progressing at a great rate lately. Mr. Martineau has been introducing a number of important reforms which have certainly pushed his business ahead. He is a user of Universal service.

FLESHERTON, Ont., June, 1915.—Mr. Graham of this city has opened the Princess Theatre and has announced that he will use Universal Service, including features and serials.

TORONTO, Ont., June, 1916.—From an unusually reliable source of information it has been learned that Toronto is to have still another film exchange. The newest recruit to the ranks of the film business in this city will be the Triangle Company, which it is said have completed all arrangements to open their new offices in August. No announcement has been made as yet of who is to take charge of this territory, but two men at least holding responsible positions in this city are under consideration.

THE Universal Film Company of this city have secured a unique and valuable form of publicity by using the Bulletin Board, which is placed in the front of every trolley car. This space cannot be bought and great credit must be given to the company for securing it.

MR. W. BARRETT, formerly manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Universal Film Company, who resigned recently and returned to Toronto, has been appointed manager of the Toronto branch of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Barrett was on the road for the Mutual Company for a few weeks, but his occupancy of the manager's chair was inevitable and only a matter of a short time.

ST. JOHN, N. B., June, 1916.—Mr. D. Richards, who operates the Gem Theatre in Fredericton, N. B., visited the Universal office in St. John last week and contracted for Red Feather features during the summer months. Also Mr. L. R. Acker, who owns and operates a chain of theatres in Novia Scotia, stopped off long enough to take dinner and make final arrangements for "Peg O' The Ring" in his circuit, including Halifax. Mr. Acker stated that the "Graft" serial had drawn him better crowds than any of his previous serial stories.

THE Imperial Theatre of this city, the largest and finest moving picture house, has arranged to run the Universal serial, "Peg O' The Ring," after the Empress Theatre, also situated in St. John, N. B. That a house of the calibre of the Imperial should consent to take a second run is quite a tribute to the money-making qualities of this serial.

THE past week has been an eventful one in the head office of the Canadian Film Company here. Mr. Hoffman, the general manager of exchanges, was in Toronto again and Mr. Geo. Weeks of the Detroit branch also came over to confer with Mr. Hoffman during his visit. From Mr. Weeks it was learned that he intends to open shortly a publicity department in Detroit, similar to the one in operation in Toronto. Several men are being considered for the position, but no announcement yet has been made. Mr. W. H. Davidson, who for some months past has been special representative of the Universal company in Ontario, announced his resignation to take place immediately.

KANSAS CITY NEWS.

By GEO. H. BOWLES.

KANSAS CITY is going to have a big screen club just like New York, Chicago and other large cities. The organization probably will make its formal bow with a huge movie ball in Convention Hall which would give ample opportunity to stage the most elaborate of affairs.

Many representatives from the film exchanges in Kansas City and also a number of exhibitors met recently in the Hotel Baltimore and organized temporarily. A committee was appointed to draft plans for a permanent organization and a second meeting will be held shortly to effect such an organization. At the first meeting, at which seventy-five men identified with the distribution or the exhibition of pictures attended, there was a great deal of enthusiasm and from the rousing talks made, Kansas City will have just as strong a screen club as any in the country.

It is planned to open club rooms in the downtown district as soon as the club is perfected. Seventy-five persons already have paid the initiation fee and a campaign to boost this number to two hundred is now under way.

THE Kansas City Universal exchange has done a wonderful business recently with the three special Universal features, "Traffic in Souls," "Damon and Pythias," and "The Williamson Submarine Expedition." The exchange has offered a blanket contract for the three at thirty-five dollars or fifteen dollars for each if booked separately. Every exhibitor showing any of these special features has reported a big business.

THE Bluebirds are now in every nook and corner of the Missouri and Kansas territory supplied by the Kansas City exchange and the Bluebird name and trade-mark has become a magnet for the theatres showing these features. The special assistance given each exhibitor by the Bluebird publicity department has proven a great success and has convinced the Bluebird exhibitors the exchange offers aid very few others can give.

THE Colonial Theatre, Wichita, Kas., has contracted for and is showing first run Bluebirds. The run is for two days and the opening, "Naked Hearts," proved the value of Bluebirds in the downtown district.

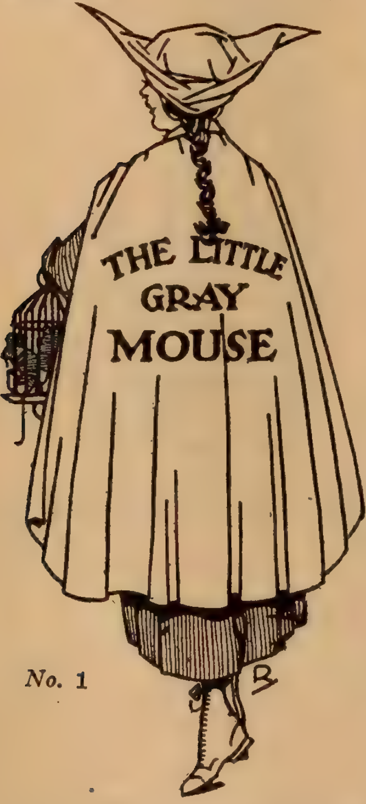
WEEK OF JULY 10.
01601 UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE—Grace Cunard and Frances Ford in "Peg O' the Ring" (Ep. 11, 2-R.)

PUTTING IT OVER

ARE you "Putting 'em Over," friend Exhibitor? Are you taking advantage of this new department of advertising suggestions, and making a noise in your town that echoes in the tinkle of coins at the box office? Get the habit. The cost? Machs nix aus. Nil, negligible, trivial, too small to be considered. There' a peculiar something about us humans that draws us to the novel, the strange, original and spectacular. We are assisting you to take advantage of this queer trait, in a way that will net you many, many admissions you might not get otherwise. If you didn't happen to notice this department in last week's M. P. W. here's the plan. Every week we shall select three or more pictures, and suggest novel advertising stunts that will draw attention not alone to the features advertised, but to your house as well. Keep these stunts going and people will begin to look for them and to talk about your house in a way that will mean crowds where empty seats now yawn discouragingly.



No. 1

FIRST on the list we have "Nature Incorporated," with those popular stars, Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon, favorites both. You will find the story in the WEEKLY, issue of July 8, which will be three days in advance of release date. A brief review will be found in this issue, page 45. The accompanying illustration shows an automobile filled with girls in bathing costume. The driver of the car should be dressed as an old man, with gray wig, big black-rimmed spectacles and a grey flannel—well, nightshirt, about meets the description. Heavy gray moustache and the stern expression of a social reformer will fill the bill. The banner shown on the car in the illustration gives you the tip as to the necessary signs, and you can bet your day's receipts that the outfit will attract a lot of attention. Shoot it all through town, business, residence, suburban districts—wherever a movie fan lives let him or her know you are showing a picture so good you can give it special advertising.

Number Two is "16 Martin Street," with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson. Released July 13. A detective story which immediately suggests a Sherlock Holmes make-up as illustrated. Get a man dressed in a long and loud ulster or macintosh, with a long moustache, a fore-and-aft cap, a big pipe, and a placard on his back with the name of the play as shown. On his breast let him show a placard with your theatre name and date. People will see that first as they meet him, and they will turn to rubber, getting a flash at the title then.

Do the same with number three, "The Little Gray Mouse," Edith Roberts and Harry Benham. Released July 14. Only use the prettiest girl you can find. Fix up a white head-dress and a long gray cloak and gray skirt, painting the name of the play on the cape good and big. The theatre name and date for the front had better be painted on a card as the opening of the cape would prevent a broad smooth surface necessary for easy reading. See review, page 35, this issue.

Try these schemes this week and you'll be watching for this department of suggestions every week. If these do not appeal to you they may at least suggest to you that every week and every feature contains possibilities that you should take advantage of.

If you have any suggestions send them to the editor.

EXCHANGEMEN'S CO-OPERATIVE COLUMN.

You help me and I'll help you.

The first item under this new heading, which is intended to be, as the title suggests, a co-operative department devoted to the interest of the exchanges, is an offer of assistance rather than a cry for help. Here it is:

I. Van Ronkel, Manager of the Bluebird Chicago Exchange, states that his office is overstocked with 24-sheets on almost all Bluebird subjects, and that they would gladly dispose of them in any office which is in need of them.

Read the Pink Sheet for particulars of this column.

"Ignatz's Icy Injury"

The most remarkable stunt comedy ever filmed or even attempted. Billy Armstrong is shown in the first hanging over the edge of a skyscraper while the traffic far down below is plainly seen.

A ROARING SCREAMING L-KO

NATIONAL COLLEGE
SH & CO.

In the lower picture the "skate squad" cops are actually roller skating along the coping, the very roof edge of the same towering building. Your audiences get more than this in the picture. A skating rink scene where the entire company are falling all over the rink is not only one of the biggest punches in comedy, but one of the most lavish sets ever used in a comedy.

Book L-KO'S for profit. They make friends for you and for your house. They will draw the crowds. The smashing success of this stunt picture, "Ignatz's Icy Injury," is repeated week after week in L-KO Komedies. Released on the regular Universal Program, and may be booked through any Universal Exchange, or

ADVANCE NOTICES

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Heart of a Child." With Edna Flugrath and a brilliant cast. Twenty-fourth Red Feather Production. Released July 10. Another "My Old Dutch?" Impossible, you say? Not a-tall, not a-tall. There's a way of telling a very human story. There's a way of showing the unfolding of character. There's a way of using the tricks of the theatre, that includes the use of easily recognized types; and one almost might say, of using standard situations, that gets 'em, that's all. It gets 'em. Every director hasn't this gift. Many are afraid of being called theatrical. Or they are afraid they will produce something "melodramatic," just as though melodrama wasn't recognized on the stage and off as a standard form of the drayma. Yeh. And so when the folks in your theatre see "The Heart of a Child" they will sit on the edge of their seats and they will forget that they are watching a play. And the heroine's innocence; and her struggle to make something of herself; and the foiling of the villain; the triumph of the hero; the lovers' embrace while the rest of the company look on in smiling approval, will prove just as effective as it did in "My Old Dutch" or any other successful play built along similar lines. It is one of those sure-fire pictures that have the universal heart appeal. Portraying the rise of a girl of the slums to musical comedy honors, with all the temptations and dangers that lingered along her path, "The Heart of a Child" is a bully fine picture that will pack your house and send the audiences out asking for "more of the same."

Herbert Rawlinson in "Nature Incorporated." With Agnes Vernon. Two-Reel Gold Seal Romantic Drama. From the Saturday Evening Post Story by Sinclair Lewis. Directed by Wm. Worthington. Released July 11. Well, well, well. And they say that Herbert gets paid for it, too. Imagine him, a young real estate man. Sells a plot of ground to an old guy who preaches the simple life and induces folks to join his colony, where they cultivate and live on the humble bean, wear as few clothes as Ruth St. Denis and generally disport themselves unconventionally to say the least. The prettiest disciple of all is Agnes and Herbert had to join the colony (and live on beans) to be near her. How he persuaded the high brow nature faker over a bottle of schnapps to have a "revelation" that bade him give Agnes into his (Herbert's) keeping, and what the simple life amounts to after all makes one of the most absorbingly interesting light dramas that have ever been graced by these two popular players. A corking story, wonderfully well acted and directed.

"Ignatz's Icy Injury." With Billy Armstrong and Lucille Hudson. Two-Reel L-Ko Stunt Comedy. Released July 12. Another of those amazing L-Ko com-binations of fun, foolishness and dare-devil doings. Billy is "Count ———," or so his card reads, and he borrows a dollar from Reggie so that he can call on Reggie's girl. Reggie tries to expose him, but the ladies are all for the Count. The party adjourns to an ice rink (one of the finest and biggest sets ever used in a comedy), and after watching some fine fancy skating Billy gets up on the icy stage himself. Later the whole company are flopping around on the ice, and it is positively the funniest stunt ever pulled. Ignatz (Billy) finally makes his escape to the top of a skyscraper. The police "skate squad" chase him along the edge of the roof. Billy falls off and lands in an ambulance a couple of hundred feet below. Some picture. A wonder and a winner.

"The Little Gray Mouse." With Edith Roberts and Harry Benham. Two-Reel Imp Love Drama. Directed by Winthrop J. Kelly. Released July 14. One of those love dramas that have all the elements of heart interest, strong plot, real and swift action, and last but not least, a beautiful young woman playing the heroine and a handsome young man opposite. That's an unbeatable combination. Edith is in a convent and Harry lives close by with an invalid father. A fake housekeeper, member of a blackmailing gang, is after father's coin, and Edith gets wise. That's the situation up to the climax, which is unusual and gives the final punch that puts this fine picture over with a bang.

The Serial that Thrills, Delights and Fascinates

Never in the history of serials has there been a subject so human, so intensely interesting to young and old as the Universal's great special all-star circus serial, "PEG O' THE RING." Filled to the brim with all that makes the circus a perennial delight; crammed to running over with love, romance and adventure; jammed to the guards with action, thrills, the mysteries of life under the big tops and the people of the sawdust arena, it stands today unparalleled in public appreciation; unique as a money maker, the most extraordinary serial ever offered.

"Peg O'The Ring"

Is produced by the most successful and experienced serial producers in the world. It is unquestionably the last word in serial production. It offers greater advertising possibilities to the live Exhibitor than any previous serial. In addition to a strong plot, an all-star cast and the interpolation of high class circus acts, this remarkable 15 weeks 30 reels photoplay serial is headed by the most popular of serial stars

Dear Sir:-

Would like to inquire as to what make of machines you use in your projection department.

An ex theatre man from this place was in Akron last week and while there attended a show at your theatre. He told me that it was the first time that he ever saw what he called perfect projection.

Yours truly;

My Dear Sir:-

Replying to your favor of the 30th ult., we are using two 1916 Model Motiographs in our projection room and we carry in stock an extra head for emergency use.

Having been in the picture business for many years, I have had quite some experience with projecting machines, in fact I believe I have used every brand of machine, (excepting one) that amounts to anything.

For many years I used Motiographs and discarded them a couple of years ago for the Powers 6-A, which I believed at that time to be better than the Motiograph.

In equipping our Strand Theatre, which we opened last September, we looked over the market thoroughly and decided on 1916 Motiographs because we liked the construction and the materials used in the same. While we are not interested in any make of machines, it pleases us to be able to say that we have had perfect results with these new model Motiographs. They have given us no trouble whatsoever to speak of and have done their work daily in a perfectly satisfactory manner.

Trusting this is the information you desire, we are,

Very sincerely yours,

ALICE HOWELL

Pronounced by hundreds of Exhibitors and millions of movie fans—

The World's GREATEST FEMALE SCREEN COMEDIAN

Beautiful of face and figure, Alice Howell does not hesitate to don the most ridiculous make-ups when she's busy producing laughs for L-KO Komedies. No mere male comedian has anything on Alice when it comes to stunts. Game as a world's champion, Alice gives and takes with the best athletes on the lot. That is one of the few reasons why she always surprises you in

L-KO KOMEDIES

You don't expect a woman to interpolate a hundred and one bits of funny business in every picture she plays—but Alice does. In fact, her methods are so highly original, her costumes are so wierd and different that she can be compared to no other comedian, male or female.

Some of her big and recent successes include "Pirates of the Air," where Alice dropped from one aeroplane to another in midair (?), "How Stars Are Made," a comedy scream, where this versatile young woman posed in a street parade in Los Angeles and almost broke up the procession; "A Busted Honeymoon," which was a hilarious medley, even funnier than the title, and "The Great Smash," a comedy built around a railroad wreck which causes convulsions of laughter wherever shown.

Alice Howell Appears Only in L-Ko Komedies

If you are looking for the simon-pure laugh-provokers; the comedies that put an audience in good humor and send them out to tell their friends "all about it," book L-KOs. For sheer novelty and originality remember that Alice Howell, the funniest woman on the screen, has the call. Watch for announcements of releases featuring this clever girl, and book early and often.

DO THEY ASK FOR FE

(No. 140. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

ASK the exhibitor who runs a big feature every day to tell you why he sinks so much money into his shows, and his answer will be: "My patrons want big features." But, DO they?

The trouble with the average exhibitor is that he takes things for granted. Having been stampeded into running big features, he has come to believe that his patrons demand them.

Convinced that this belief is absolutely WRONG—convinced that the picture fans want a varied program, I recently went to the expense of providing theatre owners in different sections of the country with ballots on which their patrons could indicate their preference in the way of motion picture entertainment.

The Result of this Vote has demonstrated that Two-thirds of the Photoplay public want the Regular Service Program

The vote proved that, instead of the big feature, it was the show containing three, four or five different subjects that is the most popular. It was also proved that where a two or a three-reel feature is advertised as heavily as the average five-reel feature is advertised, the short subject draws just as well—BETTER, when the public discovers that several other pictures are on the same program!

So sure am I that the same condition prevails in YOUR community that I will supply you, FREE OF CHARGE, with as many ballots as you can use in the event that you want to get your patrons' views on the program vs. the feature show. I want you to see for YOURSELF that the demand for the regular service program is just as strong in YOUR community as in the communities where the voting was originally conducted.

On the opposite page you will find two letters. Read these letters and then get this fact firmly fixed in your mind——

YOUR PATRONS DON'T WANT FEATURES—THEY WANT PICTURES—PLENTY OF THEM, AND VARIETY.

Give Them What They Want!

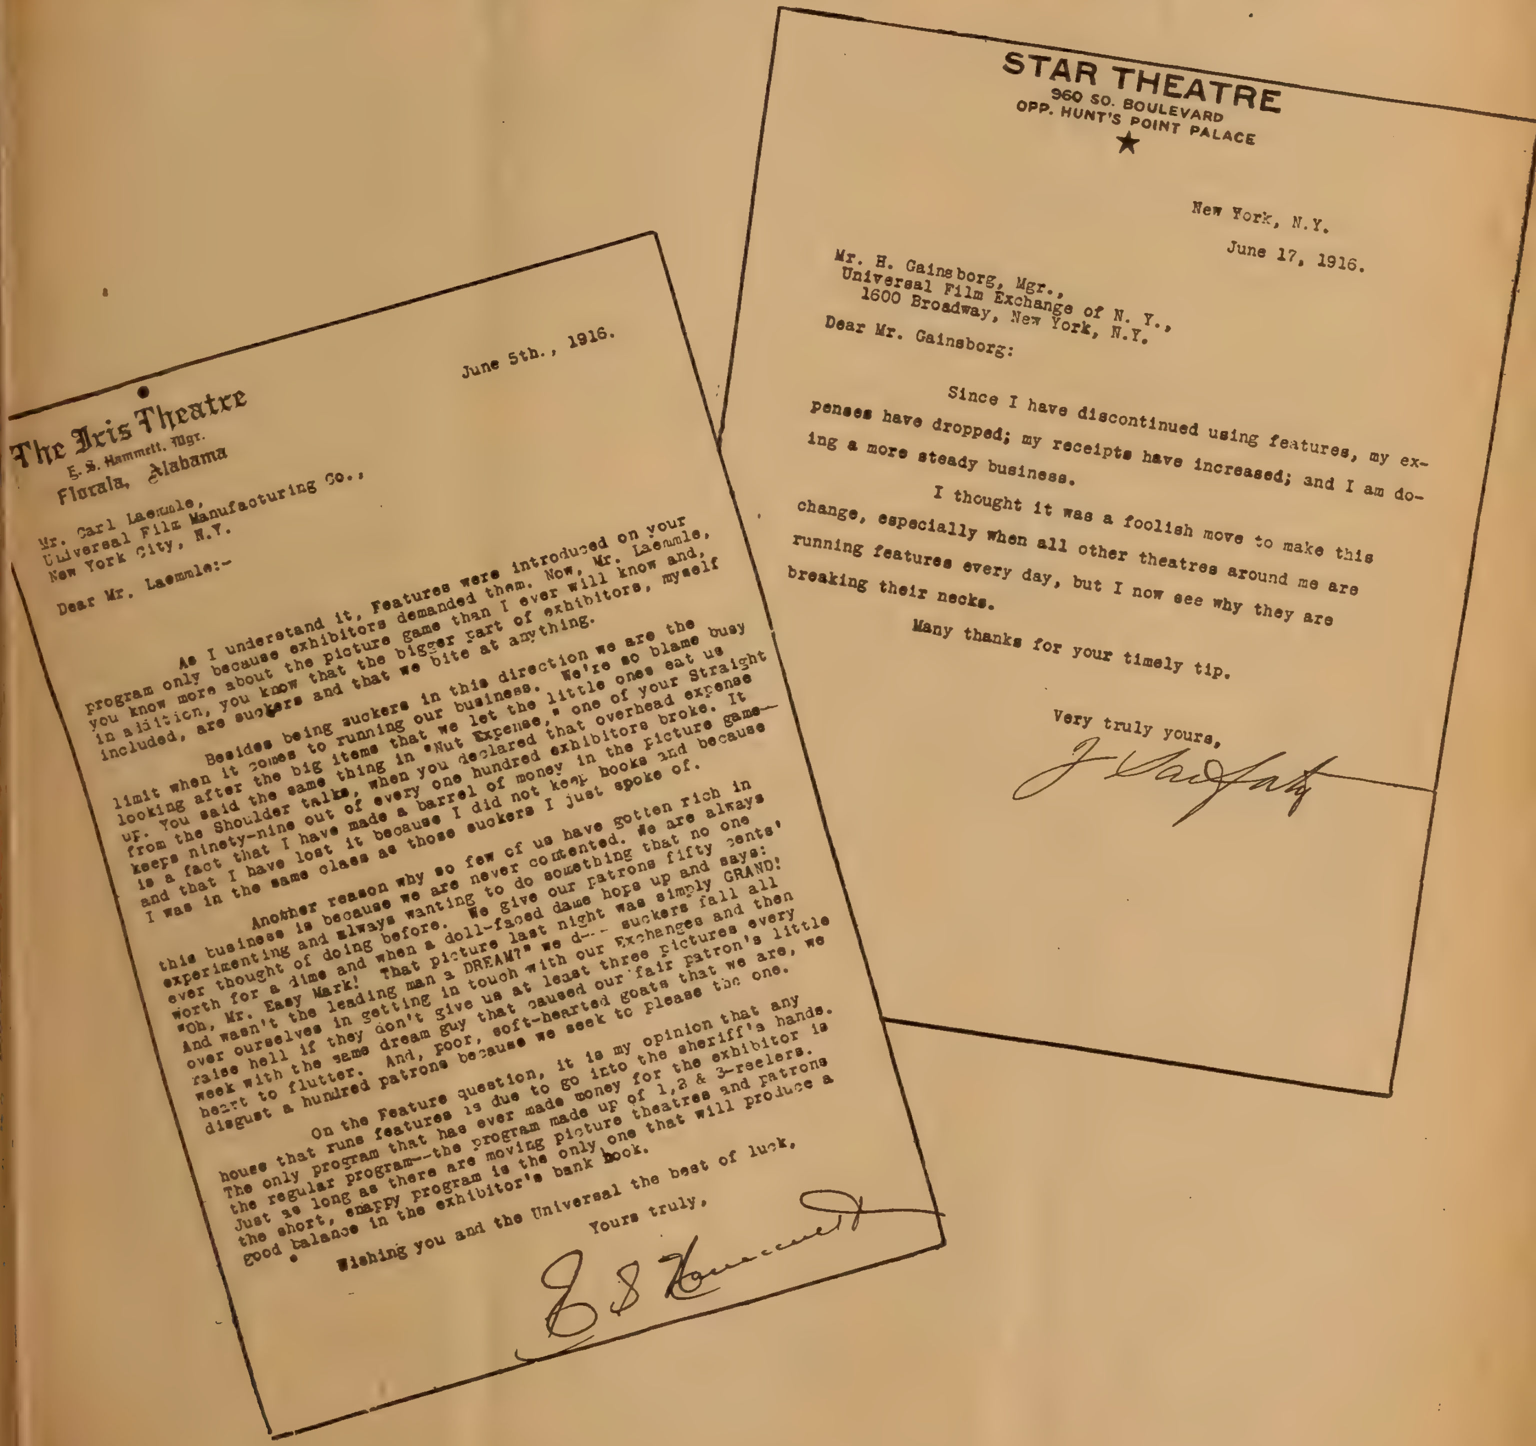
ATURES OR PICTURES?



The Iris Theatre
E. S. Hammett, Mgr.
Florala, Alabama

June 5th., 1916.

Mr. Carl Laemmle,
Universal Film Manufacturing Co.,
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Laemmle:-

As I understand it, Features were introduced on your program only because exhibitors demanded them. Now, Mr. Laemmle, you know more about the picture game than I ever will know and, in addition, you know that the bigger part of exhibitors, myself included, are suckers and that we bite at anything.

Besides being suckers in this direction we are the limit when it comes to running our business. We're so blame busy looking after the big items that we let the little ones eat us up. You said the same thing in "Nut Expense," one of your Straight from the Shoulder talks, when you declared that overhead expense keeps ninety-nine out of every one hundred exhibitors broke. It is a fact that I have made a barrel of money in the picture game— and that I have lost it because I did not keep books and because I was in the same class as those suckers I just spoke of.

Another reason why so few of us have gotten rich in this business is because we are never contented. We are always experimenting and always wanting to do something that no one ever thought of doing before. We give our patrons fifty cents' worth for a dime and when a doll-faced dame hops up and says: "Oh, Mr. Easy Mark! That picture last night was simply GRAND! And wasn't the leading man a DREAM?" we d--- suckers fall all over ourselves in getting in touch with our Exchanges and then raise hell if they don't give us at least three pictures every week with the same dream guy that caused our fair patron's little heart to flutter. And, poor, soft-hearted goats that we are, we disgust a hundred patrons because we seek to please the one.

On the Feature question, it is my opinion that any house that runs features is due to go into the sheriff's hands. The only program that has ever made money for the exhibitor is the regular program—the program made up of 1,2 & 3-reelers. Just as long as there are moving picture theatres and patrons the short, snappy program is the only one that will produce a good balance in the exhibitor's bank book.

Wishing you and the Universal the best of luck,

Yours truly,

E S Hammett

Dear Mr. Gainsborg:

Since I have discontinued using features, my expenses have dropped; my receipts have increased; and I am doing a more steady business.

I thought it was a foolish move to make this change, especially when all other theatres around me are running features every day, but I now see why they are breaking their necks.

Many thanks for your timely tip.

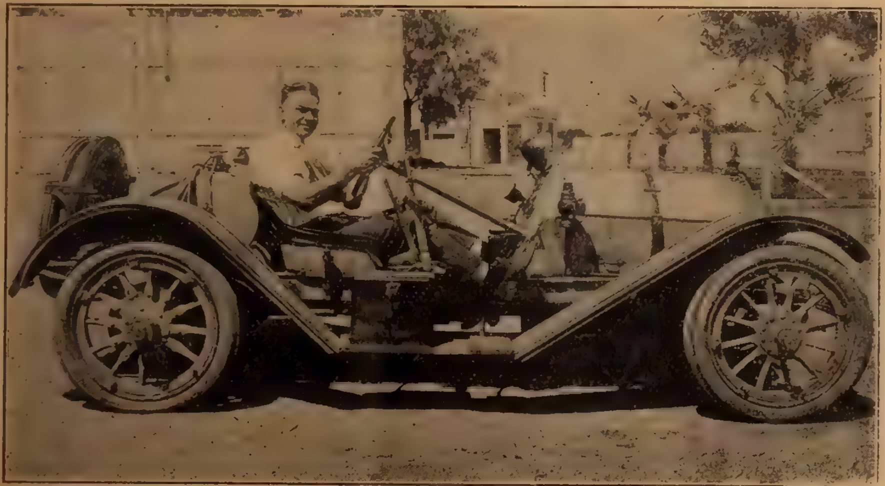
"The Janitor" Wins Year's Contract for Beery

Wallace Beery at last makes friends with Joe the ape.

WALLACE BEERY, who was especially engaged by the Universal Film Company to direct the comedy series, "Timothy Dobbs," which features Carter De Haven, has been nicknamed "The Human Dynamo" at Universal City. Beery was a former member of the Essanay forces, and has a great reputation to sustain as a producer of genuine, clear-cut comedy, without either "slapstick" methods, or the slightest suggestion of vulgarity. He has announced his intention of beating all his previous records in the new series, and judging from the peals of laughter which echoed from the Universal projection room when the first episodes were shown to a critical audience, composed of the officials of the company, he has succeeded. His brand of humor is a very original one, and he has a star of the first magnitude to work with in Carter De Haven, and one of the best companies besides which the Universal has ever chosen to work together. Beery is astonishing every one at the picture municipality by the speed with which he works—hence his nickname. In three days, a few weeks ago, he produced three reels of pictures, in addition to writing three others. It was while waiting for the sets for "Timothy Dobbs," which, in the second episode, are unusually elaborate, that he found time to put on the one-reel comedy, "The Janitor," which has resulted in a year's contract with the Universal. He plays the lead in this himself, as well as writing and directing it, and the entire thing was completed in eight hours. Beery is a very clever and original comedian, whose work in the character of "Swedie," which he invented, is well known. "The Janitor" is a part of this type, in which he has the assistance of no less a personage than Joe Martin, the Universal ape of nationwide fame. During part of his varied career, Beery was an elephant trainer, and he has always flattered himself that he has winning ways with animals. Joe is almost as intelligent as a human being, where he knows the people with whom he is to work. He is absolutely devoted to Zoo-Superintendent Rex De Rosselli, and never allows him to pass without stopping to take the big monkey in his arms. Beery wanted Joe to do the same thing for him in the picture, but it was some time before he succeeded in persuading Joe that his intentions were honorable. At last he was forced to descend to bribery and corruption and present Joe with many lumps of sugar, finally winning his affections in this way. Joe has taken the director into his good graces at last, and De Rosselli pretends to be quite jealous.

Besides his adventures with the orang-outang, Beery took some extraordinary risks in the making of this super one-reeler, which entitles him to a place among the reckless dare-devils of the films. Many of the scenes were taken on the top of the Gates Hotel in Los Angeles, a ten story building, with a tall flag pole on the roof. Beery, in pursuit of Ernest Grider, a member of his company, who was playing a second-story man, followed the thief up the fire escape of the building, across the roof and twenty-five feet in the air up the flag pole. At the very top, Grider turned upside down, hanging on by his feet, and the two men had a scrap in mid-air, risking instant deaht on the pavement below, if either had lost his hold on the swaying pole.



Wallace Beery in his Mercer racer in which he entered the Memorial Day races at Ascot Park.

Not content with this feat, Beery decided to increase the comic effect, by hanging out of a ninth story window, going through all kinds of contortions, which threatened any minute to land him in the street. Passersby gazed up at the struggling figure, and their anxious interest was caught by the camera, which was placed on the fire escape in order to film the scene. It was all very dangerous, but Beery belongs to the heroic school of actors who will take any risk in order to get a laugh into their productions.

Besides being a director, comedian and playwright, the "Human Dyna-

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

MORE CAMERAMEN RUSHED TO MEXICAN BORDER.

War Danger Induces Universal to Augment Forces Along the Rio Grande.

WAR with Mexico seems imminent and the Universal Animated Weekly is making extensive preparations to cover every phase of the situation. No sooner had Gilbert Warrenton and Beverly Griffith reached Universal City from the border than news of the trapping of forty American soldiers was received at the New York offices of the Animated Weekly and Jack Cohn at once telegraphed Mr. Griffith and his star cameraman. The Animated is the only news weekly blessed with a director and a cameraman at the front. Then Jack took the train Monday for Washington to see Secretary of War Baker.

In New York the Animated cameramen were kept busy filming the rally of the National Guard to the flag. The "fighting Sixty-ninth" is seen marching up Fifth Avenue, trailed by its artillery; Jersey's soldiers were filmed on their way to their camp; the arrival of the New York National Guard regiments at Camp Whitman, Beekman, New York, and of cavalry at Van Cortlandt Park, New York City, and farewell scenes at various other cities throughout the country all make the 26th number of the Universal Animated Weekly an unusually patriotic one. Cameraman Double M. Fleming officiated at Camp Whitman.

The force of Universal cameramen at the Mexican border will shortly be augmented by operators from Universal City, but the boys now on the job are not letting the grass get yellow under their feet. This week's issue shows scenes at Ciuadad Juarez, Mexico, nurses attending wounded soldiers, the reinforcement of American troops, preparation for attack and the ways and means used by the Universal cameramen to obtain their pictures from the recalcitrant natives.

Uncle Sam is adopting every means to encourage recruiting and to bring the militia up to war strength before President Wilson is forced to call for volunteers. A short flash shows Edna Payne, the only girl recruiter for the navy, and the deadly guns which, placed on exhibition in New York, have done much to encourage recruiting. Secretary Daniels' visit to the navy's school for apprentice seamen at Lake Buff, Ill.; a gigantic parade by Los Angeles patriots who want the United States to prepare for war led by Marie Walcamp, the Universal star; the launching of a United States transport at the League Island navy yard, Philadelphia—all combine to make Issue 26 of the Animated Weekly a distinctively belligerent one.

WRECK COSTS FIVE LIVES STEAMER "BEAR" HITS ROCK.

ISSUE 26 of the Universal Animated Weekly contains some remarkable views of the wreck of the steamer "Bear" which recently ran ashore on Blunt's Reef, near Eureka, California. The steamer went off course in a dense fog off Cape Mendocino and presented a picturesque sight as she pounded on the rocks not more than a hundred feet off shore. Five lives were lost in the disaster and the bodies of the unfortunate passengers were washed ashore while the cameramen were filming the wreck scenes.

The Universal camerman, B. E. Moisant, had a difficult time reaching the scene of the wreck. It was necessary for him to make a three hundred mile run by automobile, twenty-two hours of steady driving, before he reached Eureka, near the scene of the disaster. Most of the distance was over mountain roads and especially bad ones at that.

HARVARD AND YALE HOLD COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

CLASS Day and Commencement exercises at the big American universities are always interesting and picturesque events. Issue 26 of the Universal Animated weekly shows the exercises held at the Harvard Stadium, Cambridge, Mass., and also the Yale Commencement held at New Haven, Conn.

At Harvard, 15,000 students and graduates hurled tons of confetti down upon 5,000 more Harvard men who took part in the stadium exercises. Thousands of America's fairest daughters witnessed the ceremonies, which were more elaborately staged than usual.

SUFFRAGISTS AUTO TO COAST.

NEW YORK suffragists who started out several weeks ago on an auto trip through the Pacific coast finally arrived at San Francisco this week and were presented with the city's key by the mayor. All along the route the suffragists made impromptu speeches and added converts to the cause. The weather encountered was especially bad, and for almost a week at a time the club women were obliged to pilot their cars through seas of mud.

TROOP TRANSPORT LAUNCHED.

THE launching of the United States transport "Henderson" at the Philadelphia Navy Yard, Philadelphia, this week was attended by 30,000 people and partook of the nature of an athletic meet, a naval regatta, a preparedness field day and a popular seaside resort festival.

The first scenes show Miss Genevieve Welling Taylor, the sponsor and grand daughter of General Archibald C. Henderson, after whom the ship was named. Then follow a sham battle and the revue of the sailors, the launching of the "Henderson," the first transport ever built at League Island, and views of the crowd leaving the yard after the launching.

COPYRIGHT ANIMATED VIEWS.

THE Universal's Animated Weekly is obtaining such excellent and original photographs of late that Editor Jack Cohn is now taking care to have them copyrighted.

While in Washington recently, Cameraman U. K. Whipple succeeded in getting such excellent pictures of President Wilson that Cohn decided to have them protected by copyright. Later, he sent Whipple to Oyster Bay, where Roosevelt posed especially for the Animated Weekly.

Finding that some of these pictures were being stolen, Cohn resolved to put an end to it by copyrighting all the pictures which were taken at the Republican Convention at Chicago, and all others taken during the politocal campaign. During the first convention, the Animated Weekly covered the proceedings from every angle and had a moving picture camera continuously during the sessions. With this exclusive privilege, the Animated Weekly obtained the best pictures, and were shown in the Strand, Rialto, Broadway and other leading metropolitan theatres.

When the Republican candidate, Charles E. Hughes, came to New York, after nomination, Cameraman Whipple took a series of pictures of him on the roof of the Hotel Astor. These were admitted to be the best pictures ever taken of the noted jurist and the New York Sun, Press and several Sunday papers eagerly sought them and used them in their publications. In fact, the majority of pictures which have appeared in the New York papers of Mr. Hughes were those taken by Cameraman Whipple.

Editor Cohn presented the candidate with a set of these pictures, and sent another set to Washington.

Violet Mersereau in "Broken Fetters" with William Garwood

Chang stabs Foo Shai in the back before the great Joss.

NEW YORK and the Far East, Oriental magnificence and the commercialism of the new world, are contrasted in the latest Bluebird photoplay, "Broken Fetters," which was written and produced by Rex Ingram, the clever young director whose work in a previous Bluebird, "The Great Problem," receives so much recognition from the public and the professional critics. Violet Mersereau was his chief star in his first success, as she is of the present play, which gives her an even better opportunity for her talents than the former did. As the little American girl, brought up in the Celestial Empire, by a Mandarin, and lured to the new world by tales of its splendor, she shares the honors with William Garwood, who has a sympathetic role as the young artist, which he handles with his usual skill. The part of Ming-Ti, the "chinafied" little American, is full of opportunities for Miss Mersereau, of whch she takes full advantage. There is plenty of comedy of the dainty kind, for which she is famous, and, as the story develops, she has emotional moments which call for all the power which she is able to bring to them. Another whose work deserves recognition, is Frank Smith, who, in the role of the opium merchant of New York's Chinatown, gives an impersonation of the Oriental character which is a remarkable screen achievement.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay. Written and produced by Rex Ingram. A thrilling tale of the importation of an American girl brought up in China, into an opium den in New York's Chinatown.

The story of the unusual photoplay is as follows:

Captain Ferrers, an English officer in China, befriends an old Chinese Mandarin. When the Boxer rebellion deprives Mignon, the Englishman's little child of both her parents, the Mandarin shows his gratitude to the dead man by adopting his daughter. He changes her name to Ming-Ti, and brings her up with all the care that he would bestow upon a child of his own blood. Several years later, the merchant, Foo-Shai, proprietor of a den in an American Chinatown, finds his way, when in China, to the garden of the Mandarin, and, beguiling Ming-Ti with stories of the "wonderful country with houses like mountains that reach into the clouds," persuades her to come with him. Together with another slave girl, she is brought to America and smuggled into New York in a barrel of rice. The slave girl Foo-Shai sells for $500, but Ming-Ti he holds for $5,000.

Carlton Demarest, a wealthy man who has disowned his son, Lawrence, an artist, on account of the latter's refusal to give up art and join his father in business, now relents, and Lawrence, who has been in straightened circumstances, finds himself suddenly commissioned to paint a picture with the understanding that he choose the subject himself, the dealer acting in secret for his father, depositing one hundred dollars to start with, and another hundred to follow, providing the picture meets with his approval. Not knowing the source of the order, Lawrence goes to Chinatown with his model, "Spike," an ex-pugilist, who, having caught a glimpse of Ming-Ti in the den of Foo-Shai, tells him "dere's de swellest dame" for a model for his picture. Together they go to Foo-Shai's joint and, after a lot of wrangling, and a deposit of $25, the Chinaman agrees to let Ming-Ti pose.

During the first sitting, a Chinaman, called Kong, whom Foo-Shai had maltreated, goes to the police, and tells them Foo-Shai has a white girl as a slave in his joint. The detectives go to his joint, but fail to find the girl. Upon their departure, Chang, Foo-Shai's servant, who has already been won over by Ming-Ti, goes to Demarest's studio to tell Foo-Shai of Kong's treachery.

Foo-Shai, leaving Chang to watch Ming-Ti and Demarest, returns to the joint, and, sending for Kong, under the pretext of making amends for his ill-treatment of him, murders him, throwing the body in the river that runs under the Joss-House. He returns almost in time to catch Ming-Ti and Demarest, between whom (thanks to Chang's discreet retirement to outside the door) the ice has considerably thawed.

During the last sitting, Demarest, completely captivated by Ming-Ti, has determined to buy her freedom, expecting to be paid for his picture, but little dreaming of the price Foo-Shai will ask for his white captive. Unfortunately for both Ming-Ti and her lover, the watchful Chang dozes while on guard outside the door. Foo-Shai, returning unexpectedly this time, catches them together. Demarest's blood rises as Foo-Shai, with a sinister look, orders Ming-Ti to follow him. But she soothingly tells Demarest that they have only a day to wait.

How slave-girls are shipped here from China.

At their home, the artist's father is feeling his son's absence more than he cares to admit. He tries to veil it from his wife, but she sees he is weakening, though too proud to admit it.

In his studio, Demarest is dreaming of the little girl who is to be his to-morrow. In her attic, the little girl is dreaming of him who will rescue her from slavery before another day is gone.

In his room, Foo-Shai is donning a robe of great magnificance. He is covering his hands with rings, and perfuming his moustaches. He had intended to sell Ming-Ti, his slave, to the highest bidder, but now, since there is a lover in the field, he decides to make sure of his possession before allowing another to have the chance.

As Ming-Ti, dreaming of her lover, raises the fingers of her left hand to her lips—the fingers he had kissed—Foo-Shai comes to claim that which is his by law of might. In a desperate struggle for her honor, she breaks away from him and, springing to the window, smashes it out with a bucket lying near. Jumping on the ledge, she cries "come near and I'll jump!" Below lies the pavement five stories down. Foo-Shai, temporarily thwarted, descends to the Fan-Tan room to spend his night in gaming, while the girl lies in a stupor on the inside of the threshold of her attic—her hand grasping the key that, for the time being, saves her from the monster in whose power she is.

The next evening Demarest is paid by the art dealer, and hastens to the den of Foo-Shai to pay the $25, and to bargain for Ming-Ti. Chang fetches her to him. Demarest sees the tear-stains on her cheeks, but she only smiles a little when he asks her what they mean. He then enters the Fan-Tan room. Chang warns him that Foo-Shai is a cheat. Demarest asks Foo-Shai what Ming-Ti's liberty will cost when he has paid his debt for Ming-Ti's services as a model. The Chinaman tells him $5,000. Demarest looks at his remaining $75. Foo smiles, but he is loth to let even $75 go. He induces Demarest to play. The artist watches him, and catches Foo-Shai cheating. The Chinaman soothes him rather than quarrel, and loses the money. They play again. This time Demarest, watching Foo-Shai, wins. The skill acquired in playing with his model, Spike, stands him in good stead. Again he wins and wins.

Ming-Ti, shut inside, waits for her lover. Now Demarest cleans the board. Foo is ruined. As the artist gathers his winnings, he stops, laying his hand on Foo-Shai's. He whispers: "For Her?" Foo-Shai nods—again they play. This time Ming-Ti is the pool. Foo-Shai plays slowly, desperately—the artist with beads of persperation on his brow. Demarest is winning now—he drops a card. As he stoops to

The Latest War News--

TRUMPETER KATZ, operator of the Bluebird Exchange, joins his regiment —A war film released, "War in Mexico." Animated makes plans for all eventualities. Lyons and Moran back at Universal City.

Kramer promises to pay Trumpeter Katz his salary while he is away at war.

ABRAHAM KATZ, the genial operator of the Bluebird projecting artillery, is also trumpeter in Company B of the Twelfth Regiment, New York National Guard. In time of peace the two jobs work all right together, but in times of war and alarms of war the infantry job comes before the operating one, and consequently Mr. Katz shook hands all around on Thursday, and departed for Camp Beekman with every expectation of being transferred in a few weeks' time to the Mexican border. It is no new experience for Abraham, for he has served six years in the regular army in the hospital corps, having been honorably discharged from the service on December 11th, 1912. Since his connection with the Bluebird Mr. Katz has thoroughly ingratiated himself with all with whom he has come in contact, and is an extremely popular member of the Bluebird organization.

Before the merchants of the city began discussing the payment to the men in their employ the salaries which they would have earned, the Bluebird had decided to pay full salary to Trumpeter Katz for the entire time he is away. Katz has a wife and three-year-old child, and forty cents a day will not get them very far with Better Baby-food being boosted all the time. Now Mrs. Katz and the kitten will have cream while Papa Katz is away chasing the Mexican hairless dogs.

Two young men who are so often in the Universal and Bluebird offices that they have become almost part of the family, although they are engravers, and, as such, don't stand half the chance of entering the kingdom of Heaven that is enjoyed by the proverbial camel in his well known passage through the eye of the needle, have also joined their regiment. The young men are Henry Reston of the Standard Engraving Company, and John Donovan of the Eggers-Knickerbocker Engraving Company, 'and the regiment is the famous Seventh Infantry. They have every expectation of being sent direct to Galveston by water and by rail from there to the front.

Jack Cohn, editor of the Animated Weekly, has made elaborate plans for filming the mobilization of troops on the Texas border and any eventualities which may arise. There are four of the best cameraman on his staff stationed at various places all along the border ready to "shoot" the troops of the National Guard as they arrive, and as well prepared to "shoot" the Mexicans, if that necessity arises. Next week's Animated will contain views of the mobilization of troops at Camp Whitman and Beekman, New York, filmed by the Cameraman Double M. Fleming, who among other things was equipped with ye editor's camera.

"WAR-RIDDEN MEXICO" SET ON THE PROGRAM.

IN these times of alarms of war the Rex single-reel release on the program for next week under the title, "War-Ridden Mexico" will be found extremely welcome and mighty timely. This subject was taken by the Animated Weekly cameraman at the front in the last few weeks, and in addition to being right up to date, and of the most timely interest, this film shows the conditions which will have to be faced by "the boys" if they are ordered to cross the line into Mexico. "War-Ridden Mexico" takes the place of Ben Wilson in "The Laugh of Scorn" which has been withdrawn in favor of the more timely subject.

RED FEATHER Production. From the play of the same name by Clyde Fitch. Produced by L. B. Carleton. Scenario by F. M. McG. Willis.

Society man, estranged from wife, makes desperate love to wife of another. No lengths too hazardous to win her for his own.

Nevill calls attention to the day he saved Beatrice at the beach.

PETER STURTON, a politician and head of the machine, decides to support Walter Croydon, a rising young attorney, for the position of Governor of the State. Croyden is in love with Beatrice Farley, a young society belle, but they have not been formally engaged. Croyden, on the evening that he is to take Beaturice to a society affair, meets Sturton at the club and becomes slightly intoxicated. He is in this condition when he calls upon Beatrice, and she refuses to accompany him. The next morning Croydoy comes back and apologizes for his condition of the night before, and begs Beatrice to forgive him and promise to marry him. She tells him that she is leaving for Europe with Mr. and Mrs. Lake, her close friends, and that she will give him an answer when she returns.

John Nevill, a man about town, of fast life, is a warm personal friend of Sturton's. Nevill is unhappily married, but he and his wife still continue to live together, although there is very little, if any, love between them. Nevill decides to go abroad, and tells his wife she can go to Newport, or wherever she wishes to spend the summer. As the boat is ready to sail, Nevill sees Beatrice bid Croydon goodby and come on board. At once he is attracted by her beauty, and manages to make her acquaintance on the ship, and becomes madly infatuated with her. He decides to win her love and begins paying her attention without telling her that he is married. Beatrice and the Lakes come to Monte Carlo where Nevill is staying, and Nevill, renewing the acquaintance, begins making love to her. Beatrice finds that she loves him in return. Finally, Nevill proposes that they go to Paris to be married, and Beatrice consents; but, as they return to the hotel to pack, friends of Nevill's, who have arrived from the States, betray the fact that he is already married.

Beatrice, heartbroken, begins packing to return home. Nevill pleads with her to no avail, and finally, in anger, tells her that he will not give her up, and that at some future time he will force her to declare again her love for him. After Beatrice leaves, Nevill takes to drink, and word of this reaching Mrs. Neville, she comes to him and persuades him to return home with her.

In the meantime, Croyden has married Beatrice, and has become Governor. Sturton calls upon the Nevills and asks them to attend the inaugural ball to meet the Governor and his bride. Nevill finds, of course, that the Governor's wife is no other than Beatrice. His love for her is again aroused and he becomes crafty in an attempt to win her away from Croyden. Beatrice sees the ravages of dissipation in Nevill, and listening to his plea, promises to become his friend. After this, they are seen much together, but Croyden is of an unsuspicious nature, and Beatrice herself believes that there is nothing wrong in her friendship for Nevill.

Time elapses and Croyden is running for re-election. Sturton has a falling-out with the Governor and is opposing him with every weapon in his command. The Croydens now have a child—a boy a few months old, of whom Croyden is especially fond. Lake goes to Croyden and tells him that the people are beginning to talk of Nevill's being seen so much with Mrs. Croyden, but the Governor refuses to believe it is more than idle gossip. To turn the people against Croyden, Sturton causes an article to be published saying that while the Governor has been away on a tour of the State to secure votes, his wife has been seen continually in the company of a certain man whom the paper does not mention, but who, of course, is Nevill. When Croyden sees this he goes to Nevill, but the latter tells him that surely he can trust his wife, and Croyden dismisses the matter from his mind.

Beatrice is devoted to the baby.

Nevill, realizing that the seed of suspicion has been sown, decides upon a plan to turn Croyden from his wife, believing that Beatrice will then come to him. He gives Sturton a paragraph to put in the papers on the day before election. This is the day that Croyden's baby is to be christened. As the guests are gathered for the christening and Croyden is preparing to leave his office, he sees a copy of the newspaper hinting that the child's father is not Croyden, but the man who Beatrice has been seen with so much of late. Overcome with grief, Croyden drinks heavily and returns when the christening is in progress, quite intoxicated. He breaks in upon the affair, denouncing Beatrice and forbidding her to name the child after him. Neville and his wife, who are present, return home after a scene, in which Croyden accuses Nevill to his face of being the father of the child. This Nevill refuses to deny. Locking himself in his room, Croyden refuses to see Beatrice or let her explain. Mrs. Nevill, convinced of her husband's guilt, tells him she is leaving his home, declaring that Beatrice was the woman who was responsible for his dissipation in Europe. He tells her to go, for he believes now that Beatrice will come to him.

Beatrice, in terror over her husband's action, and realizing that Nevill alone can clear her name, decides to go to him and make him right her. She tells Mrs. Lake where she is going. She arrives at Nevill's and is admitted to see him alone. Nevill believes that he has won and tells her that he will give her a letter clearing her name, but that she must pay the price—she must be his, if for no longer than one hour.

He writes the note and then locks the door and confronts her. In the meantime Croyden has learned where she has gone and follows. Beatrice struggles desperately with Nevill to preserve her honor and finally, in desperation, catches up a sharp paper knife and stabs him, dropping the weapon to the floor. Croyden, bursting down the door, enters, accompanied by Mrs. Nevill, and finds Nevill on the floor dying. He knows that he is at the verge of death, and the good in him comes to the surface. He picks up the knife with a shaking hand and tells them that for love of Beatrice, and because she has repulsed him, he has attempted suicide. He takes the note clearing Beatrice from his pocket and gives it to Croyden. Croyden realizes that this will clear him in the eyes of the people. He begs forgiveness of Beatrice and as she grants him this they glance down at Neville, who falls back dead. He has paid the price of his infatuation. It is the "Way of the World."

Hubby was a gambler and was in the habit of making a gambling den out of his home. Wife objected to this and tried to get hubby interested in other things more important in life. But just at the time she thought she had him away he pulled a phony suicide on her and hied himself home where he was joined by his old pals, and the game started. Wifey discovered his clothes on the bank of the lake and thought hubby was gone for good, so she prepared herself with a new mourning bonnet and clothes suitable for the occasion and returned home a broken-hearted widow. But to her consternation, she discovered hubby and his pals playing the game. Wife, to teach them a good lesson, appropriated the kitty and none dared to take it from her. The pals were considerably upset over this action and fled the house after an attempt to have the money restored. Hubby was given his dose of discipline, but it was so strong that he decided to end it all by drowning. He was deterred from this action, for when on the bank of the lake and ready to plunge in, a large alligator was seen waiting to receive him with open mouth. That night the pals returned to the house with a professional house-breaker to get their money, but wifey darling received them with open arms.

The Guide.........................Charles Ogle

Hugh Van Schuyler, a man of great wealth and high social position, realizes that Ruth, his wife, cares little for her home life. Ruth, elegantly gowned, comes down the stairs and Hugh asks her significantly, "Are you going out again tonight?" "Certainly," she says; "I am going to the Galesworthy dance."

Charley Martinez is ushered in and Ruth leaves with him for the evening's entertainment. Hugh sits down to think over matters.

On her return home at 3 A. M. Ruth is reminded that she has not spent an evening home in a month, and Hugh asks her how long she intends to continue in her present course of social frivolity. "Until I get tired of it, I suppose," she says flippantly. Then losing her temper, she asks Hugh what he thinks she married him for, if not for money and social position. Hugh makes no answer and she retires for the night. The next morning, however, he announces abruptly, "We are leaving town today. Pack some heavy clothes and be ready at 4 o'clock this afternoon." Ruth protests that she will do nothing of the sort. But Hugh pays not the slightest attention to this, as he calmly proceeds with his writing. Finally Ruth tries tears, when Hugh turns on her with great severity and says: "Do you intend to do as I bid you or not?"

Later we see a queer group of travelers coming down the trail of a wild and rugged country. As they come nearer we recognize Hugh and Ruth, accompanied by a guide, who is leading a pack mule. Ruth is getting very tired. Her high-heeled shoes hurt her and Hugh compels her to take off her elaborate dress, for which he substitutes a camping outfit with suitable footgear. In due time they arrive at a camping place, where money and social position count for little. They are miles away from civilization. Ruth sits down in rebellious anger and despair. The guide unloads the pack mule and carries their luggage into a rough shack, provided with a single bunk.

Hugh dismisses the guide after paying him, and Ruth follows her husband spiritlessly as he ushers her into the shack. She throws herself upon the bunk and buries her face in her hands as Hugh announces that henceforth the shack is to be their home. He tells her that he brought here there to make her love him. That night Ruth sleeps in the bunk, while Hugh makes himself as comfortable as possible on the floor. Suddenly Ruth hears the howl of a wolf and she sits up in her bunk with staring eyes. She creeps out to Hugh, who is fast asleep on the floor, but hesitates about waking him, until another howl from the wolf makes her fully realize her dependence on him.

"Peg o' the Ring" Tenth Episode

Grace Cunard and Francis Ford in "In the Hands of the Enemy". Latest two-reel installment of the Universal SpecialFeature Serial, recounts the escape of Peg from the Mexicans and shows her winning a horse-race.

DOCTOR LUND arrives at the Mexican town only to find that Peg has been spirited away by Mrs. Lund's ruffians, as we saw at the close Nine. He rushes out when Flip tells him of her disappearance, seizes a horse and rides at full speed after the kidnappers. He overtakes them and succeeds in snatching Peg from the ruffian who is carrying her on his saddle. He turns and gallops with her safely across the Mexican border and on to American soil. They come up with a patrol of American troops, who at once set out to rescue the Americans in the town. Doctor Lund wishes to go with them, but Peg will not hear of it. "You stay away from Mexico," she says, "You are not the American army."

The circus also returns from across the border and Peg rejoins her friends. Flip has a surprise for her. It is a beautiful race horse. She is overjoyed and they decide to enter the horse in the coming races at Tia Juana. Mrs. Lund has entered her own horse in the same race, in a desperate effort to obtain money for her schemes and Peg and Flip are determined to beat her. "Lucile," Peg's horse, is a Kentucky thoroughbred of great reputation.

Young Doctor Lund invites Peg to his home to visit his mother. Peg is unwilling to go, but she does not wish to tell the doctor what she knows about his mother and rather than arouse his suspicions, she consents to go. Soon after their arrival the two bicycle cops, who arrested Peg for speeding, and to whom she gave the letter, come to deliver it to her again. They are just about to hand it Mrs. Lund when the young doctor appears and takes charge of it. This is the letter which has been stolen from Flip and which both factions wish to possess. When Peg enters, the doctor offers her the letter, but she begs him to take charge of it, as she has no pockets in her gown. Frank is called away and asks Peg to stay with his mother until he returns.

Peg wanders out into the garden, and while she is gone Mrs. Lund calls Marcus and his accomplice and lays another trap for her. She says that they can tell Frank that she has been called away. Mrs. Lund takes Peg up to the attic under pretense of showing her something and they lock her in there. Then Mrs. Lund tells the two men that Lucile, the horse, is being shipped to Tia Juana and that they are to get it out of the way.

Peg manages to escape from the attic by breaking the skylight and scrambling down the branches of a tree which overhangs the roof. She takes Frank's auto and runs away with it to rejoin the circus. Marcus and his men have in the meantime come up with the train to which the car containing Peg's horse is attached. They succeed in uncoupling this car. Peg, in her flight, runs beside the railroad track. She sees the freight car running wild. It is about to crash into a coming train, which, to her horror, she recognizes as the circus train. She leaps from the auto, clambers up the side of the car, and puts on the brakes just in time to avert a collision.

Peg and Flip arrive at Tia Juana for the great race. Peg's jockey is devoted to her and determined to win for her. Mrs. Lund is there determined to spoil Peg's chances. She and her men find it impossible to dope the horse, as Peg catches them at it and, firing at Marcus, hits the bottle of dope out of his hand. They determine to get the jockey. In this they are successful. Mrs. Lund has told her men to bet heavily against Peg's horse and has done so herself. Just before the race is called her men overcome the jockey and injure him. Peg sees that Lucile is not in the line-up. She runs to the jockeys' quarters and finds her boy too hurt to ride. She rushes out to the judge's stand and informs them of the injury, asking for time as she wants to ride her horse herself. They consent and she hurriedly dresses for the race in the jockey's clothes. She wins "by a neck" and is carried to quarters on the shoulders of the crowd. She is about to resume her own clothes when Marcus and his man break in and seize her once more. They throw her into an automobile and rush away from the race track with her.

New Program Arranged by Subject, Not Brand

George Cochrane, Director, and Thomas Jefferson, Star.

GEORGE COCHRANE FINDS THAT IT'S A SMALL WORLD.

"IT is a small world, after all," remarked Director George Cochrane to a group of friends at Universal City a few days ago. "A number of years ago I was mining and ranching in Montana and made my headquarters in Butte.

"One day Thomas Jefferson came to that city and I was introduced to him, and from this introduction a friendship grew up between us that lasted for years. Eventually, I went on the stage myself and finally drifted into the moving picture business.

"I accepted an engagement to direct at Universal City and asked who was to play the featured lead in my company, and you can imagine my astonishment when I was told he would be Thomas Jefferson.

"And, mind you, Jefferson had had no inkling that I was to be his new director. So you can see in this instance there is no question of harmony between director and star."

PIVAR'S PATENTED PROGRAM.

MORRIS PIVAR, who arranges the order and selects the subjects from the available supply for the Universal program, has devised a program which more nearly meets the desires of the officers and directors of the Universal and the exchange managers. After a correspondence covering some period, he has come to the conclusion that the majority of the exchanges are in favor of identifying certain types of subjects with various brands, rather than identifying the stars with these brands, which has been the practice in the past. This is the basis on which the new Universal program is selected. Beginning with the week of July 17th, this change will go into effect, and several of the brands will be switched about in conformity with the plan. Following is the schedule which will be followed hereafter in branding the various subjects:

Red Feather Features.—Weekly five-reeler will be released under this brand.

Nestor.—Parlor comedies.

Gold Seal.—Weekly three-reeler will be released under this brand.

Victor.—Comedies or comedy-dramas will be released under this brand.

L-Ko.—Slap stick comedies.

Animated Weekly.—Topical subjects.

Big U—Rural, costume, sea, light western and juvenile dramas.

Laemmle.—Refined society dramas will be released under this brand.

Powers.—Novelties, such as cartoons, manikins, juvenile comedies and educationals.

Imp.—Melodramas, detective, mystery and underworld dramas.

Rex.—Refined society dramas.

Bison.—Western, mountain, Indian, railroad and animal dramas.

Joker.—Slap-stick comedies will be released under this brand.

In the week of July 17th, which is shown on Page 41 under the caption, "The Week After," it will be noticed that the following changes have been effected: The Tuesday Victor takes the place of the former Imp. The Wednesday Laemmle takes the place of the former Victor. The Thursday Victor takes the place of the former Laemmle. The Friday Rex takes the place of the former Victor. The Saturday Laemmle takes the place of the former Powers. The Sunday Imp takes the place of the former Laemmle. Standing orders for the Tuesday Rex will be automatically discontinued after the week of July 10th. Standing orders for the other brands which are affected by the change will be automatically transferred to the new brands which take their places.

BILLIE RITCHIE SCORNS THE USE OF A DOUBLE.

BILLIE RITCHIE'S talents as a fun-maker can scarcely be overemphasized, but Billie himself has never laid any particular stress, and neither have his L-KO directors, on having him perform any of the dangerous feats which are such a contributing factor to the humor of L-KO Komedies. However, in a two-reel comedy soon to be released under the L-KO brand, under the title of "A Bold, Bad Breeze," Ritchie was called upon either to do some extremely daring "stuff" or to have some one double in his place. It was the first time such a suggestion had ever been given Ritchie, and he repudiated it with a scorn. "I certainly can do anything that anybody that looks like me can, so here goes." What followed gave Bill the run of his life, and he was mighty glad to accept a three days' vacation to recuperate. He did not even care to see the picture run off before he went, but trotted down to the exposition at San Diego like a little lamb.

Heartened by the success of "A Bold Bad Breeze," the L-KO is planning now to put on a steamer picture in which they will blow one boat to atoms and sink another one. Some doings at the L-KO.

Universal Regular Service and Red Feather Features will put any theatre on Easy Street.

Lule Warrenton Becomes a Director

CREATOR of many character roles at Universal City for three years, at last attains her ambition to direct pictures for children. Allan Watt her assistant.

By Peter Pepper.

SOME of us are born old, while others seem to have drunk of the fountain of youth and the years have absolutely no power over them. One of those who have succeeded in outwitting Father Time is Lule Warrenton, the Universal's famous character actress, who owns to fifty-two, and is growing younger every year. "Mother" Warrenton, as she is affectionately called at Universal City, has been on the stage all her life—literally all her life, as she was carried on the first time when she was only a few months old. A history of the American stage would be incomplete without her name, which has always stood for what is best and highest in dramatic art. She has owned her own company; she has managed stars; she has supported, in the role of character woman, nearly every actor of prominence in the last thirty years; she has toured Europe, under the management of the famous Major Pond, where she gave dramatic readings from Shakespeare, Browning, and Tennyson for three seasons.

Three years ago she went into pictures under the banner of the Universal Film Company, with which company she has remained ever since. She has seen screen players come and go, but she remains firmly intrenched in her unique position, which would be extremely difficult to fill. A list of her important roles would be far too long for the Weekly; but some of her recent parts have been the social-climbing mother in "It Happened in Holoulu," the housekeeper in "Drugged Waters," both Red Feathers, and the Italian nurse in the Bluebird "Tangled Hearts," for which she was specially loaned to the Bluebird organization. She is a mistress of the art of make-up, which fact she proved abundantly in the latter production, in which she had to change herself, before the searching eye of the camera, from a middle-aged peasant woman, to an old creature, grown half childish from age. Her dependability and the wide recognition at the picture city of her striking ability, cause a great demand for her services. At one time, recently, three directors were contending for her, all at once. Phillips Smalley wanted her for a part with Tyrone Power. and she was just about to accept when up came Francis Ford, who said he simply had to have her for one of his pictures. Then Dowlan appeared, who said that the part of the character woman in his Red Feather "Drugged Waters" had been written with her in mind, and that no one else could play it. Mother Warrenton had to do some tall thinking, but she was able by careful planning to make an arrangement which was satisfactory to every one.

She confessed, a long time ago, that her greatest ambition was to be the director of special features for children. This was a modest ambition, but very near her heart. When she was informed the other day that her dream had come true, she could hardly believe in her good fortune. She lost no time in setting to work and chose her company from among the ranks of the Universal's large "flock of starlings." Her assistant director will be Allan Watt, and her company will include Clara Horton, the fearless little girl who has been featured in some of Henry McRae's Bison pictures, Nora Dempsey, Irma Sorter, and Benjamin Suslow. Other children will be added to the list as occasion arises. A very important member of the force, who will be featured in the first picture, is Ernestine Jones, a little colored girl, who is a great favorite with Mrs. Warrenton. She will have the name part in the film called "The Calling of Lindy," which tells the story of a child with a big, unmanageable voice, who is always getting into trouble by making too much noise, but who finally saves the whole school by making her voice heard above the din, when the school house catches fire.

The Warrenton family is well represented in the Universal. "Mother" Warrenton's son, Gilbert, is one of the best of the Animated Weekly's fine corps and every one knows what that means. He has just returned from Mexico, with Beverly Griffith, another of the staff of the Animated, where the two have secured a number of "scoops" of the thrilling scenes in TOM WREN is the pampered son of a wealthy mother, who has spoiled him by giving him everything he asks for, without counting the cost of what is to follow. The family fortunes are at a low ebb on account of the poor management by the widow and her son, Tom, and it is the mother's fond wish to replenish them by a marriage between her son and a wealthy young heiress. Tom apparently agrees with this plan, but is really in love with Agnes Kempler, an artists' model at one of the large department stores. He has furnished a house in anticipation of his marriage with the model, and one day, while his mother is shopping in the store in which the model works, he sends the girl a note that everything is ready for the marriage, and that she is to be at the house at four that evening. The girl has just had a trying time posing with a gown for Tom's mother, although neither of the women knew of the other, and receives the note with joy, knowing that her hard life will soon be over. The young couple are married secretly and start on their new life full of hope.

Nearly all the fortune of the Wrens is invested in coal mines in West Virginia, and on the recommendation of an old family friend Tom is sent to look after their interests. While in the mine fields Tom meets John Ford, a mountaineer whom he formerly knew, and his daughter, Ella. Tom is trying to figure a road out which is unfamiliar to him, when Ella offers to accompany him and they set out in the machine. An accident happens and they are forced to remain out all night. Her father has grown anxious over her absence overnight with a man and sets out to find them in an ugly frame of mind. He finds them and tells Tom he will either have to marry the girl or be killed. He is forced to marry her. Soon afterwards he leaves for home.

Time passes and Tom gets a note from his mountaineer wife that she is in the hospital with a baby. He goes to his mother's house and she confronts him with the news that all their fortune is gone and says he will have to marry the heiress to save them from ruin. He shows her the note he has just received from one of his wives and tells her it is impossible. The mother is deeply shocked and goes to the hospital. Tom leaves for his first wife's.

Tom arrives at his home and Agnes notices his pocket is torn and insists on fixing it. In running her hand in the pocket to sew it she finds the note. She is horror-struck, but manages to keep him in ignorance of her knowledge. She goes to his mother's house to make herself known. While there Ford, the father of Ella, arrives, and Agnes, in the next room, hears him tell of the baby. She renounces her claims as a wife in favor of the wife and baby.

Time passes and Agnes has become an outcast. Ella has died and her child is left to comfort the husband. He has vainly tried to find Agnes. Ella's child is the pride of the household and has a great hold over Tom.

Agnes is brought into court on a charge of vagrancy. A society woman present, representative of an uplift league, takes her to the league, telling the judge she would like to try and reform her. At the room she meets Tom's mother, who is also a member of the society. Mrs. Wren overrides the girl's objections and takes her home with her. At the home Tom is playing in the garden with the little girl when his mother sends him word to come in at once. Wonderingly he complies and finds his long looked-for wife, who has ever held his love.

JENNIE LIND RELATIVE IS CLEVER ACTRESS.

ONE of the clever young actresses at Universal City is Viola Lind, who is a grand-niece of the famous Jennie Lind, the Swedish songstress, who captured the world by her singing more than half a century ago.

Miss Lind is appearing in a number of parts at the Pacific Coast studios, and a few days ago caused a big laugh when she was playing in the Joker company's comedy entitled, "The Harem Scarem Deacon," when she made the remark, "I would be willing to bet this is the first time any-one ever found a Swede in a harem."

"Double-Crossing the Dean"

The Dean of Fudgely Hall breaks up a promising moonlight sonata.

THE dean of Fudgely Hall was an inveterate hater of men. The two drug demons, Soda Sam and Lee the Peach-Picker, held down the corner drug store across from the Hall, also the honors as village Lotharios. On a tip from a friend they spot Corinne and Jane. The girls have to contend with the Hall monitor in getting romance under way, but are finally partially successful.

The boys decide as they cannot get the girls as model moral men, they will then get them as habitual users of Baruna. The dean likes the stuff. It is her one weakness, and she buys many bottles at the store. When a dance is given at the opening of a new garage, they inveigle the girls into attending it in overalls. The dears are smuggled out into the night through the window, so that the dean can have ample opportunity to see them. Of course, the dean and the monitor, who had learned of the clandestine affair, are shrewd enough to nab some extra clothing of the janitor's and they are admitted to the dance, too. But the boys had prepared for them. The janitor was informed, so was the town reporter; also the town policeman. And when, full of the contents of the merrymakers' punch-bowl, the dean and monitor are pinched for the larceny of the janitor's wearing apparel; they have to take off their masks, confess their identity and pray for mercy. The punch had been loaded with Baruna by the wicked boys and the dean and monitor had fallen prey to the old harpy's only weakness. In exchange for the promise of the newspaper man to withhold the story and of the cop not to tell, romance is given immunity on the campus thereafter.

TWO-REEL Nestor Feature Comedy, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, takes this eminent pair to a Ladies' Seminary to seek feminine companionships. Their endeavors to outwit the dean furnishes the fun.

"IMPERIAL INDIA."

Part 1—"Sports of the Rajahs."

Powers One-Reel Educational

This is the first installment of the famous Dorsey travel pictures and shows scenes in little known parts of India. Most of the scenes are unknown even to the most traveled tourist and were secured by Dr. Dorsey with great difficulty. Beautiful buildings in Delhi and other cities are shown, including the higest tower in India, and the "Friday Mosque," the largest in the country. Extraordinary contests between animals at the court of one of the Rajahs are presented. A fight to a finish between two elephants, another between wild boars and a leopard and hyena, in which it is proved that no animal will stand up to the charge of the boar.

The Nizam of Hyderabad entertains his guests with a cheetah hunt, and we go with them. The Maharajah of Udaipoor gives a tiger hunt, the pictures of which were taken from the swaying howdah on an elephant's back.

Fights between rams are depicted, and then we are taken to the old fortress of Golconda, its fabulous wealth long since scattered, and shown the tombs of the "Rockefeller" dynasty of India.

The Dual Personalit

By Mi

Cleo Madison in the costume she likes best for directing.

A VERY serious-minded magazine commented on the fact, in a recent issue, that the women of the screen are almost invariably uninterested in suffrage. A reference to recorded opinions of screne actresses on this question confirms the magazine in its statement, at least as far as the Universal players are concerned. This includes a great many of the most prominent names in motion pictures. Probably one reason for their lack of interest is the intense preoccupation of their profession, which fills almost every waking hour, and takes all that they can spare in both mental and physical force. Another reason is found, undoubtedly, in the fact that men and women occupy positions of absolute equality in pictures, as they do upon the stage, so that agitation for further "rights" is foreign to their thought. Any position which a man has occupied in the new industry has been and is now occupied by a woman. There are even women "cameramen." In the field of direction, women take an important place. There are not as many directresses as directors, but in reputation and accomplishment they stand just as high.

Cleo Madison's name occurs to every one when women directors are mentioned. This versatile and beautiful actress has occupied the dual positions of star and director for some time, and filled both with honor. She came into prominent, as every one knows, through her daring and convincing work in the Universal serial, "Trey o' Hearts." She is a student and close observer, and had been in pictures only a short time when she began to extend her interest beyond the day's work and toward the producing and the mechanical side of the profession. She made a special study of the camera itself, and she is one of the few directors who is able, if necessary, to film her own productions.

When her opportunity to direct came she was ready for it. The experience was not altogether new to her, for she had been her own stage manager in the company known as "The Cleo Madison Stock Company," which had presented a large repertoire of modern plays. She grasped eagerly the opportunity to try out some of the theories of photoplay production which she had been accumulating during her experience as a screen actress.

"Every play in which women appear needs the feminine touch," she declared upon taking up her new duties. "Lois Weber's productions are phenomenally successfully, partly because her woman creations are true to the spirit of womanhood. I believe in doing most of the work before the camera is called into action. It should never be necessary, except in the case of accident, to retake a scene. Every actor should have an opportunity to read the whole play from start to finish before playing his bit. How can you interpret a role unless you know its relation to the whole drama? If anyone is in ignorance of the story, the production always suffers. Once th filming of the scene is begun nothin should hinder its completion. All th preparation for it should be thorough supervised beforehand."

It was on this principle that Miss Mad son produced many one and two reele and the two five-reel features that stan to her credit during her experience as director. For she is voluntarily resignin that position, in order to give her who attention to the portrayal of one of th great heroines of the theatrical world, L Tosca. The screen version of the stor of this famous character, conceived Victor Sardou for Sara Bernhardt, w created the role in the heigh-day of h beauty, will be eagerly awaited by those familiar with the drama and wit the musical version by Pucini, which one of the favorite operas of the moder school and is associated with the name of Mary Garden, Geraldine Farrar, Emm Destin and Olive Fremsted.

The role is one which Miss Madiso whose greatest joy is, as she says hersel "the portrayal of the human emotions joy and grief," has long wished to tr She feels that she must concentrate all her powers on the interpretation of this great part, so she has resigned the reins of direction in favor of Rex Ingram, who is already known to all admirers of Bluebird Photoplays for his splendid work in the Mersereau pictures, "The Great Problem" and "Broken Fetters." The photo adaptation will be based upon the opera rather

Miss Madison might be called the woman dual personality, for two sides of her aracter seem to be developed in equal easure, and she finds herself alternately the grasp of each of them. She is both professional woman, and a domestic one, d it is impossible for her to decide, at nes, which is the real taste and which e cultivated one. She is the type of rson who does whatsover her hand finds do with her might, and while she is in e grasp of one personality she entirely rgets the other. Her screen side is failiar to her public. Her thousands of mirers know her for a beautiful woman, o dresses with originality and distinc-
n, who is absolute master of her emons, and can portray the deepest human ssions with an intensity which makes r acting seem like a page of life itself.
ose who remember "Trey o' Hearts" ow that she possesses personal courage a high degree, for the risks she took in at hair-raising serial entitle her to rank among the dare-devils of the screen.
She created a reputation for herself as a director as soon as the first picture with which the Universal entrusted her was released. The artistry of her sets is recognized and in "Her Bitter Cup," one of the first of the Red Feather features, she accomplished results of staging and lighting which set something of a standard for future productions. The public is not so well acquainted with her other self, but her friends insist that they alone know the real Cleo. She lives in one of the most charming bungalows in Hollywood with her mother and a little invalid sister, to whom she is devoted and for whom she makes her home as beautiful and attractive as a home can be. She is an ardent gardener, partly for the pleasure it gives her to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before and partly for the added interest which her flowers bring to the shut-in life of her little companion. The first days of spring find Cleo Madison, the homemaker, in her garden, planning new decorations for the flower beds and watching for the re-appearance of her bulbs. She has a famous Dutch garden, which contains some of the finest specimens of bulbs to be found in this country, which were sent to Miss Madison by some of her admirers in Holland, the land of the tulip.

Her gardening over for the day, Miss Madison visits her chicken farm, for she is a poultry expert as well. Some one presented her with a queer gift one day—five white hens. They seemed so much at home in their new surroundings, and Helen, the little sister, derived so much pleasure from watching them, that the actress decided to keep them and order a dozen more. With her usual thoroughness, she read up on the subject and found out just what chickens need in order to keep them happy and contented and insure a plentiful supply of eggs, and she was so pleased with her results that she declares her intention of going in seriously, some day, for poultry farming on a large scale.

Another of Miss Madison's accomplishments, when she is under the influence of her domestic personality, is cooking. She is a famous cuisiniere and she enjoys nothing more than donning a big apron and setting to work to cook a real old-fashioned chicken dinner. Can you imagine the tearful heroine of "A Soul Enslaved" preparing a fowl for the oven, or the temperamental Rethna of "Her Bitter Cup" concocting a plate of biscuits that simply melt in your mouth? Do you think that La Tosca knew very much about cocoanut icing? But, on the other hand, cooking seems just as uncongenial to a woman who has fought for her life on the edge of a cliff, who has climbed down between two freight cars and uncoupled them while the train was going at full speed, or performed any of the other little stunts which Cleo Madison undertook as all in the day's work during the filming of the serial. Just the other day, in one of her own pictures called "The Crimson Trail," she was dragged at the tail of a wagon along a dusty road. But she performs all these things while the professional Cleo is holding sway, for the domestic Cleo confessed with frankness in an interview the other day that she is not very happy on the top of the kitchen ladder.

The connecting link between the two Cleos seems to be a love of artistic clothes. This characteristic persists no

"The Committee On Credentials"

REMARKABLE Three-Reel Bison Western Drama, adapted by Harvey Gates from a Peter B. Kyne story. Produced by Harry Carey. A tough prospector stakes out a claim which he is unable to hold and jeopardizing the lives of his wife and girl, goes to his death in one of the most sensational accidents ever accomplished in the movies.

Bob pleads with the widow.

THE Camp of Pinon had sprung into existence over night. A prospector seeking the elusive metal had overturned something that glittered and the news spread fast and the population came in over night. Ballarat Bob is the owner of a gambling establishment. Bob's reputation for fair dealing is known throughout the country. He bunks with Doc Bleeker, a doctor by profession and gambler by taste, and Chuck Walla Bill, an old desert rat. Doc and Bill are both old enough to be Bob's father and both take a paternal interest in him. The three are more than bunkmates—they are pals, and it is indeed a happy time when Doc and Bill beat the game and win their partner's money.

Clem Hardy, a victim of the gold fever, arrives in the mining camp, accompanied by his wife, Josephine, and their child, Peter Boy.

They stake a claim near the camp of the three pals. Clem's first visit, after staking his claim, is to the gambling hall.

As Bill and Doc approach their home they see the new neighbors and are annoyed by the crying of the child. The child's crying gets on their nerves and when Bob arrives Bill is in a towering rage. They decide that the noise is unbearable and Bill, as a committee of one, goes to the tent to remonstrate. Bill enters blustering and bullying, but one glance at Josephine calms him more than a six-shooter would. Clem, angry at the intrusion, hits Bill and knocks him out. Bill starts to retaliate, but, seeing Josephine, retreats in fierce anger. He returns to his friends and tells them of the incident.

The next day, as Bob is returning from the hall, Peter Boy is playing in the road. Bob snatches the child from death underneath the oncoming stage, but the child receives a minor injury to his hand. Doc is nearby and hurries out with his medicine case. Bob is especially thanked by the woman, and immediately the two find interest in each other.

Clem at last makes a rich strike of gold and at once starts on a wild career of gambling and drinking. At first Bob bars Clem from his tables on account of his family, but realizes if he does not take his money someone else will. Bob revokes his rule in Clem's favor. Josephine has come to look upon Bob as partly responsible for Clem's condition, and she believes that Bob encourages the latter to play. At last comes the time when Clem loses everything. After he leaves Bob goes to the safe, consults a notebook, takes out a sack of money and goes to the Hardy tent. Josepine at once accuses him of leading her husband to ruin. Bob then presents her with the sack of money, explaining he knew the gambling would fall hardest on her and the child, and that he had kept account of Hardy's losses. He gives her the money, telling her it belongs to her entirely. He then meets Hardy and threatens him with an awful death if he does not brace up and treat his wife and child decently.

Later on Clem finds that Josephine has received the money and accuses her of playing with Bob on the side. He strikes her down and leaves for the hall to find Bob. He picks a quarrel with Bob, but for the wife's sake the latter holds his hand.

Peter Boy is ill and Doc goes to visit him. Clem sees their shadows on the wall and thinks that Bob is there with his wife. He shoots through the tent and Doc falls. Bob comes running to the spot and Clem wounds him in the shoulder. Then he jumps into his wagon and drives furiously away. The whole town rides after him. On the edge of a cliff he is lassoed and wagon and all falls headlong down the side of the steep incline and Hardy is killed.

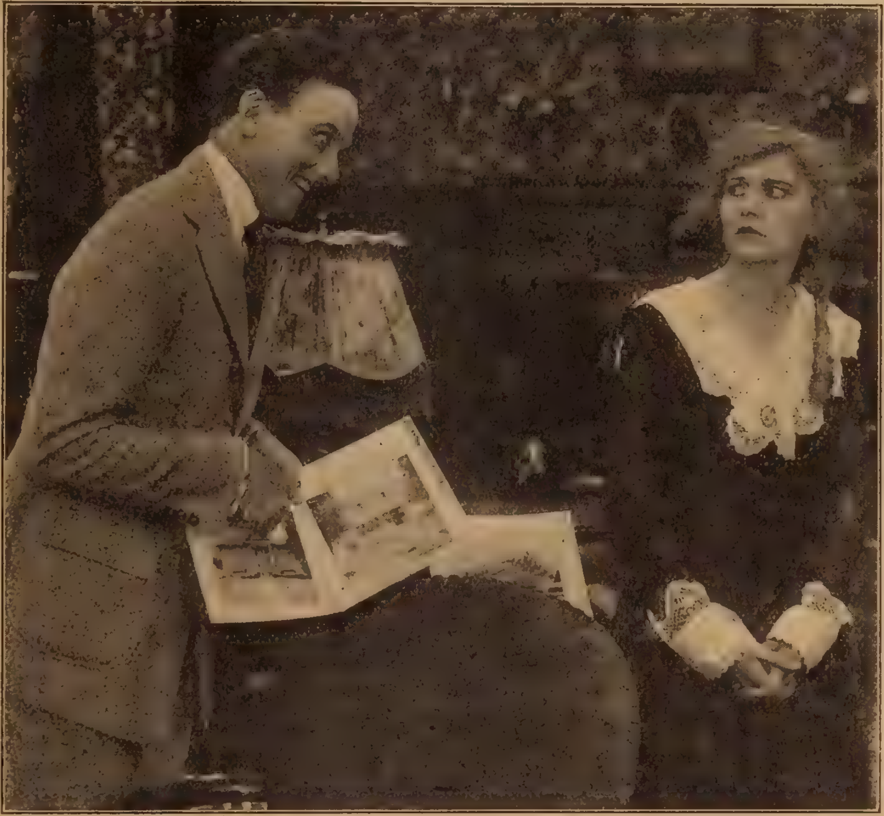
"They Wouldn't Take Him Seriously"



"But I am in dead earnest this time," said Jimmie.

JIMMIE O'DAY was born with a smile which struck to him throughout his boyhood days. To see Jimmie was to see his smile, and naturally his close friends were accustomed to call him smiling Jimmie O'Day. A member of exclusive clubs, and well supplied with money, Jimmie, unlike the majority of wealthy young men, was not an idler. Much of the business sense that had made the elder O'Day a power was possessed by Jimmie, yet he was never too busy for a frolic. As a consequence of his genial disposition, Jimmie was a favorite with both men and women, but his friends refused to take him seriously. It had become an expected thing for Jimmie to propose to every girl he met. Vera Langley had been the victim of more proposals than any other girl in the crowd and she earnestly pleaded with Jimmie to pick out some new model. A short time later Vera received a notice from an old friend that she and her mother were coming to their city to live, and Vera laughingly told Jimmie that he would have another chance to exercise his habit.

Jimmie and Lucille, Vera's friend, become interested from the start and soon the usual proposal pops out, but it is serious this time. They are interrupted, however, by Vera, who laughingly tells Lucille of Jimmie's proposals. Lucille is deeply hurt, but manages to laugh the matter off. Jimmie insists that he is serious this time, but his friends all give him the laugh. Jimmie makes his proposals so much a matter of business that Lucille believes, he is merely carrying on his old tactics. Finally they have a break and for the first time in many days, Jimmie's smile is absent. He absently picks up a photograph of his father, across the face of which is written "never be a quitter." Jimmie takes courage from this message from the dead and decides to persue his case with vigor. Lucille refuses to see him, but Jimmie writes Lucille a long letter every day telling her of the bungalow he has selected for their new home and askink her advice about decorating it. Lucille at first tears the letters up unread, but her curiosity finally gets the better of her. Enclosed within one is the diagram of her new home and she can't resist the desire to go over and look at it. In order to convince Jimmie that she believes he is playing with her affections, Lucille calls to her assistance her cousin Frank. She arranges things so that Jimmie will see her and Frank apparently in a lover's embrace, but Jimmie decides that he will have her in spite of fate. The next day he calls at the house to win or lose on one last effort. Lucille and Frank are in the room when he forces his way in, and they quickly hide. The mother is in on the plot and she tells Jimmie that Lucille and Frank are out looking for a house. This is too much for poor Jimmie, and he decides that all is lost. Lucille sees how hard Jimmie is taking his defeat, and decides that he has learned his lesson. The next day Lucille and Frank decide to look over the bungalow, and while they are inside Jimmie drives up. Lucille peers out of the window and notices his face shows suffering, but she hides behind the curtains. As Jimmie stands dejectedly in the room, he hears a smothered sneeze and hastily pulling the curtains aside, he discovers Lucille. She is unable to hide her emotion, and at last Jimmie's dazed senses return, and he takes her in his arms. He begins an ardent proposal and Lucille laughingly tells him if he had only proposed like that in the first place they both would have saved a lot of heart-ache. At last Jimmie has been taken seriously.

CAST.

John, the janitor	Wallace Beery
John, the clerk	Gilmore Hammond
The Stenographer	Ruby Cox

John, the janitor, has a pet monkey who accompanies him on his different jobs. He thinks very much of the monk. Because of his wonderful ability, John is given a post of janitor in one of the large hotels. He becomes acquainted with the stenographer in the place and he admires her very much. Her affections are bestowed upon John, the clerk of the hotel, and John, the janitor, is unable to get her interested in himself. One day he finds a flower and places it upon her desk. John, the clerk, also sends a flower of the same kind, with a note, begging the girl to meet him that night. She answers the note, thanking him for the flower and promising to meet him that night. She lays the note on the clerk's desk.

While John, the janitor, is cleaning up, he finds the note, addressed to John and thinks it is for himself. He reads it and is pleased that the girl thinks so much of him. He receives a rude jolt, however, when the girl tells him that he is "off his nut" and does not care for him at all. He goes to his room first and dozes off.

He is sadly cleaning a room on the thirteenth floor when he detects a crook robbing a room. He takes him in charge and gets a substantial reward. The hotel management praises him for his good work and the girl, regretting her harsh action, forgives him. He is kissing her with relish, when the owner of the house awakens him and he finds that he has been kissing the monkey. The owner tells him to get busy or he will get fired and poor John goes back to his drudgery.

Helen Carter, a charming young society matron, is desperately in love with her husband, but her devotion begins to pall upon him. He finds various excuses to remain in town over night away from his country home. Mrs. Carter investigates and discovers one Mazie Mabelle, a dancer, to be the object of his interest. By chance, Mazie and Mrs. Carter both patronize the same dressmaker. Through the voluable fitter, Mrs. Mrs. Carter learns that Mazie is socially ambitious, and she arranges to meet Mazie. She explains the situation to Mazie and offers not only to pay her a large sum of money, but to introduce her socially if she will help her in a scheme to cure her husband of his infatuation.

Mazie, who considers Carter only as a stage-door Johnny, assents, and Mrs. Carter arranges a house party at her country place to meet the well-known dancer. Carter is delighted at first. Mrs. Carter is seemingly blind to his infatuation, and to his amazement, becomes the center of interest herself to all the male guests of the house-party.

By pre-arrangement, Mazie pretends to sprain her ankle, and it is impossible for her to leave the house. Mrs. Carter, who has arranged an outing for the house-party, explains to Carter that, as hostess, she must continue to entertain her guests, but he, as host, must remain with Mazie. Carter, who has become desperately bored with Mazie, begins to realize the difference between a beautiful woman of mentality and culture, and a beautiful woman dependent entirely upon her physical attractions. His enforced attendance upon the dancer becomes a torture, and he finally collapses, proclaiming his devotion to his wife, and insisting that his friendship for Mazie is purely platonic.

Mrs. Carter realizes that the cure is genuine. Secretly she pays Mazie, who returns to the white lights delightedly, after the boreaom of the country, leaving Carter a chastened husband, and Mrs. Carter a satisfied wife.

Mrs. Fussy, wife of a chronic grumbler, decides to test the truth of the saying, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder." She engages passage on a steamer bound for London. Mr. Fussy is broken-hearted and writes a note in which he tells her that upon her return she may look for his body in the briny deep. On his way to the ocean a serious accident befalls him and he is carried to the hospital. The doctor declares he will never regain his right mind. Mrs. Fussy learns of the sinking of a steamer by a submarines and decides to return home. She finds the note and is led to think she is a widow. She puts out a sign of rooms for rent and goes into mourning.

Mr. Nagg, who suffers torments from a cruel wife's tongue, decides to teach his wife a lesson. He places a farewell note and a bundle of his clothes on the beach and goes off in search of a furnished room. By accident he obtains a room at Mrs. Fussy's. Meanwhile Mrs. Nagg becomes involved in an unfortunate incident with Dr. Takslifeasy, the inventor of Biff, a sure cure-all. She falls for his proposition and the doctor hustles off to get his testimonial published. An accident occurs in the editorial rooms of the Daily News and Mrs. Nagg's picture appears as the principal in a suicide instead of in a medical testimonial. Mr. Nagg thereby learns with sorrow of the death of his wife. Mrs. Nagg is furnished with the poof of her husband's death and she obtains a position as nurse in the hospital. Under the careful nursing of Mrs. Nagg, Fussy is on the road to recovery of everything except his memory. Seven days and nights of mourning and Mrs. Fussy falls for the wiles of Mr. Nagg, who falls violently in love with her, while Mr. Fussy is fascinated with his nurse. Mr. Fussy suggests that he purchase a set of costumes and that the nurse accompany him to the Fifth Ward masque ball. She agrees, and Fussy sets out to visit a bargain store, where he finds a big sale on cowboy and cowgirl outfits. Mr. Nagg obtains the consent of Mrs. Fussy to forget her mourning long enough to accompany him to the big ball. She agrees and Nagg buys an outfit exactly like the ones purchased by Mr. Fussy. Dr. Takslifeasy decides to advertise Biff in front of the dance hall. Nagg and Mrs. Fussy, in their masques and costumes, recognize the doctor, who has a room with Mrs. Fussy, and they decide to play a trick on him. In a ludicrous series of scenes the doctor proves a tartar and poor Nagg is given a dose of Biff without the removal of the cork. Mr. Fussy and Mrs. Nagg arrive on the scene and they are attired in the same outfits as Nagg and Mrs. Fussy.

The masques are the cause of a ludicrous mixup. Nagg and Fussy both get a novel dose of Biff and are carted home by their escorts. When the unmasking comes Mrs. Nagg discovers her partner is none other than Nagg himself. Mr. Fussy, who is mentally afflicted, does not recognize his wife. Nagg and his wife arrive at Fussy's in search of explanations and new complications set in. In a novel manner Dr. Takslifeasy furnishes the remedy for a chaotic mind and Fussy is restored to reason, but no one gives the poor doctor credit and he bows his head in anguish at the way a cruel world had rewarded a genius.

The Detective	Dave Morris

Reggie was a very jealous husband and made life miserable for himself and his pretty little wife, who was not allowed to speak to a gentleman. In his desperation he sought the services of a famous detective to get the goods on his wife. The famous detective was taken to the house and Reg introduced him to Gertie as his father, who, thinking to make father fel at home, gave a great deal of attention to him. This angered Reg very much, but when he called the detective to account he secured very little satisfaction from him. During the first night in Reg's home the famous detective, though, showed his real colors, for he was nothing more than a porch climber. Hardly had the house become quiet before he sought his able assistant and together they started to secure the silverware and other valuables. The assistant, however muddled things up a bit by trying to shower his attentions on the maid, who resisted so strongly that she attracted the attention of a sleeping cop and aroused Reg from his peaceful slumbers, thereby landing himself and his boss in the hands of the law.

The New Maid	Nellie Slattery

JOHN WARREN, a traveling salesman, arrives home unexpectedly. He asks for his wife, and the new maid tells him that she is down town, shopping. On entering his wife's bedroom, Warren discovers a handsome evening dress that he has never seen and shows surprise. Presently Mrs. Warren returns in a taxi, and, on meeting her husband, she says, “Why John, I didn't expect you back until next week!” She removes her handsome furs and, noting John's surprise, pretends that she bought the furs at a sale for almost nothing. Then she tells him that she will try to make up for the maid she has just engaged by self-denial and saving, and finally obtains his consent to retain the maid.

After a while the telephone rings, and Mrs. Warren goes to answer it. Dr. Carl is at the other end of the 'phone. Warren asks his wife who has called her up, and she responds, nervously: “It was my mother. She told me father is not feeling well.” Mrs. Warren then goes to her room and tries to hide the new evening dress behind her other clothes, unaware that her husband has already seen it.

Warren's suspicions have now been fully aroused, and he sets a trap for his wife. A week later, after finishing breakfast, he announces that he is compelled to start on a business trip unexpectedly, and that he will be away two weeks at least.

Instead of leaving town, Warren rents a room commanding a view of his house from across the street. While he is smoking at the window, he sees Dr. Carl approaching. The doctor is admitted by the new maid. Shortly afterwards, Warren, through his binoculars, sees his wife, handsomely gowned, drive off with him in an automobile. Warren is now convinced that Dr. Carl is his wife's lover. That night, Warren, still watching from his post at the window, sees the doctor and his wife return and enter his house by means of a latch key.

The maid, who has been asleep on a couch in the dining-room, peeps through the key-hole and sees them enter the reception room, where Mrs. Warren removes her wraps. The maid shrugs her shoulders significantly, and lies down again on the couch.

Soon afterwards, the doctor takes leave of Mrs. Warren, who closes the door after him, and crosses to her bedroom. The maid now awakens, but has not heard the doctor leave. Warren, from the window on the opposite side of the street, sees the

Mary Fuller in "Behind the Veil"

DIANA and Harriet Terrace bear the remarkable physical resemblance that usually marks twins, but their natures differ as the day and night. Diana is self-willed and turbulent in disposition, while Harriet is considerate and reserved.

Wilbur assures Harriet that he needs her.

Wilbur Steele, a wealthy young author, has gone blind from overwork and is anxious for quiet and seclusion. So it is arranged that he is to board with Mrs. Terrace. On the day of Wilbur's arrival, Diana catches a glimpse of him as she is starting to the station on her way to a fashionable boarding school. Harriet frankly welcomes Wilbur, who takes her hand and says, "Although I cannot see you, to hear your voice is a pleasure." Harriet helps Wilbur with a book he is writing, which is to be called "Behind the Veil."

Diana proves a refractory pupil at boarding school. During a tennis game, she scrapes an acquaintance with Perry Jarvis, a lively young college chap, and subsequently goes out motoring with him.

One day Wilbur announces to Harriet that the doctor has given hope that an operation on his eyes may prove successful. He then tells her of his love for her, which the girl reciprocates. The mother notes the progress of their love affair, and is overjoyed at Harriet's prospect of happiness. Some months later, Mrs. Terrace suffers from an attack of appendicitis, and is taken to the nearest city for an operation. As Harriet is starting with her mother for the railroad station, the rural postman sees her and hands her a letter from Wilbur in which he tells her that he is about to undergo the operation on his eyes and hopes that she will be the one he will see first.

At the boarding school, Diana is called down by the principal, who tells her that she will not brook her misconduct any longer, especially as her last escapade in going out motoring with a young collegian has become the talk of the school. Diana defies the principal, and is ordered to leave for her home.

THIS Two-Reel Victor Drama by Elizabeth R. Carpenter, tells the story of twin sisters, one of whom steals the place in society belonging to the other. Directed by Lucius Henderson.

Meanwhile, Wilbur has had his eyesight restored, and returns during the absence of Mrs. Terrace and Harriet at the hospital. Diana happens to return from boarding school on the same day. On seeing Diana, Wilbur mistakes her for her twin sister, and rushing up to her, catches her in his arms, exclaiming: "Harriet, I knew you at once, although I have never actually seen you before." Diana plays the deception to the limit. A country curate alights from a buggy and makes a request for a glass of water and then suggests to Wilbur that they surprise her mother, while she is away, by getting married. Wilbur assents delightedly, and the curate is prevailed upon to make them man and wife. At first Diana is terrified at what she has done, but soon recovers her assurance, and looks carelessly up into his face and smiles. In order to keep up the deception Diana tells her mother and says that the only thing to do now is to let him think that she is Harriet. She adds that she hopes that Harriet will forgive her. Mrs. Terrace is dumfounded on reading the letter, and tries to conceal it, but Harriet gets possession of it, and is broken-hearted on learning what Diana has done.

Five years pass without the deception being discovered. Diana is fond of amusement and neglects her little boy, David, so that the care of the child falls largely to her sister. Wilbur has lost interest in his work, and when Harriet asks him one day when he intends to finish his book "Behind the Veil," he says, "I cannot explain why I do not finish it. While blind, Harriet was my inspiration, since my marriage to her, I have experienced a blindness of soul, and all is different."

Diana meets her former college friend, Perry, at a fashionable reception. He makes ardent love to her, and, heeding the voice of the tempter, she leaves her home, after writ-

"THE RIVER GODDESS."

Drama in One Reel.

Written by Franz May.
Produced by Matt. Moore.

CAST.

James Courtney	Matt. Moore
Jane Haven	Jane Gail
Daniel Emmett	Tom Lehmann

Night hangs over the river. The River Goddess beckons and a tortured soul, James Courtney, heeds the call of the silent black waters. Another totured soul, Daniel Emmett, approaches him. They look into each other's eyes, each answering the questioning look of the other. Courtney tells his companion that he is a poor artist and that he loved a girl who seemed to return his love, but her parents objected to his suit. As his story is visualized, we see the girl telling him that she must obey her parents. He folds her in a fond embrace and she agrees to elope with him. We next see Courtney waiting for the girl at the trysting place. A newspaper flutters to his feet. He picks it up and runs across a paragraph stating that Jane Haven, the pretty and talented heiress, evading her mother, has eloped with her chauffeur. Life holds nothing more for Courtney and he seek surcease of sorrow in the river.

It is now Dan's turn to tell his story. He had wealth and position, but loved the green woods better than society. In the visualization of the story we see him out hunting. Meanwhile, Jane Haven, who is driving with her mother in a car through the forest road, spies a deer. Impetuously she jumps out of the car and runs towards it, just as Dan raises his gun to take aim. The shot hits the girl instead of the deer and both Dan and her mother run toward her as she falls to the ground. They carry her to Dan's hunting lodge, where she is tenderly cared for. Dan believes he has found his ideal and the girl promises to marry him. After her recovery he receives a letter stating that she has gone with the man she really loves. Life has no further interest for Dan, and he, too, seeks the river.

Courtney now takes a picture out of his pocket and hands it to Dan. Dan stares at it in wonder, and produces another picture from his own pocket. The pictures are identical. The two men look at each other in amazement. Presently they are approached by two policemen, who announce that they are under arrest. In the police station they are charged with being suspicious characters. A car stands in front of the station, which is recognized by Courtney. The officer tells him that it is Jane Haven's car and adds: "You are both under suspicion of being the chauffeur who ran away with her."

Both Courtney and Emmett hand their cards to the officer at the desk, who orders them to be released. The two men look at each other as they reach the sidewalk, and Courtney says: "So the girl ran away with the chauffeur. It is not worth while sacrificing one's life to the River Goddess for a girl like that. Let's drown our sorrows at the shrine of Bacchus."

The River Goddess laughs as she disappears beneath the black waters. She has lost two victims, but while human life exists there will be others.

"THE WISHING LAMP."

Big U One-Reel Juvenile Drama.

Produced by H. C. Mathews.

Gordon Griffith (played by himself) is the spoiled son of a wealthy woman. He has tired of all his toys and wishes that he were poor and then he would not have to learn so many lessons, but could play all the time with Skinny's gang. His mother's old gardener receives a letter from his former sweetheart recommending her boy to his care. The boy arrives and the gardener takes him in. The boy soon wishes he were rich, so that he would not have to work so hard. A few days later the Mrs. Griffith sees Gordon throw his book, "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," impatiently to the floor. She says that she shall take it to a boy who will appreciate it, and gives it to the gardener's boy. Gordon meets the other boy and they express their wishes to each other. Mrs. Griffith overhears them and forms a plan. The gardener's boy suggests finding an Aladdin's lamp, so that they can wish on it.

Mrs. Griffith arranges so that they shall find an antique lamp. That night when they are both asleep she has them carried to each other's houses, and when they wake in the morning they think that their wishes have come true. But, of course, they are not satisfied long. Gordon finds the other boy's work monotonous and is homesick for his mother, while the other longs for the gardener and the comfort of his old clothes. When they have learned their lesson Mrs. Griffith has them changed back again, and everybody is happy once more.

"ANY YOUTH."

Victor One-Reel Drama.

Written and Produced by Allen Holubar.

CAST.

Any Youth	Allen Holubar
Circe	Dorothy Phillips
Faith
Temptation	Hector V. Sarno

This story is an allegorical fantasy dealing with the eternal conflict between the better and baser self of the average human being.

Any Youth has made a moderate success in the city and writes to his sweetheart, Faith, begging her to come to him. Faith is happy in her parents' home, but she is willing to try the difficulties of a new home with the man she loves.

Temptation, the ever-present good-fellow who is always on hand, visits Any Youth. He tells him of the good times in store for a young man and pleads with Any Youth to go out with him and make a night of it. There is a battle between the better and baser self of Any Youth. He is torn between the two, but finally the baser self prevails and the better self is driven into hiding. The baser self takes him in charge and they make the rounds of the gay White Way. Although this better self is driven out he is not discouraged, and patiently awaits the return of Any Youth.

Temptation is at the elbow of Any Youth and leads him from one thing to another. His better self feels the call to duty and again enters the contest with his baser self. This time Any Youth heeds the counsel of his better self and returns to his apartment.

The next day Faith arrives at the home of Any Youth. While Any Youth is waiting to welcome her. Temptation slips into the room and uses his arts. Any Youth's baser self, angry at his defeat of the night before, pleads with Any Youth not to marry the girl; he shows him that if he marries her, he will be tied for life. He tells him that women are like flowers, to gather and throw away. His better self enters the contest and the two have a bitter struggle. Fearing he is losing the fight, the better self tells the youth that he should remember Faith is a woman, as his own mother. The selves fight, but finally the better self crushes the baser self and Youth goes to meet Faith. The better self, smiling, accompanies the two to the minister's and afterwards proves a faithful guardian in the home of Any Youth and Faith.

The Universal City Entertains Knights Templars

TEN thousand Knights and ladies see spectacle. Gigantic rodeo and field stunts arranged at the picture city, which is dressed in gala colors for occasion.

Universal City, Cal., June 24.

(Special.)

FOR the last week California, or that portion of it bounded by the environs of Los Angeles, has been given up almost entirely to the Knights Templars and their ladies. The Knights have been having a convention in Los Angeles, and the numerous excursions for pleasure and instruction which have been planned for them have been many and varied. None of them, however, drew the crowd, or excited as much interest as the day devoted by them to exploring Universal City. More than ten thousand Knights Templars and their ladies visited the capital of the film world yesterday afternoon at the invitation of H. O. Davis, Vice-President of the Universal, and general manager of Universal City. Mr. Davis is himself a Knight, and his courtesy in throwing open the entire picture-making plant of the Universal for the enjoyment of the visitors was thoroughly appreciated by them. The lid has been on for visitors at Universal City for some little time, but Mr. Davis gave instructions that it was to come off for this occasion, and it certainly did come off with a bang.

The rodio and wild west show which had been provided was far more exciting than any other held before at Universal City, partly because none has been given in some time, and partly because there were so many first-class riders gathered for the new serial, and already present in the Harry Carey company. These, together with the cowboys, soldiers, Indians, and other equestrians who are a permanent feature at the City, formed a wild west show of which Buffalo Bill would have been proud. The City was decorated with the Knights' colors, and with American flags, in honor of the flower of Knighthood, and the genuine festival spirit prevailed all over the lot.

Rex de Rosselli, superintendent of the Universal zoo, began the official proceedings after the grand reception with a lion act in the arena, which was set in the upper part of Universal City, which here forms a natural amphitheatre. There were natural seats for all, but the officers of the Grand Encampment occupied tiers of boxes specially constructed for their use. After the lion act, the rodio proper began with a troop of 100 cowboys and girls, led by Jacques Jaccard, who will direct the new serial, "Liberty," Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch, Harry Carey and George Marshall, of the Carey Features, Jane Bernoudy, crack cow woman, and Neal Hart, champion broncho buster of the West. Jaccard had the entire cast of his new serial at work, including Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt, Eddie Polo, G. Raymond Nye, and his Mexican troopers and cavalry squadron.

The program was made up of bucking horse riding, fancy roping, sharp shooting, exhibitions of relay riding, a quadrille on horseback, scenes at a round-up camp, a massacre of the members of a wagon train, and a number of other moving picture thrill producers which had the large audience in uproarious applause time and again. Twenty-five of the Universal's most beautiful stars and leading women acted as guides for the Sir Knights and the members of their families, and after the exercises of the rodio conducted them about the various stages and introduced them to the stars and directors and the various players. Among the notables present were Most Eminent Sir Lee S. Smith, of Pittsburgh, Grand Master; Right Eminent Sir Joseph K. Orr, of Toronto, Deputy Grand Master, and most of the other grand officers, together with Mayor Sebastian and the officials of Los Angeles.

ing a note stating that she is going away with Perry as the life of seclusion she has been compelled to lead has palled upon her, adding that Harriet will look out for the boy. Wilbur is stunned on reading her letter.

About this time, Mrs. Terrace becomes ill and on her death-bed, hands Wilbur a letter, telling him to read it after she is gone. In this letter, Mrs. Terrace reveals to Wilbur that during his blindness he had loved Harriet, but that Diana had deceived him, and had thus wrecked two lives; and she urges Wilbur to bear his sorrow courageously. Wilbur determines to defy social convention, and endeavors to persuade Harriet that, rightfully, she ought to be his wife, but the girl tells him that society is merciless, and that she can no longer remain under his roof to care for his boy. Wilbur rebels at this but, after a struggle with himself, Harriet persuades him to bear his cross with fortitude. With heavy heart she seeks the solitude of her desolate home.

We now see Diana playing with fire in a quaint Spanish cafe, where she engages in a desperate flirtation with a young Spaniard, who has been dancing with a pretty brunette. Perry has begun to tire of Diana, and gives much of his time to other female companions. Presently the Spanish girl notes the young Spaniard's attentions to Diana, and in a frenzy of hate and jealousy, springs upon Diana with uplifted knife, and stabs her to death.

Wilbur is shocked on hearing the news of Diana's death, but the barrier that separated him from Harriet, is now rolled away. Wilbur seeks Harriet at her home and assures her that David needs her, but that he needs her even more than the boy.

NEW HAMBURG, Ont., June, 1916. —Mr. Ralph Gribble of the Grand Theatre here has notified all interested that he is selling out his business in the above city next month. Mr. Gribble is advertising his theatre for sale in "The Canadian Universal Bulletin."

role with them. The young men have just returned from New York, where they had a conference with President Carl Laemmle and other officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

While in New York they attended the exhibition at Madison Square Garden of the motion picture makers of the United States and declare that of the Universal was the best they ever saw.

While in Omaha they attended a ball given by the exhibitors, and declare that never in their lives had they been given such a royal reception. Manager F. A. Van Dusan, of the Laemmle Exchange, had a brass band at the station to greet them and Franklyn Farnum, who was also en route west to Universal City. They were escorted to their hotel in style.

They appeared at the Universal houses in Omaha and were given great receptions.

WITH THE EXCHANGEMEN

BARNEY ROSENTHAL WINS THE MAY PRIZE.

THE honor of winning the Universal exchange prize for the month of May fell to the lot of Barney Rosenthal, of Universal Film & Supply Company, of St. Louis, and in accepting the prize from Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Rosenthal wishes it distinctly understood that a large share of the credit for this prize belongs to the energetic members of the exchange rather than to himself.

SHEPARD CONSOLIDATES BOSTON EXCHANGES.

H. J. SHEPARD, manager of the New England Film Exchange, is emulating M. H. Hoffman in respect to the double-handedness of his duties. He has been appointed manager of the Bluebird exchange as well as the New England exchange, and in order to bring the two exchanges in perfect harmony, has moved the Bluebird into the same building with the New England Exchange, 1100 Boylston Street.

Mr. Shepard was in New York to confer with P. A. Powers, Treasurer of the Universal, on Monday, and as an illustration of the all-sufficiency of the product of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, cites Manchester, N. H.:

The manufacturing city of Manchester is blessed with four moving picture theaters, and four only. They are the Eagle, Lyric, Granite Square and the Modern. It is interesting to note the service that they are running. The Lyric is running Bluebirds regularly, and one-half of the Universal first-run service out of the New England Universal Film Exchange. The Eagle is running Red Features regularly, and the other half of the same first-run service. The Granite Square takes second-run following the Lyric, and the Modern takes second-run following the Eagle.

ST. LOUIS SEES "UNDINE."

FOR three months St. Louis was deprived of the opportunity of seeing "Undine," the third Bluebird picture to be released. The opposition developed through the efforts of some would-be reformers who took it upon themselves to inform the District Attorney's office that St. Louis would be forever besmirched if "Undine" were played. The case, after numerous delays, has just been argued in St. Louis, and was won by the Bluebird Photoplays Co. of St. Louis, hands down. After the first witness for the prosecution was called the trial developed into a farce, and before the Bluebird had had an opportunity to even call its first witness the judge dismissed the case, and the house which booked its first run has reserved the right to run it indefinitely. It should be a very long run.

WOOD'S "PEG" STUNT.

THE photographs on this page were taken of an advertising stunt well executed by D. L. Wood, manager of the Palace Theater of Plano, Texas. James B. Kelly, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, of Dallas, has this to say of Mr. Wood, and Kelly ought to know: "This guy is some booster, as you can see by the enclosed photos. He is a showman of the old type, having owned tent shows of his own, and knows how to get the jits."

The name of the young lady in the picture is Flora Mae Spilman, age 13, of Plano, Texas, and Flora Mae's one object in life since she played the leading role in this advertising stunt is to become a Universal moving picture star.

NEW OFFICES.

THE Canadian Universal Film Company of Vancouver has been forced to move into larger quarters, and is now comfortably located at 711 Dunsmuir Street, Vancouver, B. B., Canada. Mr. Finch is in charge of this office.

There was a man in our town,
And he was most unwise,
He tried to run a picture show,
And didn't advertise.

THE DUAL PERSONALITY OF CLEO MADISON

matter which personality seems to be in possession of her. She designs her most successful gowns herself, and they are wonderfully well adapted to her style of large-eyed, rather wistful beauty. She is planning something "extra special" for the Tosca production and rejoices that the lack of the cares of direction will enable her to put more time into the costuming of her roles. The clothes period of the story, that of the picturesque First Empire, should be particularly becoming to the star, and her admirers may look forward to a treat. The Empress Josephine is said to have invented the short-waisted, narrow-skirted style which bears her name, in order to try to keep the waning love of her husband, for this type of dress is said to make a woman look younger than any other. Miss Madison need not worry about that for some time to come, but she will certainly look her very best in the graceful gowns of the Italian singer, and we all know that Cleo Madison's best is something very special indeed.

OH PSHAW!

The censor said he'd cut the scene,
Because a wintry breeze,
As it went whistling down the vale, doctor leave the house and drive off. Warren now proceeds to make himself up to look like the doctor, with the aid of cosmetics and a false moustache. Next we see Dr. Carl enter the library of his own house where he removes his coat and deposits his cap and gloves on a chair before turning out the light. Warren, having finished his make-up, is seen to enter the doctor's library from a window, where he borrows the doctor's coat, cap and gloves for the purpose he has in view.
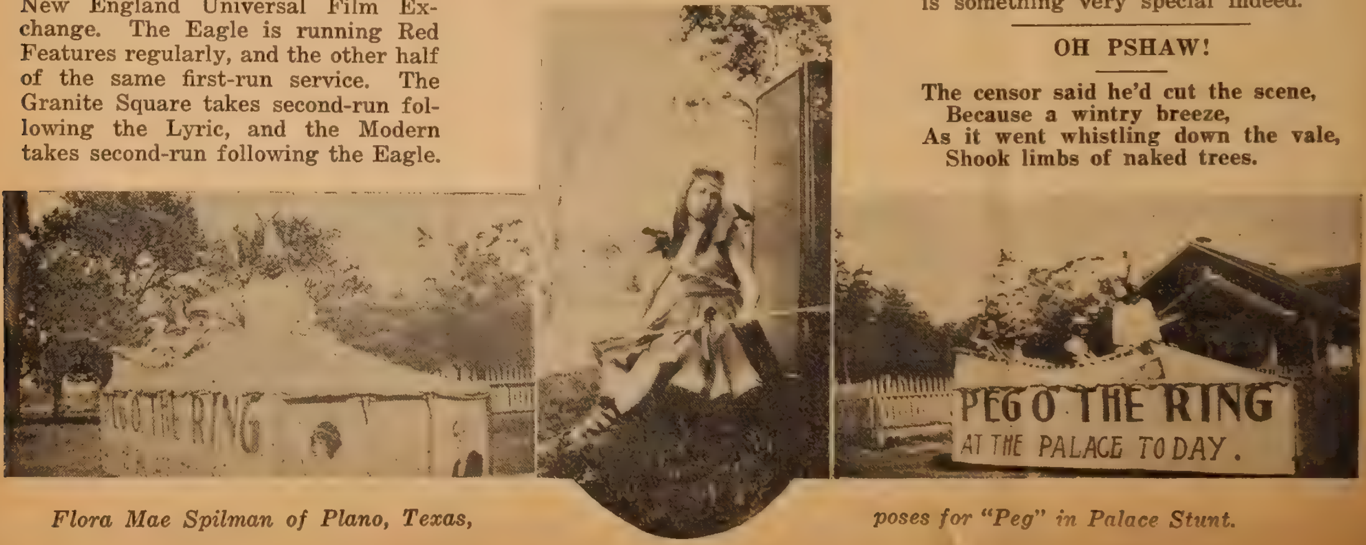
Shook limbs of naked trees.



Flora Mae Spilman of Plano, Texas, poses for "Peg" in Palace Stunt.

Back in the Warren residence, Mrs. Warren, in an evening dress, is admiring herself in front of the mirror. Next we see her in a night dress as she is about to go to bed. Warren opens the front door of his house with a key and enters the bedroom of his wife, who, taking him for the doctor, rushes up to him and puts her arms around his neck. Warren holds her in his embrace for a few seconds before removing his false moustache. On recognizing her husband, Mrs. Warren screams with terror and the scream is heard by the maid in the dining-room. We see Warren with his fingers at his wife's throat, glaring at her threateningly. The maid looks through the key-hole of the dining-room door, and sees Warren come out of the bedroom. Immediately afterwards, we see Warren leaving the house and passing into the street. The maid goes into the bedroom, where she finds Mrs. Warren stretched out dead on the floor. She recoils in horror and telephones to the police station.

Warren deliberately returns to the doctor's house which he again enters through the library window, and, after replacing the coat and cap, he goes out the same way he entered.

Meanwhile, a detective accompanied by policemen, arrive at Warren's house. The detective picks up the doctor's gloves that Warren has purposely left behind him, and the maid declares that they belong to Dr. Carl, being positive that it was he who killed her mistress.

Warren returns to the room across the street and gloats over his revenge. Dr. Carl is tried for the murder of Mrs. Warren and is pronounced "guilty" on the maid's testimony. During the trial we see Warren sitting in the court-room and smiling with satisfaction after the verdict, as the doctor is being led off to prison.

The picture now fades into the next scene where we see King Baggot seated with a manuscript in his hand. Seated alongside of him is his director, Henry Otto, also holding a manuscript. Mr. Baggot tells his director that he thinks the story he has just read from the manuscript will make a wonderful photoplay, and the company seated about them, are equally enthusiastic.

Mr. Otto agrees with them and says: "I am glad you like it, Mr. Baggot; I will have you play the part of the husband as well as the doctor."

pick it up, Foo-Shai pulls an extra card from his sleeve, and claims the pool.

Outside, Ming-Ti still waits for her lover. Slowly Demarest rises—he staggers out to the street from the side door—but something halts him. Slowly Foo-Shai gathers in his winnings and steps to the curtains. There stands Ming-Ti. She turns to great her lover, and sees Foo-Shai. With a scream she backs away, fascinated by his stare. Back to the opium den Foo-Shai follows her slowly, into the Joss House beyond. There before the great Joss she flings herself in an agony of supplication. But Buddha is unmoved. Ming-Ti feels the hand of her pursuer. The next moment Chang hurls himself upon Foo-Shai, only to be knocked senseless to the floor. Outside Demarest hears the cry, and rushes back into the Fan-Tan room, but Foo-Shai and Ming-Ti are gone.

Foo-Shai lifts Ming-Ti in his arms, and as she feels his hot breath on her cheek, loses consciousness. A few feet away, a little black figure drags itself painfully toward where the knife lies where Foo-Shai knocked it from his grasp. Then as the huge Chinaman turns with his burden, Chang plunges the knife hilt deep into Foo-Shai's back. Dropping the girl, Foo-Shai staggers back, and tears open the trap door. He and Chang struggle toward it. In the den, Demarest hears the struggle. He rushes in just as they disappear.

A few moments later, Ming-Ti regains consciousness. In terror she shrieks: "Where is Foo-Shai?" Then as Demarest tells her he is gone she says: "Ah, the great spirit who sent him to take me from China has taken him now." And when told that Chang is gone, too, she sobs pitifully for her ever-trustful and loyal friend. Then, silently she sinks at the foot of the great Joss, holding up her hands in heartfelt gratitude. Below, in the swirling river, two bodies, locked in a death-grip, are dashed against the sewerage grating, and then drawn down into the inky depths. Gently Demarest raises Ming-Ti. Nothing separates them now. Together they slip out into the night that will presently dawn into their endless day.

which the American troops have played a part. The Animated has lived up to its great reputation while under their charge, and they have sent home wonderful views of the events in the troubled country. Now they are going back.

Before leaving for Chihuahua, Gilbert arranged with his mother to send her postcards in cipher, which would let her know of his movements without danger of betraying any information. Cards bearing this important news came almost daily to the character actress from her boy. But, alas! "Mother" Warrenton mislaid her cipher code and consequently all the precious communications were Greek to her until Gilbert returned. It was really almost exasperating enough to drive one to tears, only that Mrs. Warrenton does not believe in tears. She has one of those sunny dispositions which never become so absorbed in their own troubles that they cannot spare a kind word and a helpful deed for any one else who may need them. Perhaps her habit of ignoring her troubles and rising superior to them is the secret of her "perpetual youth," for the fact is that she is just as keen about her work, just as tickled over her popularity, and, what is more, just as ready to take a dangerous chance in a picture as any 18-year-old debutante in the picture game.

"THE JANITOR" WINS YEAR'S CONTRACT FOR BEERY.

mo" is also an ardent motorist. The cut shows him in his new Mercer racing car, which he drives himself at a terrific clip. He entered the car, with himself at the wheel, in the Memorial Day races at Ascot Park, Los Angeles; for here was another opportunity to play with death, and that is the game which this young man apparently enjoys above all others. He was a dangerous contender for first place until the fifth lap, when one of his tires blew up with a bang and the delay of repairing it put him out of the race. The trophy was offered for the occasion by Barney Oldfield and was competed for by a large field. Universal comedies and comedians were not entirely left out of the honors of the day, for the L-Ko, with Wake Walter, had the distinction of winning the five-mile motorcycle race.

Beery is such a fast worker that he is constantly getting ahead of his sets, which are always heavy in the "Timothy Dobbs" series. While waiting for No. 5 he took a company to the beach near Universal City and finished in one day "The Janitor's Vacation," with Peggy Coudray and Gertrude Astor, the latter a well known swimmer who appeared in "Undine."

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, June, 1916.—Many rumors are afloat in this city concerning the release of two big pictures by the Canadian Universal Film Company or other parties interested. "The Dumb Girl of Portici" and "Where Are My Children?" are the two films in question, and it is known that the former has already been privately screened and passed by the Ontaria and Quebec Censor Boards. The later picture has not yet been presented to the boards. "The Dumb Girl of Portici" would command some exceptionally big bookings and prices in Ontario, owing to the popularity of Madame Pavlowa in Toronto, where she appeared during the winter opera season. The Universal company, while not giving any definte information, state that they already have received several inquiries from theatre men, who have noticed the small publicity the matter has received so far.

MONTREAL, P. Q., June, 1916.—According to the film editor of the Montreal Star, he has arrived at the conclusion that Montreal does not want the best theatrical productions, whether they be legitimate stage plays, French productions or motion picture feature films. The lamentable failure of everything good that has come to Montreal in the past season, including the "Birth of a Nation," is the basis for this editor's remarks, which are very logically expressed, although one is loath to accept them as final, for the good of the entire theatrical world.

ST. JOHN, N. B., June, 1916.—Mayor Hayes of this city brought up in Council meeting a suggestion or motion to tax motion picture theatres and others at the rate of 30 cents a seat up to the first thousand seats, and then 15 cents per seat per annum in excess of that number. According to this schedule, the tax on the various local theatres would be as follows: Star, $120; Palace, $75; Empress, $120; Gem, $240; Lyric, $235; Unique, $195; Opera House, $330; Imperial, $412.50, or a total revenue to the city of $1,717.50, as against the present $1,400. There were two cases of small decreases, but the mayor suggested that for the present year the $200 license for dramatic purposes be waived for at least this year. The new schedule was adopted. It was also pointed out by the committeemen that some minor improvements in safety regulations would also have to be carried out in some of the theatres.

GODERICH, Ont., June, 1916.—It is learned on good authority that Mr. Wetmore of the Model Theatre of this city intends selling out his interest in the playhouse and seeking another sphere of action. It is believed that Mr. Wetmore's health is the principal reason for this change.

CAMP BORDEN, Ont., June, 1916.—Among the great army of Canadian volunteer soldiers gathered at this point, three Canadian movie men are very prominent. These are Ltd. Jim Stubely, formerly manager of the Princess Theatre, Orillia.; Ltd. Bill Duncan, for many years in charge of the Model Theatre of Midland, Ont., and one of the well known Duncan Bros. Also Pte. Charlie Beattie, formerly of Barrie, Ont. These three men are just representatives of the many hundreds of movie men, who have volunteered to go overseas since the first drafting of troops began in Canada.

TORONTO, Ont., June, 1916.—The amusement tax has not decreased the attendance at moving picture theatres as far as can be ascertained by J. T. White, solicitor to the treasurer. It was said in some quarters before the tax went into effect that some of the smaller theatres which charge five cents for admission would be forced to close up on account of the tax. So far from this being the case, Mr. White states that one of the large five-cent houses has reported to him that the attendance since the tax has been even larger than before. It is probable that some of the houses will have to close up, but other houses causes that the tax will be accountable. For instance, the recruiting has reduced the population of Toronto by at least 60,000. Then to the attendance at picture theatres is bound to fall off about this time of the year.

NEW ENGLAND NOTES

By H. J. SHEPARD.

BOSTON, Mass.—After playing all over the New England territory several times "Annette Kellerman" will have a week's run in the Park Theatre, Washington Street, Boston, beginning Monday, June 19.

L. P. GORMAN, formerly manager of the Stanley Theatre, New York, is now connected with Bluebird Photo Plays as special representative covering Vermont and New Hampshire territory, and has become quite a favorite with exhibitors in this section. He has been voted as being the best 133 pound film salesman working out of any Boston exchange.

JIM DONOVAN, who has been connected with the New England Universal Film Exchange for several years, has been assigned to the Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut territory and has started out for summer business with a scalping knife, tomahawk and with blood in his eyes. Among the remains of the first week's campaign were several General and Mutual Film Company's accounts.

BLUEBIRD is becoming a household name in the different localities of this territory. The following are some of the large houses that have booked Bluebirds in Boston recently: Loew's St. James Theatre, Globe Theatre, Park Theatre, Keith's Bijou, Exeter Street Theatre, Olympia Theatre, Allstone; also Poli's Theatre, Worcester, Mass.; Plaza Theatre, Worcester, Mass.; Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I., and they are still coming. Bluebird exhibitors claim they are the best box office attraction in their houses.

THE New England Universal Film Exchange has established a Social Welfare Department in charge of Sam Steinfeldt. Through this department the various social and welfare organizations and churches will be supplied with a certain type of program that will be especially suited for their affairs. This is a step in advance towards devising a method by which special films can take care of the wants of these various organizations.

THE Park Theatre, Boston, will run Tyrone Power in "The Eye of God" entire week of July 17.

KANSAS CITY NEWS.

By GEO. H. BOWLES.

FROM the interest that has been aroused by the formation of a temporary organization for a Kansas City screen club, the new organization is going to prove one of the most formidible of the country. Charles Hardin, temporary secretary, is receiving a number of letters from out-of-town exhibitors who want to know more about the screen club with the idea of becoming members. The plan to open downtown quarters is proving particularly attractive to them, as it will give them a headquarters when in Kansas City and also an opportunity to get ideas from other exhibitors.

Just what kind of formal bow the screen club will make to the public will be decided upon soon. It is probable that something more than a big movie ball will be staged. The organization will be named as soon as the club is permanently formed.

JOE SILVERMAN, owner of the Murray Theater, Kansas City, Mo., was a long time in deciding to run "The Adventures of Peg O' the Ring." Finally he "kicked through," however, and last week he showed the first episode. The picture brought 1,400 patrons to his theater at ten cents.

WHAT is probably the high water mark for gross receipts in one day in a town of 400, was made recently by G. F. Clarke, of the Opera House at Belpre, Kans. Mr. Clarke showed "the Williamson Submarine Expedition" for a gross of $156.75. The picture cost him $15. In a letter to the Universal exchange, Mr. Clarke says the Universal's fine publicity department assisted him in advertising the picture.

ARTHUR FORD, of the Marple Theater, Wichita, Kans., was a visitor at the Universal last week and reports that he has been doing capacity business almost every day of the week. Mr. Ford runs regular Universal service and "Peg O' the Ring." He opens at 10 o'clock in the morning and says that on "Peg" days—for he runs the serial two days—from one hundred and fifty to two hundred patrons await the opening.

THE Kansas City exchange of Bluebird Photo-Plays, Inc., is now enjoying an honor no other feature company in Kansas City has enjoyed—a first and second run on Twelfth Street, Kansas City. The Maze Theatre, one of the largest downtown houses, recently took over first run of Bluebirds, the pictures proved so excellent that Wonderland Theatre contracted for a second run.

IT is evident, from a letter from Harry K. Rogers, of the Auditorium Theater, Marion, Kans., that Kansas floods can't stop movie patrons from seeing a serial picture that interests them:

"Marion has been under water four times in the last two weeks and consequently business has been rotten, except on 'The Adventures of Peg O' the Ring,' and that brings them anyway.

THE help to newspapers running movie columns The Universal Weekly, the small motion picture newspaper published by the Kansas City Universal exchange, is shown by a letter received by the publicity department of the exchange from George B. Newland, dramatic editor of the Cincinnati Post, Cincinnati, O. The letter follows:

"I should be interested in seeing your Universal Weekly, which seems to have created at lot of favorable comment. We are always in line for new ideas in our movie department on The Post. It might be a good idea to put me on your exchange list."

THE new novelty designed by the Universal publicity department, mounted folder photographs of the Universal stars to be used by exhibitors as souvenirs, is proving unusually popular, not only with the exhibitor, but with his patrons.

Exhibitors Using the Entire UNIVERSAL Program---receive the $250,000 DORSEY TRAVEL PICTURES without one cent of cost

The advantage of being an Exhibitor of the Universal Program is again shown by the release on the Universal Program, as a part of the regular Universal Service, of the celebrated Dorsey Expedition Pictures.

Dr. Dorsey, who is Curator of the world famous Field Museum of Chicago, is perhaps the most travelled man in the world. This expedition, which cost $250,000, resulted in the filming of new and strange parts of the world and their queer inhabitants.

The various parts of the Dorsey Expedition pictures take your audiences through little known regions of China, Japan, Burmah, India, Ceylon, Australasia, off the beaten path of travel. The pictures are fascinating and great crowd-getters for any Exhibitor. You can arrange with educational bodies, clubs and societies for special nights or showings of these wonderful pictures and make a nice clean-up every week. Write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

WHILE the response to our request for advertising suggestions, made last week, has brought in a number of replies, there seems to be a timidity on the part of Exhibitors to "speak up in meeting."

We know that there are lots of live Exhibitors who are putting over clever stunts every week, and we ask them to send in accounts of them to this Department. This page is run for the benefit of all Exhibitors, and for every suggestion you send in there will be several printed every week that will be new to you. A little co-operation all around will do wonders for some of the brethren who are hoeing a stiff row of competition. All that are of general interest will be printed and illustrated whenever possible.

ON the Universal Program for the week of July 17 are some splendid two-reel features which can be exploited in a novel manner that should prove very profitable. The first on the list is the popular comedian, Pat Rooney, in a screaming comedy, "The Belle and the Bell Hop." Released Thursday, July 20.

GET a very short, or tall, or very fat man or boy, and dress him in a bell hop's uniform. Have the trousers very tight, and short, and make up his face in a comical manner. Have a girl or a young boy dressed in a burlesque of the extreme fashion and have them parade the streets with your announcement cards on them, front and back. If your city ordinance permits, have the bell boy carry and ring a large hand bell to attract attention.

"THE CRYSTAL'S WARNING," released July 18, lends itself to a street stunt in a very happy manner. Dress a tall man in Hindu costume. Darken his face to a light chocolate, and add square-trimmed black (small) beard and heavy moustache. Have him wear a bright colored turban. If you can get a solid glass ball, such as is used for crystal gazing, let him carry one. If this cannot be procured, get an ordinary gold fish globe, which will do very well for a substitute. Let him parade the streets, and every hundred feet or so say, "Heed the Crystal's Warning." Placards announcing the play and your theatre name, date, etc., should be prominently displayed on the man's back and chest.

JULY 22 there is a fine picture called "Midwinter Madness," with the ever popular Dorothy Phillips. This does not lend itself to street stunt as well as it does to a lobby decoration. There have been some very fine posters prepared for this play. Get a full set and display them in your lobby. Get some evergreen trees and arrange them from the front sides of the lobby and thence toward the rear of the same. At their base place odd size packing boxes and cover them with cotton batting. Sprinkle powdered glass or other glittery stuff over the cotton and hang out a special banner with a border of evergreen. It will make your house a most attractive place on a hot day.

In the Week of July 10.

ON Saturday, July 15, "The Human Pendulum," a three-reel Bison railroad drama, will be released. This contains an extraordinarily novel rescue scene, which suggests an equally novel method of advertising the picture. Marie Walcamp, Lee Hill and another actor hang in a human chain, of which the girl is the last link, over the edge of a precipice, until she is drawn up to safety by their combined efforts. Imagine the effect of duplicating this scene, with three life-sized, human-looking dummies, suspended in mid-air right on the front of the theatre running the picture. They might hang from a window, or from the cornice of the building, and they would be certain to arouse a lot of curiosity to see the stunt itself on the screen. The more life-like the dummies can be made, the more effective the thing will be.

"THE CRIMSON YOKE" is a story of slavery, in which a woman is mercilessly dragged at the tail of a wagon along a dusty road. Cleo Madison, the intrepid, performs the feat in the picture. The police would interfere if you attempted to reproduce the scene with a real woman, but it would be mighty effective carried out with a convincingly realistic dummy, dragged along on its face by a real wagon, with a real slave owner inside, made up in the traditional manner, with white clothes, sombreros, heavy whip and villainous moustaches. The wagon would carry placards advertising the feature and the theatre at which it was to be seen.

PERMIT us to repeat your request for advertising suggestions. Every one will profit by them. Address the Editor, "Putting It Over," Moving Picture Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York.

THE WISE MAN.

By M. F. T. and M. H. D.

There was a man in our town,
And he was wondrous wise,
He hopped into a movie show,
Which opened both his eyes.

When his eyes were opened,
To the pictures therein shown
Said he: "The UNIVERSAL
Can claim me for its own.

Its pictures are so daring,
Attractive and sublime,
They make you think of poetry
And apple blossom time.

I used to dote on vaudeville,
But it's Big U now for mine.
Their actresses are classy,
And make a fellow pine.

For the screen's an aggravation
When a pretty woman smiles,
And you can't get any nearer
If you travel miles and miles.

Now, when you mention actors,
Universal's got 'em beat,
They simply set your head awhirl
And take you off your feet.

For there's some front row talent
And looks by Venus imbued,
And stories that keep you guessing,
Delighted, excited, subdued.

But what's the use of talking ,
That's neither here nor there.
Watch out for Universal,
You'll find it everywhere.

And once, old man, you find it,
Just hang to it like glue,
For it'll give you satisfaction,
Whether you're glad or blue.

ADVANCE NOTICES

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

Flora Parker De Haven in "The Seekers." Twenty-fifth Red Feather Production. Directed by Otis Turner. Released July 17. Nothing adds more to a human interest drama, such as is "The Seekers," than a quaint setting, a portrayal of customs and manners out of the ordinary. The "Seekers" are members of a religious sect, and the prettiest human flower of the lot is Flora. Devoted to charitable works, she becomes a nurse in the home of a preacher, one of the leaders of the community. Her brother, convicted and sentenced to prison for a crime of which he was innocent, is destined to play a large share in her life. The son of the minister is the local sheriff and madly in love with Flora. You can readily see the complications which logically ensue from even this brief statement; but if you want your audiences to enjoy a fine play, with splendid acting, book this Red Feather and be glad that the mighty Universal stands between you and those feature producers who would have charged you a prohibitive price for this strong picture if they had the facilities to produce it.

Hobart Henley in "The Crystal's Warning." With Sydell Dowling, Clara Beyers and Sydney Bracey. Two-Reel Gold Seal Vampire Drama. Directed by Robert F. Hill. Released July 18. Whether you believe in the gentle art of crystal gazing or not, you will surely be impressed with this strong drama, which has to do with Hobart, in the diplomatic service; an Indian prince; his brother who is seeking to recover a jewel known as "the sacred eye;" Hobart's wife,, and a woman who, finding her charms have no attraction for Hobart, whom she loves, gives her life to save his. A story full of strong and surprising situations, played by a company of unusual strength.

Pat Rooney in "The Belle and the Bell Hop." Two-Reel Victor Farcical Comedy. Released July 20. Pat Rooney has made the whole world laugh at his comical antics on the speaking stage, and on the screen his unique methods seem to be even more effective. In this screaming comedy we see Pat as a bell hop; he is in love with the girl at the cigar counter. What he doesn't do to extract fun out of the hotel lobby and its habitues isn't worth extracting. Pat is supported by a notable company, including Adele Farrington, Ed. Sedgwick, Marc Fenton, Jay Belasco, Hayward Mack and others. These widely experienced people help Pat to make more fun than you ordinarily see in a dozen reels of comedy. And the story was written by Chas. E. Van Loan. 'Nuff said.

"Midwinter Madness." With Dorothy Phillips and Stanley Walpole. Two-Reel 101-Bison Snow Picture. Directed by Winthrop Kelly. A strong story, swift action, and most beautiful photography make this picture distinctly out of the ordinary. It is a tale of the French-Canadian Northland, sympathetically portrayed by an exceptionally good company of players. Dorothy, the neglected wife of Stanley, is tempted by a former sweetheart, and is saved from ruining her life by a climax that is dramatic in the extreme. A fine picture that will please your audience and add to the reputation of your house.

BIG!

Not only BIG, but the BIGGEST series of comedies ever produced will shortly be released by the Universal—a series of comedies so original, so clever and so unique that they mark a long step in advance of anything heretofore shown in moving picture comedies.

Carter De Haven

Whose name is magic on the speaking stage; who has won additional honors on the screen; one of the most popular comedians of the day, is to appear in a series of comedies portraying the rise to fame of an aspirant for "movie" honors. His fresh, spontaneous methods give these pictures a charm that will create a huge demand for them the moment the first one is shown.

Directed by Wallace Beery

Staged with all the wealth of the mighty Universal facilities to draw upon, the new series, title soon to be announced, will make the widest appeal possible to any picture of any kind. You will do well to get full particulars at the earliest possible moment. Write your nearest Universal Exchange today, and make reservation for the "Carter De Haven Comedies" before your competitor beats you to it.

COMICAL CARTER'S CLEVER COMEDIES

CARTER DE HAVEN—The Inimitable—is working in a series of brilliant comedies, soon to be released by the Universal, that are so clean, wholesome and different—so far ahead of the cheap, the vulgar and the suggestive comedies so widely advertised, as to be a genuine revelation.

Great comedy acting; screamingly funny, intensely human situations; lavish production and brilliant supporting cast give to the entire series a distinction never before attained in film comedies. Beat your competitor to it. Wire your nearest Universal Exchange NOW for full information.

HUGHES ENJOYS CLASS REUNION.

ONE of the principal scenes in the Universal Animated Weekly, No. 27, is a comprehensive picture covering the reunion of the class of 1881 at Brown. This class happens to be that in which Presidential Candidate Charles E. Hughes graduated, and for that reason an unusual amount of eclat took place at Providence during this commencement. The celebration began with a reunion at the home of Benjamin Parker, Tiberton, R. I., then follows the meeting of the classmates, views of the grounds, a glimpse of the Rhode Island Clam Bake, a panorama picture of the entire class, and a close-up picture of the governor. This close-up incidentally was taken with a telephoto lens, as none of the cameramen were allowed on the ground, and H. A. Burnam, the Animated representative in Providence, was the only one who received special permission to film this spectacle in its entirety. He also obtained a picture of the procession, and the procession stopped long enough for him to get an excellent close-up picture of Candidate Hughes, with an unusually genial smile on his countenance. The balance of the views are taken up with the pranks and stunts of the student body on Commencement Day.

WILSON IN FIGHTING MOOD.

ANOTHER popular candidate for the next presidential race, President Wilson, is also shown in this week's Weekly in a fighting mood, when he told the Associated Advertising Club of the World his views on the Mexican situation. Ten thousand persons crowded into Independence Square to hear from the President's own lips an utterance of the views for which the entire country is waiting. The Animated Weekly will be especially favored in that they can get an even closer glimpse than ninety-nine out of one hundred of those who actually heard his voice, for Cameraman Bill Ganz set his tripod up very close to the President, and obtained pictures of the President in fighting mood, which are unusually virulent.

LATEST WAR NEWS IN ANIMATED WEEKLY.

PREPAREDNESS just now is the watchword of the Universal Animated Weekly, and it has to be with the war news crowding so fast from every quarter. It is able to present this week a striking variety of background for its war scenes. Pictures taken across the border show the care of the cavalry horses which play such a tremendous part in the army's plan for preparedness, and for an invasion of Mexico, if this becomes necessary. The Texas rangers are shown in all of their leath eagerness to be at the enemy. These men have gained the soubriquet of Nemesis as far as the Mexicans are concerned. Their main job has been to protect the border, and to punish swiftly any violation of it by Mexican forces. In this connection Carranza's soldiers volunteering for service in Mexico are also shown going to the front.

The Universal camera also caught scenes in New York, where bayonets had to keep eager spectators away from the field kitchens, which were erected in the streets, and also had to keep the inquisitive crowds back from recruiting stations in order that the work might go forward.

There is a review by Governor Whitman, scenes when the boys entrained, and then when they reached Camp Whitman at Beekman, New York. Cameraman Double M. Flanders, who last week went to Camp Whitman with the editor's camera under the name of Double M. Fleming, has given us fair warning that his name is Flanders, and inasmuch as he has acquired some of the martial spirit of the camp, we hasten to correct the impression created by our last week's reference to him.

Company B. of Signal Corps of Oakland, California, entrained for the state capital there to take an oath of federal allegiance in one of the most exciting scenes which ever took place in the "undefended city of Oakland," and at various state capitals and at cities from which troops are going forward constantly the same scenes are crowding in upon Jack Cohn, editor of the Animated Weekly. Most of them find a place in the Weekly, even though they have to be short flashes, for it is the boast of the Animated that it covers the entire United States.

Other scenes shown are those taken at Saturday's carnival given by the Police Department at Sheepshead Bay, and the fire in the munition plant at Bloomfield when the cameraman beat the fire-fighting apparatus, and characteristic cartoons by Hy. Mayer, the world famous.

"THE LOVE GIRL"

CAST

Ambrosia	Ella Hall
Her Aunt	Adele Farrington
Her Cousin	Betty Schade
The Boy Next Door	Harry Depp
Betty's Sweetheart	Kingsley Benedict
The Maid	Grace Marvin

EVERYONE is of the opinion that Robert Leonard has struck twelve again in his latest Bluebird photoplay, "The Love Girl," in which Ella Hall has the stellar role. The "best interpreter of child's parts," as the little lady has been called, has never had a better opportunity for the display of her dainty art than in the present Bluebird photoplay. Neither she, nor Harry Depp, who plays the part of the rich little boy next door, would be considered "children" when they are not acting for the cameras, but it is almost impossible to believe that they are "grown up" when you see them in this play. It is not alone in make-up that they succeed in giving the impression of childhood, but in every action and every change of facial expression as well, a matter far more difficult.

This photo-drama also carries with it the merit of novelty and originality in plot. The pivotal incident hinged on Hindu mystics, which have not been exploited on the screen. The "Swami" is a character new to the films, and the manner in which he is foiled by two children is also most unusual. A little motor car plays an important role in the plot. The rich boy teaches "Ambrosia," the little girl, to run it, and when the time comes she proves an expert pupil. These scenes were made in the streets of Los Angeles, all among the traffic. Special permission had to be obtained from the police to allow them to be taken during the crowded hours of the day. The authorities participated in the chase with fast motorcycles, and when they gave permission to Director Leonard they had very little idea that Miss Hall was such a reckless chauffeur as she proved to be. When she "cut loose" in the toy machine, it was necessary for Leonard to signal her to slow down, so that the police on their motorcycles could come within camera range of the flying girl. It will probably be some time before they give her leave to use the streets of Los Angeles for such a display of speed again.

Ambrosia gives Betty courage to answer.

An outline of the story is as follows:

Ambrosia, a happy little girl, and her invalid mother live together. Ambrosia is a sweet little child, loved by all that know her, and inclined to be a "little mother" to all the children in the neighborhood. Ambrosia's mother has long been suffering from an incurable disease, and her one joy in life is the presence of the little daughter. The mother at last gives up the fight, and Ambrosia is sent to the home of a rich aunt in the city. The child finds her new abiding place quite a contrast to the modest home of her mother.

In her new home, surrounded by every conceivable luxury, she misses most of all the love to which she had been accustomed. Ambrosia christened her aunt with the title "Aunt Grouchy." She is assigned to a room, and ordered to remain there until she is properly attired in order to keep up the reputation of the house.

Her efforts to be friendly and display some of her little mementoes she had brought from home meet with the cold rebuke of her aunt. Left alone in the room, the child becomes very lonely; and in looking out the window disconsolately, she notices some ducks on a pond nearby. The childish desire for companionship causes her to slip out of the window, by aid of a bedsheet, and enjoys her liberty playing near the duck pond.

Next door there lives a rich boy. He is wandering about and sees Ambrosia. He goes to her, and the two introduce each other. He tells her his name is George, and he lives next door. She tells him that her name is Ambrosia, and she lives with her Aunt Grouchy." The boy is amused, both by Ambrosia's name and her quaint ways, and the two becomes quite good friends before the maid arrives and takes Ambrosia back.

Ambrosia's cousin, Betty, is in love with a poor young man whose attention "Aunt Grouchy" discourages by every means, desiring that her daughter shall make a more advantageous marriage. "Aunt Grouchy" has affected the "cult" habit and is deeply interested in the mysteries of East Indian faddism. She seeks the advice of the "Swami," who promises to cast a "spell" over the daughter and cause her to renounce the poor young man.

By practicing the art of hypnotism the "Swami" gains control of the girl, and succeeds in having her kidnapped and held for ransom, using his influence with "Aunt Grouchy" to induce the payment of a large sum of money as a tribute to the Hindu gods. Betty is detained in the den of the "Swami" gang, and her discovery is due entirely to Ambrosia and her boy friend.

George owns a speedy motor car and teaches Ambrosia how to run it. While they are out riding one day, the children discover the "Swami" going to his headquarters. Their suspicions are aroused, and through information given to the police the den is raided and Betty is released at a critical moment. Meanwhile the "Swami" is at the home of "Aunt Grouchy" collecting the ransom, but when Secret Service officers appear upon the scene the "Swami" is exposed as a swindler.

Convinced that she has been too severe and unsympathetic with both her own daughter and Ambrosia, "Aunt Grouchy" sanctions Betty's marriage to the poor young man, and Ambrosia and George are happy as hero and heroine of the pleasant denouement.

"PAT ROONEY, 4TH OF JULY BABY."

AL Levy, who operates a cafe in Los Angeles, where the motion picture people congregate, also owns an establishment at the suburban town of Watts. Knowing that Pat Rooney, star of "The Belle and the Bell Hop," was born on July 4, like his fellow comedians, George Cohan and Bernard Granville, the farsighted Levy decided to make Fourth of July "Pat Rooney day" at Watts.

The comedian also declares that he will in turn honor of the host by giving him a real performance. In fact, Pat declares he is going to have it a real birthday party, and is making his plans accordingly.

The Weekly ordered a story by wire, but apparently the celebration was too enthusiastic for the wire. We will try to run it next week.

Ambrosia is "suitably attired" at last.

PRETTY ACTRESS HAS MISHAP.

ONE of the pretty young actresses of Universal City is Violet Schram, and recently she played one of the roles in Allen Curtis' comedy, "The Harem Scarem Deacon."

A bathing pool was used in the set, and at the lunch hour, as Miss Schram was passing off the set, her foot caught on a piece of carpet, and the lady of the harem plunged headlong into the water. She was dragged out, and a new costume was provided for the afternoon's work.

LYON-MORAN NEW COMEDY.

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran have commenced their second comedy production since their return to Universal City from New York, and they declare it is going to be a real laugh-maker.

The story is by Ben Cohn, and entitled "The Bunglers," and shows how the two men get into serious mix-ups while attempting to rob a house. They are making melodrama a comedy, and with lots of action.

MAGISTRATE ALEXANDER H. GEISMAR, of the Brooklyn Magistrates' Court, witnessed a private exhibition of "Where Are My Children?" on Thursday, June 22nd, and, finding that there was nothing indecent or immoral in the picture as alleged in the suit which District Attorney Harry E. Lewis, of Kings County, had brought, abruptly terminated the suit against the Universal. The dismissal of the suit was a sweeping triumph for the Universal.

A week ago summonses were issued by Magistrate Reynolds in the Flatbush Police Court for Harry Gainsborg, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, and Robert Robinson, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Brooklyn, where the picture was exhibited last week.

These summonses were returnable Wednesday, and the cases came up before Magistrate Geismar. The Universal Film Company was represented by Sigfried Hartman, of the firm of Stanchfield & Levy. Meier Steinbrink appeared for Manager Robinson, and District Attorney Lewis for the prosecution.

The district attorney urged that the picture cast an evil influence. Magistrate Geismar, who witnessed a private exhibition of the picture the day previous, dismissed the complaint with a long opinion, declaring that the picture had a good moral effect.

Reverend Dr. Alexander Lyons, Rabbi, of one of the largest congregations, in Brooklyn, was here invited by Magistrate Geismar to give his opinion regarding the photoplay, Dr. Lyons said in part:

"I would say, your honor," he said, "that there is scarcely anything that cannot be interpreted one way or the other. The opinion I would give you is the result of my careful thought which has become shaped into a conviction. It has been guided in part by opinions of the photoplay which I have sought from others who did not know my object in asking those opinions. I would acknowledge that this play can, by some minds, be construed antagonistically—which I would not take to be necessarily against the play—because I already premised that everything is open to a dual construction; but I would say, with regard to this particular play, after very careful consideration—for I saw it not only once but one and a half times, because when I entered the playhouse on Saturday evening scarcely more than one-quarter of it had been presented, and I was so much interested in it I wanted to see it in its entirety and I waited till the close of the performance to see it—and I formed the conviction then, which has strengthened since the more I think of it—that the play is not only, taking it on the whole, not immoral, but it is decidedly moral.

"I judge presentations of that kind from two standpoints. The first is from the standpoint of its purpose, which I understand to be moral, and from the standpoint of the impression it leaves in the mind of one who examines it from the standpoint of a moralist. From this latter standpoint it impressed me as being a very strong play for certain things as against certain other things for which we ministers are always standing. I should consider myself a very fortunate preacher if I could, in fifty or one hundred sermons, preach as effectively as this picture does the certain ideas for which it stands.

"Now among those ideas—and I cite this to indicate to you why I regard it as moral in purport and realization—is its strong protest against abortion, which I, from my observation over a good many years as a minister, consider is a very timely protest. It has been my sad function, again and again, to bury the victims of abortion.

"I hold, among its other virtues, the play to be a strong protest against the unwary easy leading of young girls and the persuasive lures of young men who are typified in this particular picture by the young man who lures to her pregnancy and to her death the young girl who is used in the play to point the moral of the evil of abortion; and I could not but feel that I should like every young woman to see especially that feature of the play. I felt so strongly about it that I sent my own son who is nineteen years old. I don't know just now what his private relations are, but I want to forecast them if I possibly can. I told him last night to go and see this play, especially with that in view. I think it is a necessary warning to young girls against the overtures of young men who are leading them to their certain ruin.

"That is one element of the play. Another, to my mind, is the flippancy of the life of too many young women to-day, who, in the interest of their selfish and low pleasures are avoiding what they call the burdens, but what we ministers would call the privileges of motherhood. I think that is very plainly brought out here. I think, again, that among its other wholesome ideas it indicates the possibilities of the joy of parenthood, as exemplified by the lives of those who come under the observation of the District Attorney, who, I believe, are related to them.

"On the whole I do not regard it so much as a protest against those things that I have intimated as a plea for parenthood. The very last scene, which has been omitted in this abstract here and for which I criticise it as being not entirely correct substantially, presents this District Attorney and his wife at a period in life when they might have had the enjoyment of their children, which they are now without, and a later period of life when they had attained to the years of grand-parenthood when they might have had the joys of the clinging love of grand-children, which they are now without; and although I have seen a great deal of the tears and trying experiences of life and am fairly stolid in presence of them, it was with difficulty that I restrained a tear when I was compelled to face the awful desolation and the tragic pathos of the lives of those two people who were without children through the overpowering selfish pleasureableness of the life of this wife of the District Attorney. So, in all, it seems to me that it ought not only to be not antagonized but it ought to be taken up by our churches as furnishing a means of preaching a sermon far more efficient than I personally can preach, or any minister to my knowledge can personally preach."

The decision of Magistrate Geismar follows:

The general test to be applied in determining whether the exhibition in question violates the statute is definitely and succinctly set forth in the statute itself. It says as contained in the section numbered 1140-a of the Penal Law, omitting all unnecessary verbiage, as follows:

"Any person, who, as owner or agent, gives or participates in any obscene, indecent, immoral or impure exhibition which tend to the corruption of the morals of youth or others, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

The most significant words in this definition are the following:

"It is not a question of whether it would corrupt the morals and tend to deprave your minds or the minds of every person; it is a question whether

THE HEART OF A CHILD is the film version of the best novel of the famous woman writer, Mrs. Frankau, who used the pen-name of "Frank Danby." It is a tale of the "Prince" and the "Beggar-maid," placed in the unusual environment of London coster-life. The costers, with their strange costumes and odd customs, were made known to this country through Albert Chevalier and his songs. The Universal introduced him to the films in a photoplay made from these songs, and called "My Old Dutch," which was a very successful and popular picture. The critics have called the present Red Feather a second "My Old Dutch," but the story has charms of its own to recommend it as well. One of them is the remarkable dancing and the convincing acting of the heroine, played by Miss Edna Flugrath, an American actress who has made a career abroad. Supported by a splendid cast, her work in the photoplay is thoroughly satisfactory. A synopsis of the story runs as follows:

Sally Snape is a child of the slums. Her dancing is the delight of the neighbors. The girl is thrown early on her own resources, for her mother is killed by the drunken brute of a husband, the miserable home is sold up, and Sally would have been without a roof except that a good-natured coster-lad, Johnny Doone, befriended her. Johnny, whose attempts at love-making are fiercely repulsed by Sally, finds a sweetheart, Mary, and luckily the two girls like each other and make friends.

Mary gets Sally a job at a jam factory, and here the girl meets the amorous Mr. Peastone. On bank holiday, Johnny Doone takes Mary and Sally to 'Appy 'Amstead. Mr. Peastone, who drives up in state, gorgeously arrayed, comes upon the happy party and Johnny and Mary, having stolen away for a little coster love-making, Mr. Peastone induces Sally to come and look at his trap. The girl is delighted with the pony, and accepts Peastone's offer to drive her home. But on the way the young man becomes enterprising and Sally is struggling in his unwelcome embrace when the trap is overturned by a recklessly-driven motor car.

In the car are Lady Dorothea Lytham and her cousin Gilbert, Lord Kidderminster. The lady has had a desire to view the plebian festival, and has insisted on driving herself, to the dismay of poor Gilbert. Hence the collision.

But the accident has its advantages for Sally. Gilbert insists on something being done for the little girl whom they have injured. And so it comes about that after leaving the hospital Sally is taken under the wing of Joe Aarons, a good-natured variety agent, who finds out that she has "personality" and gives her a trial at the "Grecian," a typical East End music hall.

Sally quickly becomes a musical comedy star, and takes a West End audience by storm. But success still leaves her with "the heart of a child."

On the night of Sally's triumph, after leaving her at the door of the flat he has had furnished for her, Gilbert enters with a second latchkey, of whose existence Sally is all unwitting, to take his reward. But here again the pure child-heart conquers. He is repulsed and leaves contrite, throwing away the key into the road.

Next morning he asks Sally to be his wife, and the girl's greatest ordeal has to be faced, for Gilbert's parents, Lord and Lady Fortive, are stately representatives of the old school.

Sally, who has been given the option of going to Johnny Doone's wedding, as promised, or giving up Gilbert, defies him, chooses the former, and hurriedly leaves. Lord Fortive, unobserved, witnesses what happens, upbraids his son for letting Sally go, orders his car, and father and son hurry to Johnny's wedding.

The wedding party, which includes a very dejected Sally, is awed by the arrival of the Marquis and Gilbert, but Lord Fortive restores their gaiety by drinking the health of the blushing Mary. Then he proposes another toast: "To the future Lady Kidderminster!"

Sally bunks in with the Doones.

RED Feather Production by the Famous novelist, Frank Danby, featuring Edna Flugrath and a strong cast in a heart-stirring story of contrast between Coster and London social and theatrical life. Another "My Old Dutch"

Gilbert visits Sally in hospital.

DANCING plays a large part in the leading role in the Red Feather production, "The Heart of a Child," which is a film version of the famous novel of the same name. The Universal is fortunate in having secured the services of a real dancer for the stellar part. Miss Edna Flugarth has danced all her life. When she was a tiny child she was sent to dancing school by her mother, who believed in girls being given proper training for the body as well as for the mind. She took to the art like the proverbial duck to water, and made such progress in it that at the age of sixteen she was one of the premiere danseuses at the Meropolitan Opera House in New York. She has kept up her dancing ever since, and has played a number of roles on the legitimate stage of which the beautiful art was a feature.

Miss Flugrath was brought up by "the two most sensible persons in the world," as she calls her father and mother. Her father was engaged in business, but he was never too busy to remember the training of his three pretty daughters. At one time he had been physical director of a gymnasium, and he knew the benefit of strong and healthy muscles. So everything that a boy could do his girls were required to do, and even to go the boys one better. From their father's belief in gymnastics, and their mother's faith in dancing, has come a stage and motion picture career for all three of the sisters. Edna is the only one who retains the family name. Viola has taken the surname "Dana," and Leonie is called "Dalton."

The three girls were constant companions and did everything together. Their father would not allow them to have any pets, as he thought that three daughters furnished excitement enough for any family. So they had to learn to play with each other. To this healthful upbringing Miss Flugarth attributes all her success in her motion picture career. Though usually associated with "drawing-room" dramas, she is quite as fearless as any "dare-devil" heroine, and she has just gone to South Africa to play the lead in a feature company, in strenuous pictures which require the veldt and the jungle for a background.

HENRY M'RAE WRECKS TRAIN FOR SANTA FE PRESIDENT

To provide entertainment for William Sproule, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad, his wife, F. S. McGinnis, general passenger agent of the road, Alice Delmar and Marie Baldwin of New York, visitors to Universal City, Director Henry McRae this week staged a train wreck which for realism rivaled the real thing.

Vice-president and General Manager Davis of Universal City was on hand when the big Mogul engine of the latest type and a train of coaches, including observation car, diner, a sleeper and three day coaches and an express car were sent over a bridge which had been purposely weakened. The big engine fell into the bed of the stream with a hiss which sounded as if all the boa constrictors in the holes of hell were let loose. The coaches, the bodies of which, to reveal a film secret, were specially constructed of much lighter material than the ordinary car, collapsed and telescoped with a deafening crash.

Mr. Sproule watched in silence as seven cameramen filmed the wreck from various angles.

"I'll never give you a job on my railroad, McRae," declared Sproule at length. "My division superintendents would seriously object to such wanton waste of rolling stock."

The train wreck staged for the president of the Santa Fe will be incorporated in a forthcoming Universal thriller, "Onda, of the Orient," in which Marie Walcomp will be starred.

CAREY FILMS PICTURE AT NEWHALL.

Harry Carey and his company, including Olive Golden, his leading lady, spent two days in the last week making pictures in the vicinity of Newhall, Col. He took his cowboys and horses to the location at night after a day's work at Universal City.

"Dopey" Jones	Milburn Moranti

The action of this story begins with a meeting of the Anti-Sin League, of which Miss Crobar is leader. The meeting takes place in the village church, and is held for the purpose of receiving a report from a Special Committee, which had been appointed to investigate vice conditions in Chinatown. There is present at this meeting Deacon Stillwaters, who is there for the purpose of lending his moral support and powerful intellect to the cause in which the women are interested. This Special Committee reports that opium is being flagrantly used in Chinatown, but the Committee has no first-hand knowledge of this; so it is decided to send the Deacon into Chinatown to ascertain the real conditions. The Deacon assures the women that they have made a wise choice in selecting him for this dangerous work, and that they can rely on him to make a thorough investigation.

On entering Chinatown, the first person the Deacon encounters is Celeste, a very pretty and ingenuous flower girl. He tells her of his mission and she advises him to give it up. But the Deacon is not the man to be turned from his purpose, simply because it involves an element of danger. Fearing that he will soon come to harm, Celeste volunteers to act as his guide, which suits the Deacon perfectly. But, unfortunately, the Deacon, while trying to follow Celeste through the mazes of Chinatown, falls through a trap and into the quarters of Ching Ling Foo, the most powerful Celestial in Chinatown, and the proprietor of an opium den. The Deacon carries off the mishap in the presence of Ching Ling Foo as if it were an everyday occurence with him; and with his native subtlety, takes the Chinaman into his confidence and tells him of his mission. Ching Ling Foo, being a courteous Chinaman, cheerfully volunteers to let the Deacon in on all the secrets of the place. He assures the Deacon that there is no real harm in opium and induces him to take a smoke to convince him.

The Deacon smokes and drops off into a dream and what a dream! He awakens to find Miss Crobar and her crew around him. The Deacon is disgraced until little Celeste comes to take his part. Then he doesn't care what happens.

Dr. Jones, a busy bone-setter, is consulted by Osgood, one of his patients, who is on the verge of nervous prostration. The doctor tells Osgood that what he needs is relaxation, and offers him two tickets to the Opera, which he accepts with considerable reluctance.

Meanwhile, Michael Clancy, a lead pipe artist, is engaged in fixing pipes in the doctor's cellar. Mary Fagan, who presides over the kitchen in the doctor's household, indulges in a lively flirtation with the muscular plumber, and provides him with a substantial meal.

The same day Mrs. Osgood phones to the plumbing office, and the boss plumber delegates Clancy to go to Mrs. Osgood's house to fix the radiator, which is out of order.

When Clancy arrives to fix the radiator Mr. Osgood, not knowing how to get rid of the opera tickets, offers them to the plumber, who expresses his preference for a burlesque

"Peg o' the Ring" Eleventh Episode

Latest two-Reel Episode of the Current Universal Special Feature Serial, entitled "The Stampede," Shows Peg captured first by an Elephant from the Circus, and then by a band of River Pirates, and taken out to sea as a Prize.

SCENARIO by Grace Cunard. Directed by Francis Ford and featuring these two clever players in a series of hair-raising perils and escapes.

CAST.

Peg	Grace Cunard
Doctor Lund, Junior	Francis Ford
Doctor Lund, Senior	Marc Fenton
Mrs. Lund	Jean Hathaway
Flip, the Clown	Pete Gerald
Marcus, the Hindoo	Irving Lippner

JUST as Peg is being rushed from the race-track in an automobile, young Doctor Lund springs on the running board of the machine and grapples with the ruffians. He succeeds in rescuing her from their clutches. Marcus then reports to Mrs. Lund that he has again failed to get the letter. Mrs. Lund is furious. A few minutes later the doctor comes in and, seeing the two men there, gives them a thrashing and throws them out of the house. Mrs. Lund meets them outside and tells them to try once more to "get" Peg.

The Doctor now goes to Peg's tent at the circus to give her the letter which he has been keeping for her. But she overhears the ruffians planning to get it, so gives it back to him for safekeeping. Marcus and his man attack him, but he cleverly escapes.

Marcus now plans to shoot Peg while she is performing in the ring and has procured a Maxim silencer for that purpose. He shoots through a hole in the tent and succeeds in causing her to fall from her horse. Every one rushes to her assistance and in the general excitement an elephant gets loose. The elephant picks up Peg's prostrate body and runs off.

The elephant drops Peg in a lumber yard, were Flip and Dr. Lund go to look for her. But Peg is seen by a couple of harbor pirates, who decide to capture her. A young rowdy tries to save her, but is knocked aside. Dr. Lund finds the young men and learns that Peg has been taken away in a boat. He hires a launch and follows with the rowdy.

On the boat the pirates draw lots for the possession of Peg. When she regains consciousness she struggles for her freedom and finally succeeds in defending herself in a room. Here the pirate who has won her comes for her.

But the doctor has boarded the boat with his friend. He looks for Peg while his friend holds the pirates at bay. After finding Peg and knocking out the man who was forcing his attentions on her, the doctor and Peg are cornered in the stern of the ship by the pirates who have overcome the young man, holding them at bay.

NEW WAY TO CATCH EAGLE FOR THE FILMS

DIRECTOR ROY CLEMENTS called for an eagle a few days ago, to be used in "Some Medicine Man," in which Pat Rooney is being starred among the Indians. Rooney suggested that as Ed Sedgwick, who tips the scales somewhere between 300 and 400 pounds, varying according to the state of the weather or his capacity for beefsteak, should be delegated to obtain the aforesaid eagle. Rather than climb the cliff to the haunts of the bird, Sedgwick decided he would use the one kept in a cage at the Universal zoo. Approaching the cage, he addressed the eagle as one comedian to another, but the famous American did not understand his language, and Sedgwick had too much fear in his heart to go further. He hailed Pedro Leon, the famous lariat thrower, and persuaded him to lasso the eagle. Then it was they put the "diamond hitch" about the bird and transported him to the Western street to become a co-player with Pat Rooney.

HARRY CAREY A LICENSED SKIPPER

ASIDE from being a well-known actor, versatile in the roles he portrays, Harry Carey also has the distinction of being a licensed master of a vessel, and has the right, therefore, under the laws of the United States, to command ships on the high seas and coastwise waters.

He owns what is known as Carey Point, on City Island, New York City, and is likewise owner of the 100-ton schooner "Angia and Emma."

Carey declares he has sailed ships nearly all his life, and he finally decided to go before the United States Customs officials and take the examination for his master's license. He did so, and it was given him.

He received a telegram at Universal City a few days ago, to the effect that his vessel, which is really an old Gloucester fishing schooner, has been converted into a pleasure boat.

It has been leased to Julia Day, of "Twin Beds" fame and is cruising about the waters of the Sound.

JACCARD INJURES KNEE IN FALL

DIRECTOR Jacques Jaccard is going about Universal City at present with a bad limp and carrying a cane, due to a fall in which his knee was painfully injured. Jaccard declares it is the irony of fate that after taking all kinds of chances in the production of thrills in Universal pictures he should get hurt by merely slipping on a sidewalk.

The Foreign Possessions of the Universal

Mr. Kurt Linn.

BEING an interview with Mr. Kurt Linn, export manager of the Universal, on his recent exhaustive tour of South and Central America.

By Peter Pepper.

RECENTLY Mr. Kurt Linn, the export manager of the Universal Film Company, returned from an extended trip to South and Central America, which he visited in connection with the establishment of several branch offices of the Universal in remote parts of the country, and in order to study, at first hand, the conditions of the whole moving picture enterprise as related to South America. Mr. Linn made no hurried tourist's rush through the country, the typical hasty glance at exterior conditions which is certain to give the traveler a false impression; but he spent much time in Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Uruguay, and other countries of South America, as well as on the Isthmus of Panama. He gathered a fund of information which will be invaluable to the company in developing its already flourishing South American connections, bringing back intimate studies of the people, their needs, likes, and dislikes, their customs, and the peculiarities of their social customs and relations, all of which make the supplying of the South American market a problem which experience of Northern ways and needs does not help one to solve.

It is just a year since the establishment of the first South American office of the Universal Film Company at Rio de Janiero, and, during the past few months, the popularity of Universal films has increased so rapidly that new offices had to be opened so as to make the pictures accessible everywhere. These are at present located in San Paulo, Porte Alegre, Para, and Pernambuco, while the establishment of others is contemplated in the near future.

When I saw Mr. Linn in his office he was quite ready to talk of the pleasurable side of his trip, but to make him discuss the purely business results was more difficult.

"I have learned a great deal, all of which I have placed at the disposal of the officials of the company," he said, "but it would not be politic to divulge all we know at this time. I will acknowledge that, through the acquaintances which I took time to form with the best people of the cities and towns which I visited, I formed a very different idea of the conditions of marketing films in South America than those which we had believed to exist there before my visit. The so-called "personal equation" is the deciding factor in South American relations, both business and social, and must never be lost sight of for a moment. No one who does not make an intimate study of the Latin character can realize how inextricably the two relationships, the business and the social, are intermingled in the countries of the other continent of America. I spent months in studying the characteristics of the people to whom we sell our pictures, and I can only repeat that the experience was of enthralling interest to me, and I am sure will be of the greatest possible benefit to our Latin-American business.

"No one who expects to do business with South America must lose sight of the differences in social customs. Let us speak first of the conduct of a motion picture theatre in Brazil. To begin with, the visit to a "cinema" is not a mere impulse of the moment, a dropping in for a few minutes as one is passing the building where pictures are being shown, but it is a social function. Outside the projection room proper there is a large and elaborate reception room, often beautifully decorated, in which the people wait until the program has been entirely completed before entering for the performance. There is no coming in during the course of a picture as with us. In this ante-room there is frequently a good orchestra, and seats are provided for the patrons who come in all their finery, to see and to be seen by their friends. The waiting-room is the rendezvous of the social set; here they meet their friends, discuss and comment on the pictures they have seen and are going to enjoy, and indulge in the great pleasure of conversation. They can entertain each other for hours, in the most perfect happiness, by their own efforts. They do not need a constant succession of new amusements and distractions as we do. Intercourse with their friends, while wearing their good clothes, is enough for them, without exterior aids to a good time.

"The pictures themselves are taken far more seriously in Rio de Janiero, for example, than they are in New York. I have frequently heard animated comment on films which were shown weeks before, but which had not been forgotten by those who saw them. You see, there is not very much formal amusement provided for the populace, even in Brazil. Theatre tickets cost from ten to twelve dollars, and are a luxury of the very wealthy, so that it sometimes happens that the attendance at a performance is so slim that the managers of the house cannot afford to give it, as the lighting of the theatre would cost more than the box-office has taken in. In Brazil the average price of a seat in a picture theatre is twenty-five cents. For a sensational or timely subject this will be raised to fifty. Universal films, by the way, are now exclusively shown in the Avenida Theatre, which is the "Strand Theatre" of Rio.

"The features are very extensively advertised in the daily press—very freely and elaborately, more so than the legitimate attractions. Much space is taken every day by the exhibitors, and the ads are striking. One Rio office had a large ad every week in the big papers of Rio announcing the new programs and in what houses they can be seen.

"From my extensive intercourse with the people of the cities, and towns throughout my trip, I discovered just the

NO. 16 MARTIN ST. combines two significant phases of modern life; one is the rise of criminology, and the other the prevalence of a new vice, the "dope" evil. In this picture the "movie fan" is given a treat which has long been known to the readers of A. Conan Doyle and Craig Kennedy. In addition the cover of metropolitan life is ripped off and the seamy side laid bare. A drama of vice and crime and their detection.

Cleo, studying music at the conservatory and short of funds, is forced to give up her lessons. She returns home, heartbroken, and reads an advertisement for singers at the Follies Cabaret. She decides to answer it and is engaged by the manager.

In the meantime Jacques Fournier, one of the greatest criminologists in the country, is engaged in the solving of a murder mystery. Browne rushes to Fournier's office and tells him of the discovery of his wife's body. Fournier accompanies Browne to his home and there finds the dead woman, whose jewels are missing. Fournier discovers that Browne is a cocaine fiend, and also that Mrs. Browne was killed by a Spiess gun. He returns to his office and sees in his files that Browne has been associated closely with Audrey Devine, a singer at the Follies Cabaret. He resolves to go to the cabaret and met the girl.

That night Fournier meets Cleo and saves her from the advances of Murphy, an Alderman. She tells him of her poverty and he enlists her services. Cleo informs him that Audrey Devine, whom she has met in the dressing room, is addicted to cocaine, and Fournier tells her to find out where she obtains the dope. Cleo returns for the second show, and, finding Audrey alone, pretends that she is a cocaine fiend and begs Audrey to get her some coke. Audrey calls Max, the piano player, and he gives her a deck, which Cleo pretends to take. She later informs Fournier that Max has the drug. In a note Fournier tells Cleo to play up to Max and have him take her home, and that he, Fournier, will hold them up and try to find out where Max obtains the drug. She follows his instructions and in the fight Fournier obtains Max's coat with the cocaine decks and the address, "16 Martin street."

The next morning, Cleo, in slavey disguise, starts out for this address. Fournier has given her a powerful narcotic and skeleton keys, with instructions to substitute the narcotic for the cocaine. When Cleo reaches the hall at 16 Martin street, Audrey is just leaving, but does not recognize the girl in her slavey costume. Before this Audrey is shown inside the room with Max and Joe, another fiend, preparing the decks of cocaine. Audrey goes through a secret panel and gives decks to some one inside. The person's identity is not shown until the end. When Cleo enters the room she finds it deserted and immediately starts substituting the narcotic. She also discovers the presence of a secret panel and is about to investigate when she is interrupted by the return of Joe.

That night Fournier waits at the police station for orders from Cleo. Plain clothes men watch No. 16 Martin street and see Audrey and Max enter the house. After the show Cleo goes directly to the police station and acts as guide to Fournier and the police. They surround the house and Cleo leads them to the door.

Well, we may as well tell you now that the mystery is solved in the end and that Cleo becomes Fournier's partner. Whether or not she becomes his partner for life we can't say, because the picture ends here.

"The Human Pendulum"--Bison Feature

Bison Three-Reel Railroad Drama—
Story by Henry McRae.
Scenario by F. Wiltermood.
Produced by Henry McRae.

McKay and McFadden rescue Dorothy from the cliff.

THE HUMAN PENDULUM is remarkable, not only for the hair-raising stunts which are incidental to its plot, but also because of the tense action throughout. The girl who is featured, Miss Walcamp, has performed so many feats of daring in the Bison pictures that she does not need an introduction to the weekly readers.

Among the features of this picture is a teddy bear, but not of the stuffed variety, which runs in front of Miss Walcamp's horse and starts the beast on its runaway ride. She is then thrown over a cliff and is forced to hang, many feet from the ground, until rescued by her usual partner, Mr. Wallock. It may be interesting to know that Miss Walcamp, besides being an expert rider, swims, dances, and drives motor-cars, æroplanes or railway locomotives.

The story in brief follows:

Bob McKay is chief of construction on the new mountain division of the Black Rock Short Line, and he is greatly aided in his arduous tasks by his foreman, McFadden. Stanford Markham, president of the company engaged in building the new line, orders the construction work rushed, as, by the terms of its franchise, the company must complete the project within a scheduled time.

CAST.

Jim Gordon	L. C. Shumway
McFadden	Ivor McFadden

One of McKay's colleagues in the railway building is Jim Gordon, chief engineer of construction, who, posing as an honest man, is secretly being paid by a rival railway to betray his trust and covertly delay the building of the new division. So Gordon plots to overthrow McKay's energetic efforts. Gordon is able to create dissention among the workmen. He bribes one of the laborers, Bud Ennis, to wreck a train load of construction material long awaited by McKay. The latter, on learning of the wreck, sends a telegram to President Markham informing him of the disaster.

McKay receives a despatch from Markham saying that he is coming on a special train to meet McKay and Gordon for a conference about the troublous work. Markham, who is in ill-health, is accompanied on his trip by his daughter, Dorothy, and three directors of the railroad company. While the special train is speeding over the already constructed trackage of the new mountain line, Bud Ennis, working secretly under Gordon's orders, arranges to blow up a tunnel and thus prevent the train from reaching the front. Ennis, with two accomplices, enters the tunnel with a box of dynamite to plant the explosive in the roadbed, but they see McKay coming along the track and run. McKay is horrified to find the box of dynamite near the tunnel entrance. He heroically risks his life by seizing the box of explosive and hurling it over the bank just as the train speeds by.

Markham, largely on account of his poor health, decides to remain in the mountains, near the construction work and he and Dorothy live in his private car on a siding. Gordon, to ingratiate himself with Dorothy, lends her his saddle horse, and she rides along the mountain trails. Gordon continues his plotting and manages by strategy to

"THE LITTLE GRAY MOUSE"

IMP Two-Reel Comedy-Drama, written by Catherine Carr. Produced by J. W. Kelly. Clever child foils badger game workers in shadow of convent.

CAST.

Felice, The Little Gray Mouse	Edith Roberts
The Mother Superior	Nellie Slattery
James Webster, a confidence man	Paul Panzer
Mrs. Webster, his wife	Inez Marcel
Jack Stanley	Harry Benham

FELICE, the only child of a French widower, a soldier of fortune, is left at a convent when he decides to enlist and rejoin his old regiment in the French army. Felice is heart-broken at her father's departure, but the nuns comfort her. They receive word that the father has been killed, and, on the advice of the Mother Superior, she decides that Felice shall remain at the convent, but as she is without money for her boarding expenses, she is allowed to help with the housework.

Jack Stanley, a young business man, with his semi-invalid father, a widower, arrives with Mrs. Webster, a beautiful young woman posing as a widow, who acts in the capacity of housekeeper and companion to the elder Stanley. A strict diet has been prescribed for the invalid, and the convent is recommended as a place where Stanley may secure eggs and honey and other delicacies. Delicacies seem to be scarce, and Mr. Stanley finds himself deprived of the things he expected, as the nuns regret they cannot supply his wants. Felice overhears the request for delicacies which is made personally by Jack in his father's behalf. Thereupon, Felice smuggles out a basket of them from the cellar of the nunnery, intending to leave the basket surreptitiously at the Stanley home. Mice scamper across the cellar floor during her foraging escapade. Subsequently she meets Jack on the road, confessing to him that the basket of delicacies is intended for his father and he drives her back to the convent in his car.

Felice falls in love with Jack, and he is very much taken with the Little Gray Mouse, as he calls her. Mrs. Webster, although posing as a widow, is in reality married to Jim Webster, "a gentleman crook," who is stopping at a nearby hotel by prearrangement. Webster is planning to work the badger game, and after bleeding the elder Stanley of a large sum of money, to make his get-away with the proceeds. Upon the night settled for the badger game, Jack is summoned to New York by a fake telegram. Felice, upon the same evening, determines to carry out another basket of delicacies to the Stanley home. Under cover of darkness, she makes her way to the Stanley home, encountering no one on the road. Finding the house quiet, she investigates the lower floor. She makes her way to the drawing room and is startled by the arrival of Webster. She conceals herself in an alcove. Mrs. Webster joins her husband. They discuss the plan of the badger game. Mrs. Webster is on the verge of weakening, but her husband forces her to consent to go through with the proposed blackmailing scheme, announcing that he will bring a pal, Tim Morse, to intimidate Stanley.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Webster has dismissed the servants for the day. She promises, in the hearing of Felice, to carry out the badger game. Felice, not knowing what a badger game is, but conscious that it is something criminal, escapes from the room, and starts on a mad run for the convent.

Jack's machine having broken down he is taken up by a friendly motorist, who asks the way to the convent where he is to see his daughter. Felice returns to the convent, dishevelled and breathless. She rushes to the Mother Superior with the story she has just overheard. Felice frantically tries to impress upon the Sisters the seriousness of the situation, but they will not listen to her, and are about to impose a heavy pennance for what she has done, when the stranger and Jack arrive. The stranger recognizes in Felice his daughter. Felice, her father and Jack race in the machine to the Stanley home. Webster and Morse are caught in the act of trying to force the elder Stanley to give up a large sum of money, after accusing him of having made love to Mrs. Webster. The imposters are overpowered and exposed, and the "Little Gray Mouse" leaves her convent cage for the golden land of love.

Nina sacrifices herself for Casimir.

Nina.

THESE are the days when the whole artistic world is striving for atmosphere. On the speaking stage Belasco is noted for his accurate productions. People demand not only foreign or ancient plots, but also require them to be staged with the correct costumes, scenery, architecture and mannerisms of the period and place to which they belong.

This picture, besides portraying perfectly the Spanish temperment illustrated in a stirring plot, gives an appreciation of Mexican life which ordinarily can be acquired only by a sojourn in the country itself.

The outline which follows indicates but half the merit of the picture.

Nina, a freeborn Octoroon, is an attendant in the household of Madame Casimir, a grande dame, a proud French woman, and mistress of the Casimir plantations. Her son has been in the States for the past few years, supposedly attending college. One day the mother receives a letter from young Casimir, pleading for more money. He tells her that it is necessary for him to live in style suitable to the Casimirs. Enclosed with the letter is a recent photograph of the young man. The mother decides to borrow the money from Luridi, a notorious slave-dealer and free-trader. The mother tells Nina to go to the village and bring Luridi to the house.

REX Two-Reel Mexican Drama deals with slavery in Mexico and a wonderful sacrifice on the part of a free born Octoroon. Story by Geo. Hall and Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison and W. V. Mong.

CAST.

Nina	Cleo Madison
Casimir	Jack Mulhall
Luridi	Frank McQuarrie
Caribi	Wm. V. Mong

Nina knows Luridi's character, and has often noticed his covetous glances. She pouts because she is sent on this errand and is about to refuse, when she sees the photograph of young Casimir, which she picks up. Nina smiles and hides the picture in her bosom.

Luridi is found in his slave pen, and Nina delivers the message. His eyes light with covetousness when Nina enters, but she repulses his attentions. One of the traders attacks Nina, and Caribi interferes. He is taken prisoner, but on Luridi's command he is released. Luridi hurries to the Casimir plantations, and is shown the letter from young Casimir. Luridi makes an offer to advance the money in return for Nina. The mother refuses this request, stating that Nina is freeborn and cannot be sold. Luridi is dissappointed, but hides his disappointment as best he can.

Young Casimir returns after a riotous living in the States.

One night, while partly under the influence of liquor, he loses heavily and signs an enormous check against the Casimir fortune, which he also loses. Luridi holds the note, and next day upon visiting the bank, finds that the Casimir family has no such sum as is represented by the check. Luridi swears to make young Casimir suffer for deceiving him. He threatens to have the young man thrown into jail unless he makes the check good. Nina hears the argument, and her adoration for the young man prompts her to offer herself to Luridi as a slave, provided that he will deliver the check to the Casimirs.

Nina is thrown into the slave pen with the other slaves and peons, and soon becomes the center of attraction.

Caribi follows Nina and helps her to escape. Luridi, when he finds that Nina is gone, sets out with his attendants to beat the neighboring woods in search of her. Caribi jumps upon him from behind a bush, attacks him, and throws him into some quicksand. Nina, however, intercedes for him and he is rescued. Caribi then leaves to build their homes in the woods.

show and respectfully declines the tickets on the ground that opera's all right except for the music.

The plot thickens when Mary, the doctor's comely maid, arrives with a note from her employer addressed to Mr. Osgood. Osgood admits the maid, and, noting that she is an attractive young woman, is struck with the happy idea of forcing the opera tickets on her—thus ridding himself of his "white elephant."

At the plumber's office later, Clancy is cutting a mask out of his apron with burglarious intentions. Mary telephones to him that she wants him to take her to a swell joint that evening. Clancy, bent on committing burglary, phones back to her that he's working overtime that evening and that he can't give up the job, as there's lots of money in it for him.

Mary manifests great anger at this discourteous announcement, and, after disconnecting the receiver, throws the envelope containing the tickets out of the window.

We next see Mrs. Osgood telephoning to her husband at his office that she wishes him to accompany her on a visit that evening to her sister who is seriously ill. Clancy deems it wise to make his peace with Mary, and he runs across the envelope containing the hoodoo tickets. He decides that Osgood's failure to attend the opera that night will block his dark plans. So he proceeds to the Osgood establishment and hands the tickets to the butler, who in turn hands them to his master. Osgood, delighted to square himself with the "Missus," proudly exhibits them, but Mrs. Osgood, woman-like, turns on him and exclaims: "You heartless brute, you can think of amusement when my sister is ill." Mrs. Osgood thereupon presents the tickets to the butler, who, being of a gallant disposition, offers to give the cook an operatic treat. The cook, however, gets the impression that he is trying to "kid" her and gives him a black eye with the rolling pin.

That evening Clancy arrives at the doctor's house to pacify Mary. He drops his improvised mask in taking out his handkerchief. Mary catches a glimpse of the mask and picks it up as she shouts at the plumber: "So you was goin' to a masquerade ball with another woman." Clancy has a hard time to bring Mary around, but finally he convinces the belle of the kitchen that he is plumb gone on her, and she consents to become his life-long mate.

The two tickets to the opera have served their purpose.

Frank Allen, a man of wealth, is happily married, and he and his wife, Marie, and their little baby are living in the same city as Van Dusen, an artist of unsavory reputation. Marie has always kept from Frank the knowledge that before she met him, she posed for Van Dusen, and was compelled to leave his studio on account of his advances to her.

One evening at a mutual friend's house they meet Van Dusen and Frank is introduced to him. While alone with Marie, Van Dusen attempts to force his attentions upon her, but she repulses him. This angers him and he suggests to her that possibly she would be willing to listen to him, rather than have Frank find out that she once posed for him. Marie, terrified, nevertheless repels his advances and Van Dusen resolves to inform Frank in some manner of her former position. He invites the party to visit his studio the following evening.

While Marie was his model she had posed for a painting entitled "The Grieving Dryad," a picture showing a scantily clad girl weeping over a withered rose. Van Dusen returns to his studio, and, taking the painting from its place of storage, places it in a prominent place and covers it with a tapestry. The next evening Marie tells Frank that she does not feel well enough to accompany him and the others to the studio, and he goes alone. Marie, in fear and terror of what may happen, gathers the baby in her arms and falls aslep in a chair.

At the studio, Van Dusen unveils the painting at a dramatic moment; and at Frank's confusion, tells him that it was merely a surprise for him, as he supposed that every one knew that Marie was once his model. Frank's anger and jealousy is aroused to such a pitch that he tears the painting from its place and rushes home to confront Marie. He finds her asleep, and as he hesitates to wake her, his imagination sees her as having friendly relations with Van Dusen. His better nature conquers, however, and he returns to the studio to force the truth from the artist.

Van Dusen, conscious-stricken, has just finished a letter to Frank, clearing Marie and acknowledging that his motive was revenge for her repulse. After a scene between them, he gives Frank the letter and apologizes and offers him the painting. Frank forgives Van Dusen and hurries home, where Marie has just awakened. She sees the painting and is filled with terror. Frank enters and calms her fears by explaining that he knows all, and that there is nothing for her to be alarmed about. The dark cloud rolls away and all is happiness again.

"FLIRTING WITH MARRIAGE."

Baseball Bill Comedy Series.

CAST.

Baseball Bill	Billy Mason
Penpoints	O. C. Jackson
Olly Olson	Victor Potel

The two boys, Baseball Bill and Penpoints, are broke and find themselves outside the town and very hungry. They enter the town to look for work, but even the advertisements in the newspapers yield no hope. Penpoints sends Bill on a begging expedition, but he is unsuccessful. They notice a sign outside a Swedish restaurant, "Dining Room Girl and Chambermaid Wanted." Penpoints has an idea. He has seen some women's clothes on a line and he steals them and dresses Bill as a Swedish maid. He induces Bill to enter Olly Olson's restaurant and boarding house and ask for the job of waitress. Bill does so, and is accepted by the proprietor, who is much taken with him; Penpoints then enters the restaurant and orders a meal from Bill, and Olly throws him out.

Olly makes much of Bill, and shows him to his room. Penpoints tries to discover which is his room. Bill sneaks out of the window and rejoins Penpoints, saying that he cannot stand the disguise any longer. Penpoints induces him to stay a week, so as to get his wages. Bill re-enters and sleeps peacefully, while Penpoints passes the night on the doorstep. It gets too cold for him, and he enters Bill's room. In the morning, when Olly calls Bill, Penpoints has to jump out of the window, half-dressed. Olly shows Bill the day's work, and Bill performs it like a Trojan. Olly is very appreciative, and decides to take his new maid to the ball game. Bill is much elated.

Penpoints, meanwhile, is arrested.

The home team is playing badly, and Bill can hardly stand it. The pitcher is being hit all over the lot. Olly suddenly discovers that he has lost his money, and rushes out wildly to look for it. Bill can stand it no longer. He makes a break for the bench, and is recognized with joy, and rushed into a uniform. He pitches perfect ball and wins the game.

He then dons his gown and returns to Olly, who has found his money. Olly wants to be married at once. Bill says he cannot be married in a calico gown. Olly gives him fifty dollars for a new dress. Olly goes to get a license. He sees Penpoints being taken to jail. He returns and tells Bill, who pays the fine, which takes all his fifty dollars. They are broke again.

"LITTLE BOY BLUE."

Victor One-Reel Drama.
Adapted from Poem of Eugene Fields.
Produced by Rupert Julian.

CAST.

Cyril	Rupert Julian
Clara	Elsie Jane Wilson
Little Boy Blue	Baby Clemens

Cyril, an author, and his wife, have lately drifted apart. The difference between them, slight at first, has grown with time, and the little child is the only link that held them together. In his indifferent way, Cyril is very fond of the child and often rebukes his wife for the scrapes the youngster gets into, which helps to widen the breach between them. The constant companions of the child are a little tin soldier and a tin dog.

Cyril receives notice from a newspaper syndicate stating that his children's poems are proving very popular and requesting more of his work. That night a tropical rain storm is raging outside and Cyril is busy working on his poems. Little Boy Blue, awakened by the rain, remembers leaving his two playmates, the soldier and the dog, outside, and slipping out into the storm, rescues them. He wipes the rain from them and places them in the closet. Just as he slips into bed the father finds him and sees he is wringing wet. He again rebukes the mother for not watching the child more closely.

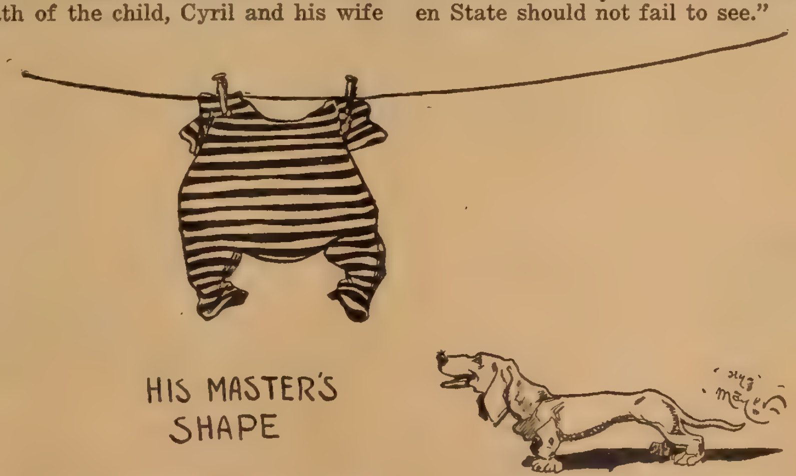
The trip into the night air is too much for the little fellow, and he contracts a deadly ailment. The doctors are unable to save him. With the death of the child, Cyril and his wife become definitely separated. She returns to her parents, while he remains in the house.

The years pass. The little soldier and tin dog wonder what has become of their little playmate, and one night Cyril, rummaging around in the closet, brings the child's little playmates back to light. At the sight of them his indifference breaks down and he is filled with remorse and regret over the attitude he has taken against his wife. On the spur of the moment he composes a verse telling the pathetic story of the deserted soldier and dog. The wife later reads the verse in a paper and her old love returns. She hurries to the house and finds her husband preparing his own meal. She notes the rages time has made upon him, and rushes towards him. With a glad cry he takes her in his arms, and the little toy soldier and the little tin dog are placed in a conspicuous place to remind them that nothing shall ever come between them again.

ORPHEUM PRESIDENT AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

MORRIS MEYERFELD, JR., president of the Orpheum theatres, was entertained at Universal City this week by E. G. Patterson, secretary of the big film concern. The head of the greatest vaudeville chain of theatres in the world exhibited keen interest in the work of the twenty-six producing companies at Universal City, and said the institution was to be highly commended for the picture plays it is making for the public.

"This plant," said the Orpheum president, "is a real beehive of industry, and is something that every Californian and every visitor to the Golden State should not fail to see."



Hy. Mayer's Original Conceit drawn for the Universal Animated Weekly.

Herbert Rawlinson In "Nature Incorporated"

SPLENDID Two-Reel Gold Seal Comedy-Drama, adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story of Sinclair Lewis by Ben Cohn. Produced by William Worthington. All around good fellow marries a deaconess of nature and makes the best of the unusual near-to-nature life. An excursion to the city and the old life convinces him that the nature colony is the real thing.

CAST.

Billy Packard	Herbert Rawlinson
Prof. Tonson	Wm. Canfield
Beulah, his daughter	Agnes Vernon

Beulah finds Billy quite a change from the other colonists.

BILLY PACKARD, a successful real estate promoter with decided epicurean tastes, is favored by a visit from Professor Tonson. The professor wants to start a health colony in some secluded spot where he and his followers can strengthen their weakened constitutions on a diet of peanuts and beans. They conclude the deal and the professor departs to his bean-eaters.

Some time later Billy visits the colony to see the "system." The colonists are basking in the sun, dressed in abbreviated sack-cloth garments, and attack the peanut-bean menu with avidity and stout hearts. The professor's daughter and chief assistant, Beulah, is delegated to show Billy about the place.

Billy at once falls in love with the girl and proposes. But she says that if he marries her he must come to live in the colony. He finally decides that the girl is preferable to beefsteak orgies, and so settles down as guardian of the beans and husband of the delectable Beulah.

Then is begun a conflict between Billy's Broadway habits and the simple life he is forced to lead.

The Professor often interests his pupils with a revelation of things which are to come, and Billy tells the Professor that he is going to have a revelation. It is that Beulah and he, Billy, must return to the city, and he mentions that said revelation would be worth five hundred dollars to him. They quickly come to terms.

The next morning, during the lecture, the revelation is announced. Beulah is very much surprised, but never hesitates to believe what her father says, and the two arrange to go to the city. Billy tries to sample every bill-of-fare in town, and absolutely refuses to have beans anywhere near him. It is Beulah's first trip to the city and she is in a continual state of happiness. But the life begins to pall on Billy, however, and he decides that it is "back to nature" for him. Billy finally tells Beulah of his scheme to get back to the city and have a real meal. It is a great surprise to Beulah, but Billy manages to comfort her and tells her that they will go back to the colony.

The deserters return and Billy now has an understanding with the Professor that as long as he can keep the other patients from seeing him, he can indulge in anything he likes. He and Beulah are contented with their lot, and one day as they listen to the Professor propound his usual question as to who is the greatest nature professor, Billy imitates him and asks who is the greatest naturalist. Beulah tells him that it is himself, and that the next head of the Packard nature colony will be Billy, Junior, unless he turns out to be little Beulah.

"IGNATZ'S ICY INJURY"

L-KO KOMEDY

SKATING RINK AND THE ROOFS OF FOURTEEN STORY BUILDINGS MAKE EXCELLENT LOCATIONS FOR DISPLAY OF L-KO COMEDY AND INTREPEDITY.

The end of the Baron's social career and of the ice palace episode.

CAST.

Ignatz	Bill Armstrong
Reggie	Reggie Morris
Mr. Rustlebucks	Dan Russell
Mrs. Rustlebucks	Gertrude Griffith
Miss Rustlebucks	Carmel Myers

BEING an ex-Minister of Hosiery to the Siberian Monarch has its advantages. But it also has its disadvantages, and one of the main disadvanages was that the ex-minister had a very artistic and sensitive temperament which had to be gratified. The manner of gratification was hanging around the mansions of the Four Hundred. This might have been all right, but the minister ran afoul of an officer who couldn't appreciate artistic temperaments, and said officer struck the Baron. In addition, the Baron obtained a dollar from Reno Reggie under false pretenses, and this transaction later rebounded on the Baron under embarrassing circumstances. Anyway, the Baron got invited to the Rustlebucks' garden party, where he covered himself with distinction and cream puffs at the tea table. Even this might not have extinguished him socially, but the Rustlebucks gave a dinner at the Ice Palace, where the Baron's behavior caused his social career to be ended without a doubt. Suffice to say, that the law took a hand, the manager of the Ice Palace took a hand, and the cops took hold of both feet of the Baron. The ensuing scenes were painful in the extreme. The Baron got on a fourteen-story skyscraper and imagined he could run about on the edge of the building and defy the laws of gravity, but the laws of gravity would not be defied and the Baron fell off and struck himself in the dining room. The upshot of it all was that Reno Reggie got old Rustlebucks' daughter and the Baron got six months in the hospital among the chloform and acid bottles. The only one who sent him flowers was Mama Rustlebucks, but these were poison ivy blossoms.

Ritchie Qualifies as a Windjammer

Defying the laws of graviation from the top of a fourteen-story building, in "Ignatz' Icy Injury."

EMPIRES have been built, glib-tongued financiers have secured capital on the same commodity and traveling salesman revel in the lavish disbursement of the very same, wind, but it took Billie Ritchie to build up a photoplay around it. Billie has nearly finished a wind picture which depicts his lurid adventures in the cyclone country. Bill says that every known variety of wind can be seen in his picture.

"First, we corraled a young Kansas cyclone," says Billie, "bolstered it up with a couple of gusts and blasts, trimmed it with several breezes, a squall and half a gale, mixed this with a sandstorm and twelve amperes of hurricane bordering on tempest, injected into the whole a whirlwind graduating into a tornado, tempered this with a typhoon hot out of the simoon belt, slapped on a monsoon and a couple of trade winds, froze the whole into blizzard-shaped zephyrs and let the whole mass flivver toward the camera."

"A Windy Day" is the working title of the picture and Billie found the work of production so full of Miltonian "red lightning and tempestuous rage" that he has taken a trip to the San Diego Exposition to recuperate from a bad case of the bends caused by wind bubbles getting into his system. Prominent in the cast of Ritchie's wind picture are Eolus, Boreas, Zephyr and other regular photoplayers, filled with the divine afflatus.

"THE THREE BRAVE HUNTERS."

Big U Juvenile Comedy.

Helene, the innkeeper's daughter, was loved by one and admired by many. One day three mighty hunters arrived at the inn. They boasted of their prowess and of the big game they had killed. One had a bow and arrow, the second a musket, and the third a knife. Helene was quite impressed with their stories, and they all contended for her favor. The one with the musket warned her to have nothing to do with the man with the bow, as he was already married. He invited her to walk with him instead, and she accepted. Dale, her sweetheart, planned to expose the hunters and win back Helene for himself.

He got up very early in the morning and went to town on a mysterious errand. While he was gone Helene went for a stroll in the woods to think it all over. A lion rushed out at her and she had to run for her life. All declared that here was work for the fearless hunters. They did not seem over anxious. but after some delay, spent in arming themselves, they set out. In the woods they encountered not only a lion but a tiger and a kangaroo. The hunters were overcome with fright, and decided to hide in a cave. But the animals had found him again. A bear and a fox joined them, and the hunters were chased back to the town.

"SAMMY JOHNSIN GETS A JOB."

Powers Comedy Cartoon.

By Pat Sullivan.

Sammy asks his mother for a nickel, but she only tells him to get himself a job. He wanders out and sees a sign "Boy Wanted" outside a District Messenger office. He goes in and gets the job. Dressed in his A. D. T. uniform he is sent to a business man who wants a messenger. He is told to wait. He picks up a book called "Fiji Islands" and looks at the pictures. He falls asleep over it and begins to dream. He sees a cannibal girl eating a cocoanut. A tiger comes after her, but he drives it away with one kick, and she is very grateful. She is delighted to see him and rolls her eyes at him. They kiss each other and a big baboon comes down the tree and watches them. Sammy closes his eyes in enjoyment and while they are shut the girl walks away. The baboon comes down and takes her place and when Sammy starts to kiss her again he finds himself gazing at the hideous baboon. It jumps up in the tree again and Sammy goes after the girl. He finds her just as a porcupine is coming up behind her. He tells her to take a seat. She does so and sits on the porcupine. She yells and Sammy laughs, but a big cannibal comes up and hits him over the head with his club. Sammy wakes to find the business man hitting him on the head with a ruler to wake him and gives him the letter.

"HENRY'S LITTLE KID."

Nestor One-Reel Comedy.

CAST.

Henry	Jack Dillon
The sweetest girl in the world,	Billie Rhodes
Father	Harry Rattenbury

Henry had to celebrate his engagement, but he had an awful headache the next morning. The sweetest girl in the world took her breakfast in bed, and she telephoned Henry as she dressed. Henry had just received a letter from his father, telling him that he did not begrudge the $5,000 when he remembered Henry's wife and child. He announces that he will be with them on Friday. As Henry has only just persuaded the only girl to be his, he is taken aback by the letter. But he goes to Billie and tries to induce her to come over every day and pretend to be his wife while father is there. She consents, and that leaves him only a child to find. His butler undertakes the job, and tries in vain to induce all the mothers he sees to lend him a baby.

He gets one, but it is black. Explanations and reconciliations follow.

"A STRANGER IN HIS OWN HOME."

Imp One-Reel Comedy.

Written by J. Grubb Alexander. Produced by Matt Moore.

CAST.

William Brown	Matt Moore
Jane Brown	Jane Gail
Jane's Mother	Miss Cecil
Percival Green	Curtis Benton
The Goat	By Himself

The Browns are happily married until Jane receives a note from mother stating that she was coming to spend a month with her darling children. Then follows one of those delightful household phenomena known as "squabbles." The night of her arrival hubby takes refuge in his club so that Janey has to meet her mother alone. But mother arrives a half hour ahead of time and proceeds to the Brown residence.

Percival Green, a gentleman but slightly tight, is wandering in the same neighborhood and chances to fall in the Brown coal bin. Going upstairs, he meets the indignant mother-in-law. Mother, much wroth with her supposed son, roughly locks him in the bedroom. When Jane comes home she naturally thinks that her husband has had a drink too much at the club. When William, finally realizing that he is wrong, arrives home, he discovers that he has lost his key and is forced to climb in the window. To his dismay, when he enters his bedroom, he sees his wife bending over his bed kissing another man. When the lights are turned on and when she sees her husband before her, Jane almost faints. Percival awakes and makes good his escape. Finally William agrees to forgive his wife if she will agree to bannish all her relatives from the house forever.

BEWARE OF MAX'S CHECKS.

A. G. SHEAR, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, the Universal exchange at New Orleans, wishes to warn exhibitors and film people in general against a certain Max Sokolow. Mr. Shear writes as follows to Joe Brandt, general manager, and M. H. Hoffman, exchange manager of the New York offices of the Universal:

New Orleans, La.

Gentlemen:—A "live wire" blew in the office the other day by the name of Max Sokolow. He happened to know one of the exchange managers living here in town, who formerly operated an exchange in Los Angeles. Sokolow was employed in the Universal Exchange at Los Angeles under Mr. Markowitz for about five months. I understand he was also working at Universal City for some time.

We placed him on the road as a film salesman. After the third day out we lost track of Sokolow. Today we find that he forged a check for $25.00 on a local amusement company. How he ever got hold of one of the blank checks is a mystery to everybody; but a poor, unsuspecting clerk at the Battle House, Mobile, Ala., cashed the check in question. Of course, as soon as it was presented to the local bank for payment it was immediately picked out as a very poor excuse at forgery.

We understand that Mr. Sokolow is married, has two children, and that his wife and children are living in New York City at this writing. This information is corroborated by the exchange manager, who recommended him to this company, and in recommending him the gentleman in question certainly acted in good faith.

Please give this information publicity. A. G. SHEAR.

"Liberty", New Universal Serial for Preparedness

Marie Walcamp in the Liberty costume she wore in the Los Angeles parade.

FEATURING MARIE WALCAMP, POLO, NYE, GRASSBY AND HOLT

ALL good things must come to an end. "Peg o' the Ring" is now in its twelfth episode, and has but three more to run before Peg and Dr. Lund will come into their own. This is due to happen during the week of August 7th, when will be completed one of the most successful serials the Universal has ever attempted, and this in spite of all manner of hardships and delays experienced during its filming. Nothing of this kind is anticipated with the next serial, which has been planned to capitalize the martial spirit which is now sweeping over the country, the preparations to put the United States in possession of some degree of military strength, the revived interest in the spirit of liberty, and the power to defend it, and the particular attention which is being cast by every American to that portion of North America which lies south of the Rio Grande. With these things in view Jacques Jaccard was selected to write and produce a serial which would embody the spirit of Liberty, and it was decided that that would be the best all-around title for the serial, with the sub-title, "A Daughter of the U. S. A." Work on "Liberty" has already started, and on August 14th the first episode will be released.

The Universal announces the titles for the first four episodes respectively, "Across the Border," "Fangs of the Wolf," "Riding With Death," and "American Blood."

"Liberty" promises to be a record-smasher. It deals with adventure below the Mexican border at the present day. Outlaw Mexican bandits, border raids, and their repulse by American troops, the adventures of an American girl on a great hacienda down below the Rio Grande, the trapping of American troops and their splendid fight to escape the ambush prepared for them by traitorous natives, pitched battles in the mesquite country and in the mountains of Sonora with greasers carefully entrenched and well supplied with American-made machine-guns, the abduction of an American girl by natives who hold her for ransom, the invasion of Mexico by the American government after repeated raids of American towns along the border and the final establishing of a protectorate over Mexico—all combine to make "Liberty" a super-serial with all the attraction of a heart-interest drama and the thrills of a real-life photographic reproduction of actual events along our southwestern border.

The following is a skeleton synopsis of the serial which by no means details all the stirring action and collisions between great bodies of troops, infantry actions against Mexicans and so forth.

Col. Horton, an ex-United States army officer, dies leaving his friends, Major Winston, U. S. A., and Senor Pancho Leon, his business partner, to settle his large Mexican estate. Senor Leon is appointed guardian of Horton's beautiful daughter, Liberty. Liberty falls in love with Ruttledge, a United States Army Lieutenant, who has a rival in Manuel Leon, son of Col. Horton's business partner, and Liberty's guardian. A big rodeo is held in honor of the girl who is saved from peril by Ruttledge.

Unable to win the girl by fair means, Manuel enlists the aid of a native chief, Yauqueyo, and with the assistance of the latter's tribesmen, Leon and Yauqueyo succeed in abducting her. The natives and Leon hold Liberty for ransom, hoping with the money thus obtained to support the insurrection then beginning. Ruttledge and a troop set out to rescue Liberty.

Manuel and Lopez carry Liberty to the mountains. Ruttledge is captured by the Mexicans and is sentenced to be shot. Liberty offers herself to Manuel if he will spare Ruttledge's life. Texas rangers come to the rescue and Ruttledge and Liberty escape, the American girl being saved by an aero scout. Later the American troops return to the attack in numbers and rout the Mexicans, Liberty leading the troops like a modern Joan of Arc. Theresa slays Manuel for his infidelity to her, and then ends her own life. Ruttledge, in a hand-to-hand battle with Lopez succeeds in killing him. Word at length reaches the troops that Mexico has agreed to the establishment of a protectorate by the United States over the country.

Marie Walcamp, the Universally-crowned dare-devil of the films, plays the role of Liberty Horton, and the picture of her taken in her robes of Liberty in which she appeared in the preparedness parade at Los Angeles recently, was so appropriate to the idea of the film, that we reproduce it on this page. This is not, however, the costume which she is going to wear in the serial, as there will be no goddesses to plague exhibitors with the Universal's knowledge and consent. Most of the time Marie will wear an up-to-date riding costume, consisting of a feminine adaptation of the olive-green service jacket worn by cavalry troops the world over, and an ordinary pair of leather breeches with high boots. Jack Holt, who has played with the Universal Company for over a year now, will have the role of Bob Ruttledge, a young lieutenant, who is desperately in love with Liberty, and opposed in that love by Manuel Leon, a role which will be played by Bertram Grassby, another clever Universalite. Neal Hart and G. Raymond Nye will play the role of the two trustees of the property in Mexico, consisting of a tremendous and valuable ranch, left to Liberty by her father.

Latest News-Notes from Universal City

MONG NOW DIRECTING HIS OWN COMPANY

WILLIAM V. MONG has been given the direction of his own company at Universal City in addition to playing roles before the camera. For some months he has been co-director with Miss Cleo Madison, and both were playing parts in the productions. Miss Madison will play the featured lead in a version of "La Tosca," which is to be given a Mexican atmosphere, under the direction of Rex Ingram, who has recently come to Universal City from the Eastern studios. Mong is working on two photoplays at present. One features little Gordon Griffith and the other Betty Schade. Both stories were written by Mong.

SCENARIO EDITORS STRUGGLE WITH CHINK LETTER

A LETTER addressed to "A Picture Company in California" passed through the hands of Postmaster Donaghy at Universal City several days ago. The letter found its way into the scenario department, where it was opened by Eugene Lewis, the scenario chief. Mexicans, Filipinos, Persians, East Indians and others were called in to translate it, but it was a puzzle to all of them. Finally the letter was sent to the restaurant, where it was passed around among the Chinese cooks. Cook No. 2 made the discovery that it was from a kinsman living in 'Frisco, from whom he had not heard for half a dozen years.

MISS LILLIAN CONCORD JOINS THE UNIVERSAL

DIRECTOR BURTON GEORGE has commenced work at Universal City on "The Heritage of Hate," a three-reel drama by Walter Woods. The leading role is played by Roberta Wilson, who, for a long time, was the leading lady of the Jacques Jaccard Company. Important roles are taken by Lillian Concord, Paul Byron and William Quinn. Lillian Concord has had a wide experience on the legitimate stage. She appeared in the Belasco production of "The Boomerang," Shubert's "The Midnight Girl," was starred in "The Red Widow" and for three years was a headliner on the Orpheum circuit.

THE FOREIGN POSSESSIONS OF THE UNIVERSAL.

type of pictures which appeal most to the South American public, but it would not be quite fair to the company to divulge just what these are. I may say, however, that the dramatic sense of the Latin-American is highly developed. He enjoys thrills, and he insists upon physical charm in the actors, both men and women. He is a severe critic of dress, for both sexes, and especially of social usages and customs, which are more formal than with us. Of course, there is no censorship but public opinion—and it is a tropical climate.

"In Argentina, the situation is somewhat different. All the population is white, in the first place, there is no colored native population. Of course, the European war has had its effect in Argentina as elsewhere. Formerly the lavishness of the people was proverbial. They would pay a cab with a large bill, and wave away the change; give extravagant tips to waiters, and perform the other characteristic actions of a suddenly wealthy community.

"I made many charming acquaintances in both countries. The Spanish tradition of hospitality obtains in both. In Buenos Aires exists the only film manufacturing plant in South America, from which I secured the output for a period of years. They have produced some long feature films, notably one in nine reels, an appeal to the home love of the Argentine, called, in its English translation, "The Nobility of the Cowboy." Their latest big feature is called "The Last Tango," and is also sensationally patriotic.

"From Argentina, I crossed the Andes, a most magnificent trip, and went to Santiago, the capital of Chile. By the way, please spell the word "CHILE" with the final "e , not "i", which is a mistake often made by American writers. Santiago is most charmingly situated, and reminds one of older European life. Everything comes to an end at the same hour, all the shops put up heavy shutters, and the streets are deserted, as if at the sound of curfew. If any one should whistle, the whole town would wake. Business, there, is done exclusively through film agents located in Buenes Aires, as there are no film exchanges worthy of mention. Very old stock is sometimes sent to the Chilean theaters, and undoubtedly a nice business could be done with good, new films. Pictures which I saw in Chile were all more or less ancient.

"I visited Valparaiso, the Chilean port of Santiago, for a few days, and found conditions the same as in Santiago itself. I then went to Callao, the port of Lima, capital of Peru. Here I spent twelve days, meeting many exhibitors, whom I interested in the combination of a new company for contracting for the Universal program. By this contract, the Peruvians will have an opportunity, previously denied them, of seeing the best American films. In all of these countries, with the exception of Brazil, conditions of showing the pictures resemble our own. It is only in Brazil that the custom of the reception room prevails.

"In Panama, I negotiated for the placing of our films with the Y. M. C. A. and the U. S. army posts. That may seem a strange way of introducing our pictures, but as a matter of fact, these two control the greater part of the business on the Isthmus of Panama, and do a far bigger business than the regular theaters on the Isthmus. This is on account of the vast number of American Government employees and soldiers stationed there. American influence on the Isthmus is gaining daily in momentum. The lower class still speak Spanish, but the business people are fast learning English. Coachman, and such, find that they must know it. The country has benefitted in every respect from the contact with us.

"I repeat, that the object of my extended trip, besides the re-organization of the Brazil office, and the establishment of agencies in Uruquay, Argentina and Peru, was the study of the country and the people, their customs and requirements, what they want and what they do not want. The information obtained cost a great many pennies, but I feel sure that we shall benefit by it in a way to make the returns more than commensurate with the expense."

That Mr. Linn succeeded in establishing the necessary social relations with the people he visited and studied, is evinced by his reception everywhere into the best homes. Perhaps the fact of his own European birth and training, helped him to perceive the necessity of proceedings along different lines in South America than is our blunter, rough-and-ready custom in the North. His mastery of French, Spanish, and German, in addition to English, was of undoubted assistance to him; but tact, good manners, and a constant observance of the social side of "business", were mainly responsible for his success. Before he left Buenos Aires, he was tendered a banquet at the principal hotel, in testimony of the esteem in which he was held by his new friends in Latin America.

have the workmen idle at a time when Markham is near, so that Markham, on meeting McKay, scolds him, with a result that McKay resigns his post. McFadden also quits in loyalty to McKay. The two men go to the top of Eagle Peak to talk over their future plans, and are horrified to see Dorothy's horse running away with her. Having been frightened by a bear, it is racing with her towards the brink of a high cliff. Dorothy is unable to stop her maddened horse, and it plunges over the precipice, near where McKay and McFadden stand. Dorothy, as the horse falls, manages to leap from the saddle and seizes a large oak root.

McKay and McFadden rescue Dorothy from a precarious position on the face of the cliff in a sensational manner. Markham, to show his gratitude, gives Bob his old position.

Some weeks later the road is completed and the officials bestir themselves to run a train over the line and thus fulfill the terms of the franchise. Gordon resolves to block the passage of the train, and he hires two thugs to go with him to slay the engineer and fireman of the train. As the special train speeds by a rocky cut, Gordon and the thugs fire into the cab, wounding the pilot and fireman. McKay courageously resolves to drive the locomotive, with McFadden as the fireman.

Gordon rides across the country and sets the tunnel on fire, but McKay bravely rushes the train through the blazing tunnel. As the train speeds by a cut, Gordon tries to shoot at Dorothy, McFadden and McKay in the cab, but he is seen by McFadden, who shoots him.

When the train arrives at Black Rock, Markham and the directors all praise McKay. A few months later Dorothy becomes his bride.

GEISMAR DISMISSES CASE.

it tends to deprave the minds open to such influences and into whose hands a publication of this character might come. It is within the law if it would suggest impure and libinidous thoughts in the young and inexperienced."

The virtue of this rule is that it is sufficiently reasonable to be easily understood and applied, sufficiently definite to lift the subject out of the realm of the merely speculative or capricious, and sufficiently flexible to make allowance for differences in place and time, especially with regard to the progressive evolution in popular education and morality. The courts have been so astute in carefully defining such a rule, particularly with a view to making it clear that the disposition of this question is amenable to scientific and logical reasoning, and does not, and, indeed, must not depend upon personal, individual whims, tastes or prejudices. In none of these cases are we confronted with a question of mere personal taste or individual idosyncracies of view. We are to decide upon the broad, general, fair and reasonable principle whether the subject matter tends to corrupt the morals of the community, particularly the youth and those whose minds are open to debauching influences.

My task would be very easy indeed if I were to take the facile view which, no doubt, is taken by a great many, namely, that our youth would be much better off if they knew nothing at all about these subjects. Such a view would lead readily to a determination that the statute has been violated in the giving of this exhibition, and that the defendants must be held to answer therefor.

As a matter of course it must be readily conceded that there undoubtedly is a very large number of excellent persons in this community who would give this photoplay short shift. But this is not the test by which this exhibition is to be judged, and to apply it would be to apply an altogether different rule than the one noted above as defined in the statute and in the courts' decisions.

I think it must be taken for granted that there are a great many things in this world which shock a great many good people, but which are not violative of the statute. An example is to be found in the case of People v. Muller, (96 N. Y. 408), in which, speaking of certain works of art, the court says:

"It is a false delicacy and mere prudery which would condemn and banish from sight all such objects as obscene."

Neither is it a proper test to show that the exhibition might have the tendency to deprave and corrupt some minds, for if this view were applied, our literature and art, whether painting, platic or dramatic, would be deprived of some of their finest productions as to the lawfulness of which the courts have in several cases made a favorable ruling.

After a very careful personal study of this photoplay, keeping in mind constantly the definition of indecency as the statute and the decisions above noted gives it to me, I cannot conscientiously arrive at the conclusion that it would tend to corrupt the morals of youth or others.

We must recognize that there are two kinds of purity, firstly, the purity of ignorance, and secondly, the purity of one who knows and who, because of that knowledge, is the better fortified to resist. It is only the second kind of purity which it seems to me that the court must regard in that case. The whole purpose of our education is to fortify the young against the temptations and evils of the world. The purity of ignorance is to be disregarded as a factor in this case, because, under our statute, children cannot visit any moving picture performance unless accompanied by parents or guardians. I consider this sufficient of a safeguard so as to make it unnecessary to strain or expand the meaning of the statute invoked in this prosecution. To say that the youth would be better off if they did not know these things is equivalent, to my mind, to saying that they would be better off if they could be kept in the blissful ignorance of infancy and be like plants raised in a hothouse.

I am quite convinced in my own mind that this photoplay will not effect a greater knowledge upon undesirable subjects than now exists or is now attainable through other channels. I am also convinced that the general doctrine of this photoplay is in accordance with the dictates of the most orthodox morality, and is such as any clergyman or good mother or good father might teach the adolescent mind in order to guard it against life's perils.

I am urged to find that there is probable cause to believe the defendants guilty of violating the statute on the ground that the motive of the exhibition is purely for monetary profits, and that the commercial exploitation of these subjects is not in accord with a wise public policy. Whatever may be the final view upon this point, I have only to say in answer to it that this is not the test which the statute imposes upon the court. The commercial success or failure of an objectionable exhibition must, in the last analysis always be left to the good taste of the public.

I am urged also to hold the defendants to answer as having violated the statute because, if the exhibition be of an indecent character, no matter how good its purpose otherwise, and no matter how valuable it may be from the physiological, sociological or moral point of view, they are to be held as guilty.

So far as this view applies the statutory test I have carefully considered it.

While I decide that there is not probable cause to hold the defendants guilty of violating the statute, I nevertheless think that there are several minor things in which the production may be improved by omission, but after a careful consideration of one and all of them I have not found them of such import as to change my general conclusion.

The information is dismissed and the defendants discharged.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont., June.—It is finally announced that "The Dumb Girl of Portici" and "Where Are My Children" will be released through the Canadian Universal Film Company, under the personal supervision of Mr. Claire Hague, general manager of this company in Canada. "The Dumb Girl of Portici" features Anna Pavlowa, the famous Russian danseuse, and "Where Are My Children" stars Tyrone Power, the celebrated actor. Both pictures have had tremendously successful runs in the United States and have broken all records for paid admissions. It is stated that the Pavlowa picture drew $720,000 in eleven weeks. Of course, in this case, outside of the masterly work of the Smalleys, Anna Pavlowa is the big drawing card. In "Where Are My Children," the unusual plot, which deals with birth control, and which is handled in a most powerful manner, is a potent means of drawing big crowds. Mr. Hague will receive all inquiries regarding both these films at the Toronto office of the Canadian Universal Film Company.

Canadian Universal Film Company, who have been particularly unfortunate during the past six months, owing to losses sustained in films being destroyed during transit, have once again suffered a big loss. The big feature film, "Where Are My Children," on its way to St. John, was burnt when the express car in which it was being carried was destroyed by fire. A new print was ordered by wire.

The Rosedale Theatre of this city, a pretty little North End house, has been having quite a checkered career lately, which has included a change in management of at least three times. Mr. Charles Hill, well known in Toronto as a successful exhibitor, has now taken over the house and it is expected that he will bring back its old time success.

THREE RIVERS, P. Q., June.—This town has been running in a very depressed state of business as far as the movie and amusement enterprises are concerned. The Gaiety Theatre is still running, also the Casino, but the Victoria has already been opened and closed several times, although this latter house is the nicest and most modern of the three, it seems as if the town cannot support two theatres, let alone three under present conditions.

MONTREAL, P. Q., June.—The summer season is opening in Montreal in spite of backward weather. The King Edward Park, situated on the River St. Lawrence, is now announced open and will include among its attractions one or more high class movie shows. Steamers are now running from the suburbs of Montreal to the park.

It is worth noting that the production of films in Canada is rapidly increasing, and this applies to commercial, topical and even photo dramas. The Kauffman moving picture industry in Montreal is now making industrial films and has turned out 1,150 feet of pictures, covering the brewing laundry, paint and baking businesses of Montreal. The Strand Theatre of Toronto is producing its own topical films, photographed in and about the city, while the Canada Film Company of Galt, Ont., is producing patriotic Canadian dramas.

Baseball still holds a prominent place in the interests of Montreal film men. The Universal team is still champion of the informal league that exists, but the Metro team has been making a splendid showing lately. An odd rule of this league is that members of competing teams must not indulge in practice during daylight hours, as it is contended that this would take the men away from their regular routine of business and make the competition unfair.

MANY strange and weird things have happened, and become historic parts of Universal Serials, but one of the strangest has just occurred in Toronto, Ont. An East End House in this city, has been running "Peg o' the Ring" for the last two or three weeks, and it will be remembered that in one of the episodes a group of particularly ferocious appearing lions hold the center of the stage, through nearly the whole episode.

It happened that just at the time these lions were stalking about in the den where Peg was imprisoned, and the drummer was making very realistic noises with his apparatus, a middle aged gentleman, more or less completely intoxicated, happened to decide that he wished to visit a Movie Picture house, and accordingly, after buying his ticket, toddled into a back seat in the darkened theatre. The glare of the light on the screen immediately attracted his befuddled gaze, and as comprehension wholly dawned, the lions seemed to stalk forward into very formidable size. The alcoholic gentleman started to his feet with a scream of fear, and proceeded to have a most elaborate case of delirium tremens. It is even said that his case was so bad, that as they removed him from the theatre, he insisted that the pretty ticket collector was also an animal, and persisted in calling her a bear.

CAMP BORDEN, Ont., June.—It has been rumored that a huge moving picture theatre, seating at least 2,000 persons, is to be erected inside the camp lines of Pine Plains for the entertainment of the thousands of troops composing the latest regiments of the Canadian volunteer army here. Toronto exchange managers are already arranging photoplay bookings for this house, which, it is expected, will be opened before July 1st. It is said that the theatre will consider only the best class of films and will be somewhat under the supervision of the military authorities owing to its presence within the camp lines. It is thought that Mr. M. S. Marvin, manager of the big Strand Theatre, Toronto, will be the manager of this house. This will be, as far as can be determined, the first case of a moving picture theatre being practically managed for the exclusive use of soldiers.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June.—Mr. Finch, manager of the Universal branch in this city, reports that he succeeded in booking the new Universal serial, "Peg o' the Ring," in the Columbia Theatre, the foremost vaudeville house in the city. This is the second instance of this serial being booked in vaudeville houses in Canada.

Clara Beyers, a popular Universal actress, who occupies a prominent part in several Red Feather features, is a great favorite in Vancouver, where she appeared with the Empress Stock Company several seasons before going into the movies. Vancouver citizens throng to see her whenever she appears upon the local screen.

Universal Will Shine at Chicago

GET ready for Chicago!

This is the order Joe Brandt, General Manager of the Uiversal Film Manufacturing Company, sent out almost before the decorations had been taken down at the close of the exposition at Madison Square Garden a couple of months ago, and, ever since that day the Universal offices have been very busy with plans, maps, designs and other paraphernalia for the Coliseum show which promises to eclipse everything in the motion picture exposition line during the year.

One of the busiest men in Chicago has been Francis J. Flaherty, the manager of the Universal Booking Offices, who writes that all he has been doing for the past three or four weeks is receiving cases of all shapes and sizes from New York, filled with every conceivable novelty. At the present time there are twenty-two cases of "everything" stacked high up in his office, while ten more are being held at the express office awaiting the signal for the manufacturers to rush to the work of getting their displays ready.

At this exposition the first two exhibits, as the visitor enters the building, will be the Bluebird and Universal. They will be the largest on the floor and promise to be different from all others. The Bluebird display will consist of a beautiful arbor of trellis work, covered with beautiful flowers. Bluebirds, in cages, will hang between the six arches, bearing the message: "The Play's the Thing."

Rustic benches will be placed under the arbors and beautiful souvenirs will be given out.

The Universal is going to do wonders. Joe Brandt has a lot of big things up his sleeve which he refuses to divulge, but he warns all others to beware of him. Up to the present he has spent five thousand dollars on the two exhibits, and, by the time the show is over it is safe to predict that Joe will have spent close to seven or eight thousand dollars in his effort to lead all others. He will leave for Chicago next Friday and will remain there for several days. Others who will be on hand from the Universal will be President Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, Maurice Fleckles. In fact, all the big men of the Universal are going to be on hand, and it is said that they are going to pull one of the biggest stunts imaginable at this show, and they are all going to be there in order to see that it is carried out successfully. Although every attempt as been made to learn the naturne of this big surprise the Universal officails refuse to even hint at it.

When we pause to consider what the Universal did at the Grand Central Palace and Madison Square Garden earlier in the year, we have no fear but that they will make good this threat.

DINNER TO LEE OCHS.

AS will be seen by the cut at the bottom of this page, there was a fine turn-out at the dinner given at Brigton Beach Casino last Wednesday night in honor of Lee A. Ochs, president of the local Exhibitors' League. The dinner, which took the form of a beefsteak, was the opening gun of a campaign on the part of his countless friends to make Mr. Ochs president of the national exhibitors' body at the convention which opens at the Coliseum in Chicago on July 10.

There was much speaking, praise of Mr. Ochs and gift-giving, Stephen Bush proving one of the happiest of gift bestowers in the recollection of the writer, and showing a leniency toward Hartsell's Oriental Orgy which would qualify him for the job of dealing with Mexico. William Johnson spoke fluently and without revealing his hand, and Arthur James, after professing that he did not come to cast a wreath of poison ivy on the grave of the Board of Trade, selected a nice fat portion of misteak (?) and crunched it happily for Mr. Ochs' delectation.

Mr. William Brady paid the Universal an unintentional compliment in endorsing the policy it has adopted.

"I have always been a good showman, a good businessman and have learned much about the motion picture industry in the short time I have been in it, and I sound a dangerous note of warning to you, not to forget that the program is the backbone of the moving picture industry."

Detroit Exchange in New Quarters De Luxe

THE Detroit Film Exchange is now established in its new offices at 101 Fort Street, West, and every member of the staff is delighted at the change. Whereas the old five-story building at 159 Jefferson Avenue, had its disadvantages, the new quarters have "class" throughout. The building into which Geo. W. Weeks, General Manager of the Michigan-Northwestern Ohio Division of the Universal, and M. S. Bailey, manager of the Detroit exchange, moved after the disastrous fire at the Jefferson Avenue headquarters might have been constructed for a bank. It is a two-story structure of modified classic design with a sloping attic roof. Surrounded on all sides by skyscrapers, it presents the same appearance of stability that a Knickerbocker Trust Co. bank building gives as it nestles among tall neighboring office and loft buildings.

Upon the destruction of the Universal exchange in Jefferson Avenue, Mr. Weeks scurried around trying to find other quarters. He met with great difficulty, owing to the stringent restrictions placed upon him by the fire and building departments who were determined that there should be no recurrence of the disastrous blaze.

Finally the building at 101 Fort Street, West, was chosen. A rear extension houses the film exchange offices, the patching and rewinding girls and the shipping departments, while in front, facing Fort Street, are the offices of Mr. Weeks, R. S. Bendel, manager of the Bluebird exchange, M. S. Bailey, Joseph Diener, booking agent for the Universal, Fred T. Grenell, at the head of the new publicity department, and a large staff of stenographers and clerks. The exchange employs thirty people, and is open day and night.

Immediately following the fire the Metro and General Film Exchange people in Detroit extended every courtesy to the Universal and the exchange never missed a shipment. All the Universal's customers rallied around the staunch old program and not an account was lost.

Mr. Grenell who heads the new publicity department at Detroit, formerly did the press work for several of the largest of Detroit's picture theatres. He is well known in Detroit newspaper offices having the reputation of being the livest planter of news stories in the City of the Straits.

"THE BULLETIN" ENTERS NATIONAL CLASS—ORGAN OF CANADIAN UNIVERSAL FILM CO. MAKES WIDE APPEAL

TORONTO, ONT.—A distinct innovation has been installed by the Canadian Universal Film Company in Toronto since last year. This was the establishment of an "Exhibitors' Aid and Advertising Department." This department which was to be an important section of the Publicity Department of the company was placed under the supervision of Mr. W. A. Bach, a well known advertising man in Toronto.

Mr. Bach, from his experience in other mercantile lines, decided that the key to publicity success in Canada for a film company was through the exhibitor. He planned to educate the exhibitors to the value of real, tried advertising methods, as used in other businesses. By helping the exhibitor make money the company would in turn derive greater profits and be enabled to retain their business to a greater degree. Accordingly, the new department busied itself, with the inauguration of a complete system for disseminating among the exhibitors, the newest and best advertising ideas, systems, stunts, etc. All advance advertising work was looked after by the department free of charge.

To further the work of helping the exhibitor a weekly paper was put out and called the "Bulletin." Starting with a single page, this house organ has graduated from this class into a fuller mission, that of a national movie paper, printing news from all portions of Canada, from coast to coast, in addition to current movie news of the producing and exhibiting field. "The Bulletin" is now eight pages and with the current issue has opened its columns to display advertising. Mr. Bach gives the exhibitors of Canada a great measure of credit for the success of the work of his department which covers the seven offices of the Universal Company in Canada and states that the exhibitors have appreciated his policy of the "Exhibitor First" and by their cooperation he has been enabled to do the work he set out to do.

The film business is in many instances hopelessly behind regular mercantile lines for business efficiency, and it has been Mr. Bach's aim to bring to all the ramifications of his publicity work, the business training gained in his pre-film experience. An idea of the success of the Universal Company's policies and methods in Canada may be had when it is known that at present in Ontario over 60 per cent of the business being done passes through the Universal office.

George A. Fisher, Circulation manager of the San Francisco Chronicle.

GEORGE FISHER MAKES SHORT VISIT TO NEW YORK

GEORGE A. FISCHER, circulation manager of the San Francisco Chronicle, the man who made it possible for Universal officials and the girls of the Beauty Trip to see the exposition at San Francisco under the most favorable circumstances, is in our midst. There is no more popular man in San Francisco than George A. Fischer, and in spite of the fact that he is three thousand miles away from New York, he has a whole host of friends in newspaper and publicity circles in this city. Mr. Fischer came on to the International Circulation Managers' Association in Grand Rapids, and after its sessions were finished he took the occasion to come to New York to make arrangements for running the next Universal serial, "Liberty, or A Daughter of the U. S. A." in the Chronicle. This was no very hard job, and he is putting in the rest of his stay in New York in renewing acquaintances with his host of friends here.

Carl Laemmle, Joe Brandt, Nat Rothstein, H. H. Van Loan and George Kann, and, in fact, every one of the Universalites who has been to the Coast, are all willing to swear that George Fischer is the finest man in Frisco, and during his stay have endeavored to make his time pass as agreeably as possible.

A great many other film companies have had occasion to appreciate the effectiveness and friendship of Mr. Fischer, and he is having his hands full attending to social engagements.

On the most Popular News-Subject of the Day

Everywhere in this broad land of ours flags are waving; bands are playing; fathers, mothers, wives, children and sweet-hearts are saying good-by to thousands of Uncle Sam's khaki boys. Danger, adventure and excitement await the boys at the front—but what of those left behind? Newspaper circulations will increase by leaps and bounds. Everyone wants the news from the front; from the border; from the concentration camps.

And they will want more than news, because the has taught them that they can see the boys as they live in camp and march and fight; see them in thrilling pictures of the actual scenes. An expert corps of daring cameramen are on the job. They are sending in thousands of feet of film daily. They are covering all the interesting features of the situation as they develop from day to day.

Here is a rare opportunity for wide-awake Exhibitors. The Universal is always first with the world's best news. That is why it is the most popular news weekly shown on Broadway, New York, where competition is the keenest. That is your assurance that the Universal Animated Weekly will give your patrons the war news in pictures that they want.

That is why the Universal Animated Weekly will pack your house on the dullest day. Every Exhibitor has one dull day a week. Run the Universal Animated on your dull day and you won't have any dull day. Wire or write for full particulars today to

Friend Schnitzer:—

I am coming back to my old friend, "Universal Program," again, and I intend to remain with it, too.

You well know it was the general opinion for awhile that the feature program was the program for all exhibitors to use. And, like nearly all exhibitors, I fell for them, BUT IT WAS TO MY OWN DETRIMENT THAT I DID SO.

I tried features out good and strong, and now say "Never Again" for me. Give me that good reliable Universal Program for my house.

My patrons DON'T WANT LONG-DRAWN OUT FEATURES ANY MORE. Give me the short stories and some good comedies.

I want to start using your service as soon as I can get through with my contract with these feature people. Can I get on, say, about the third of July, or not later than the tenth?

When I gave my patrons the tip that I intended to go back to Universal Program they did not lose time in spreading the news, and I am constantly being congratulated upon the change. And, frankly, I'm congratulating myself. With best wishes,

W. H. LIPPS.

"Bill" Ganz, correspondent of the Moving Picture Weekly and representative of the Animated in Philadelphia. Ganz is the only paid news cameraman in Philadelphia. He is also the star cameraman of the Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

ANIMATED SHOWS HOW TO FIGHT THE EPIDEMIC

THE pictures were taken by an Animated Weekly topical news cameraman at the expense of the Universal at the Rockefeller Institute at Sixty-sixth street and Avenue A under the direction of one of the aides of Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the laboratory for medical research.

Other views were taken with the assistance of two inspectors from the Board of Health in the South Brooklyn district, in the Erie Basin district of Brooklyn, on the lower East Side, in Richmond Borough and in the Bronx. Included in the film are scenes showing the affected districts, stricken children, sanitary precautions necessary to prevent the further spread of the disease, how mothers may detect the first symptoms of the disease in their children, "close-ups" of the medical treatment given the children, scenes showing the exodus of children from the city to the country to escape the plague, taken at the railroad and ferry terminals, and the activity of the quarantine, Board of Health and hospital authorities.

The "leaders" or titles on the film are written in English, Italian and Jewish so that all may understand. A representative of the Board of Health spent yesterday (Friday) afternoon at the offices of the Universal Film Company, 1600 Broadway, assembling the picture, writing in the titles and preparing the film for exhibition at New York's 800 picture theatres.

The expense of making the picture will total $4,700, and this expense the Universal has shouldered in an effort to stop the spread of the disease. The fifteen prints made from the original negative for simultaneous projection in the picture theatres of Greater New York will be presented outright to the Board of Health. No admission will be charged to the theatres where the pictures are shown.

This film is in this week's Animated Weekly, and besides being of great interest, should help to stop the spread of the disease to other cities.

77TH BATTALION RECEIVES COLORS

THE ceremony of receiving the colors of the 77th Battalion of Canadian troops was a very impressive one. It is shown in detail in the 28th number of the Animated. First the mules were inspected. Then the battalion marched by, looking especially fit. The colors were then presented, Major General Sir Sam Hughes consecrating them. After saluting the colors the troops were reviewed, which ended the ceremony.

MEXICAN BATTLE SURVIVORS RETURN.

ISSUE Twenty-eight of the Universal Animated Weekly contains a full view of the survivors of the Carrizal battle returning. The men, who came by way of the International Bridge, escorted by Mexicans, are stripped of their uniforms. After being thoroughly fumigated to shake the germs of Mexico forever from their bodies, the men are dressed in overalls and sent to Fort Bliss. After bidding farewell to their Mexican captors, the men go on their way to El Paso. Here they are cheered by the citizens and flowers are showered in their path. They then arrive back at Fort Bliss after their adventure.

Captain Morey, the only surviving officer, is shown, as are Generals Bell and Gonzales, commanders on opposite sides of the border.

DIVING BEAUTIES.

ISSUE 28 of the Universal Animated Weekly shows the winner and runner-up of the Women's National Diving Championship. Miss Aileen Allen, of Los Angeles, was the winner, and Miss Meyer, of Portland, Ore., was second in the contest. They are shown diving in the ocean and in the natatorium at Ocean Park, California.

Other events in the Weekly are President Wilson and Samuel Gompers, labor chief, reviewing a parade in Washington; physical culture exhibition by the school children in the stadium of the College of the City of New York; Knight's Templar parade in Los Angeles; banners of Dominions honored in Cathedral service at St. Paul's, London; newly elected president of Federation of Women's Clubs welcomed home, Los Angeles; refugees from Mexico reach U. S. in Galveston, Tex.; trained horses take daring high dives at Glen Island, N. Y.

UNIVERSAL CITY, July 20, 1916.—It was announced in these columns only a few weeks ago that Beverly Griffith, of the Universal Animated Weekly staff, had returned from Mexico, where he had been engaged for several months with the cameramen of the Universal's news pictorial in filming scenes along the border and with the American troops in the southern republic, "just to get a few clean collars and some home-cooked meals."

While Griffith was gathering the collars and stowing away the succulent viands prepared by the good folks at home, the news of the serious developments below the border came over the wires and Griffith packed his grip, secured from Edward Uhlman, chief of the Universal cinematographers, the best Animated Weekly cameraman available, Robert Walters, and together they took the first train out for El Paso.

They joined the Universal Animated Weekly cameramen at the front in less than 48 hours, and several rolls of film already received by Vice-president and General Manager Davis show that Griffith and Walters lost no time in getting "close up" to the military activities below the line.

Louise Lovely Stars in "The Grasp of Greed"

John Meeson makes his will.

A FIVE - REEL Bluebird Feature Production, starring Louise Lovely, supported by Jay Belasco, Lon Chaney and Gretchen Lederer. From the novel by H. Rider Haggard, "Mr. Meeson's Will."

CAST.

Alice Gordon	Louise Lovely
Lady Holmhurst	Gretchen Lederer
Jimmie	Lon Chaney

THERE was a time when the writings of H. Rider Haggard had the effect of creating a positive mania among readers of fiction, and right up to the circulation of his last work his novels sold into the million copies, translated into many languages and read around the world.

The famous author of "She" gained great riches through his imaginative genius and his talent for hitching his novel fancies together in fascinating narrative form. Everything he wrote was eagerly snapped up and read with absorbing interest by devotees of fiction.

It is therefore surprising that producers of photoplays have not, ere this, turned to the abundance that Haggard contributed to literature for subjects to convert into camera-dramas.

Since her arrival from Australia, the first of the year, Louise Lovely has made a remarkable record for repeated success in every screen-effort she has undertaken as a star of Bluebird Photoplays. Finding her first place as an "extra" in Joseph De Grasse's company, she was changed to the leading role in "The Grip of Jealousy" before she had been three months "on the job."

Lady Holmhurst and Alice play with the child.

Her success in the very first feature she ever posed for, fixed her station as a Bluebird star and in the six months that this superior line of photoplays have been on exhibition, Miss Lovely has been the star in such noteworthy screen successes as "Tangled Hearts," "The Gilded Spider" and "Bobbie of the Ballet."

In this play she goes thru the remarkable experience of having a will tattooed on her back. But Miss Lovely was not daunted and cheerfully submitted her back to the tattooers. We have inside information, however, that the tattooing was of the burnt cork variety. The story of "The Grasp of Greed" follows.

Alice Gordon, a rising young authoress, has sold to the firm of Meeson & Co. the rights to her works. The contract is made before one of her books has reached such great popularity that her reputation is made and her fortune assured. Alice has an invalid sister dependent upon her for support and when a sudden change comes in the sick girl's condition, it is necessary for Alice to raise money immediately.

Going to John Meeson, she i gruffly told by the old miser that he contract clearly stipulates unde what terms she could get money an how much she could get. Meeson ha a nephew, his only heir. The hand some young man enters the offic while Alice is discussing money mat ters with the miserly old publisher.

When Alice has departed, th nephew engages his uncle in an exciting argument and finally the bo tears up the contract which Alic has made with Meeson & Co., because it was so unjust to the girl This incident so embitters the miserly old Meeson that he draws a new will, leaving his entire fortune to his partner in business.

Meeson's nephew has been rather smitten with Alice and spends his time trying to find the girl at her home address. When he finally manages to see her and explains what he has done, she expresses her sincere gratitude. Alice tells him that she will go to Australia, where a rival publishing concern has made her a tempting offer for her future literary efforts.

Meanwhile the invalid sister has died and Alice sails for Australia. Meeson learns of the offer and sails on the same ship with the intention of buying out the Australian publishing house. The ship bearing Alice and old Meeson is wrecked. Old Meeson, in attempt to save his skin, when he is not allowed to take his place in the first boats among the women and children, jumps overboard. Alice prevails upon the sailors who man the boat she is in, to haul the old miser on board.

The party is finally cast away on a desert island. Old age and the severity of his experience brings Meeson close to death and his conscience smites him. He would now gladly change his will, but there is no parchment or writing materials with which he may record his last testament. One of the sailors is an experienced tattoo artist and a plan is finally devised that the will of Meeson shall be tattooed with a sharp fish bone upon the back of a little boy who is among the castaways. The black fluid contained in the sack of a cuttle fish is to supply the ink.

When it comes to the actual performance of tattooing, the girl objects to the little boy being made the victim and renders her own back as the parchment upon which the will shall be written. Eventually the castaways are rescued. Alice and the little boy are safely returned to London, where they arrive at about the time Meeson's will is being probated in favor of his business partners.

Alice enters court at a critical moment and offers Meeson's last will in evidence. The dignified judges examine the document and pass the will around the courtroom for scrutiny. They finally admit that the strange document is the last valid and legal will of the late John Meeson. The happy ending is inevitable, Meeson's nephew marrying both the will and the girl, thus keeping them in the family.

The will is probated in court in a dramatic manner.

UNIVERSAL TAKES FILMS OF PARALYSIS PLAGUE

THE Universal Animated Weekly has entered into arrangements with the New York Department of Health to film a series of views showing how the spread of the infantile paralysis scourge may be checked. New York's fathers and mothers are terrified at the rapid spread of the disease which on July 4, in one day alone, claimed 27 lives in the various boroughs and was rapidly spreading. In twenty-four hours 59 new cases were reported. Since the disease first broke out in South Brooklyn late in June, 480 cases have been treated with a terrifying mortality rate, and preparations at the city hospitals have been made to treat 1500 more cases.

Scenes at the hospitals, illustrations of practical measures to stop the spread of the disease, the activities of the Bureau of Child Hygiene, the Bureau of Infectious Diseases, quarantine officials, the Health Department, the frantic attempt of the hospital authorities to supply cribs for the stricken children and to collect them in hospital ambulances, the medical treatment advisable in the prevention of the disease, flagrant violations of the sanitary code and the exodus of fifty thousand babies from New York—all will be shown in the film which the Animated Weekly has secured permission to take as part of the campaign to stamp out the disease.

AGED NEGRO MAN IS FILM ACTOR

ONE of the oldest actors, in point of years, at Universal City, is W. H. Bogle, 81 years of age, who plays the role of a butler in many of the big productions. Bogle is a colored man, born in North Carolina.

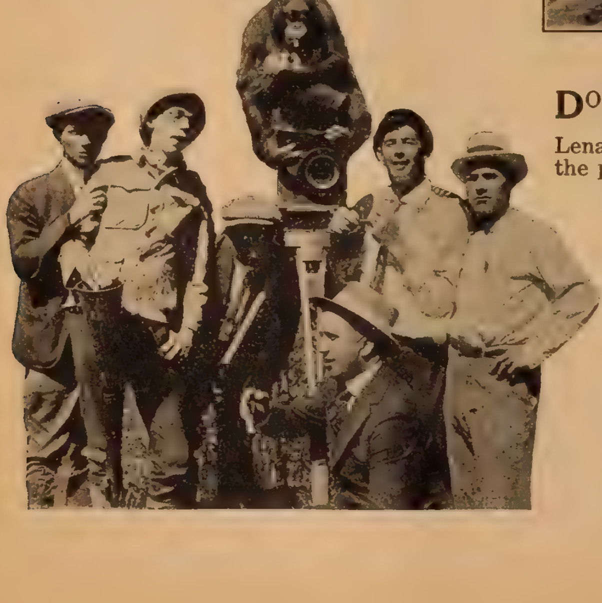
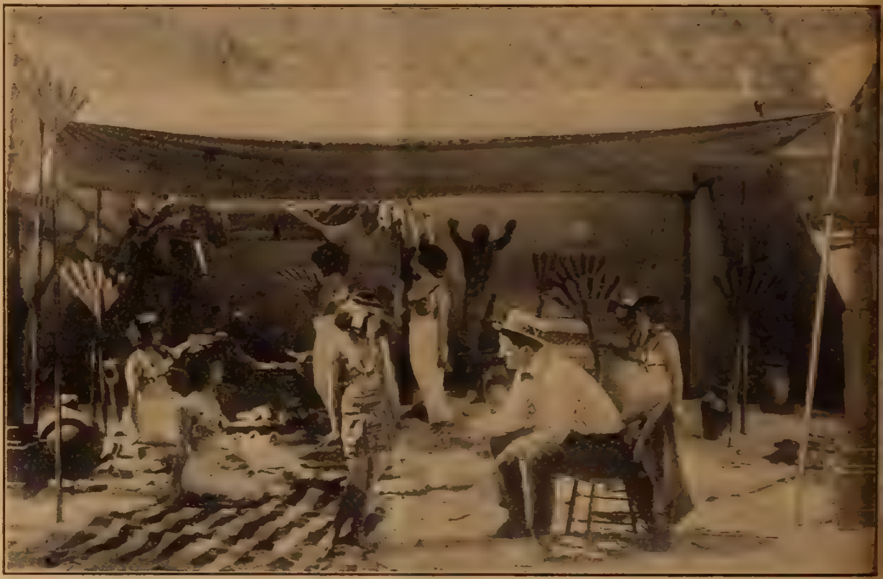
THEY FOUND "THE MISSING LINK."

BEVERLY GRIFFITH has not been sure of where he was going to hang his hat for the last two months. The prospect of war in Mexico dragged him down there with Gilbert Warrenton, his cameraman, and he had no sooner gotten back to Universal City, and realized the promise of a full directorship, when he was ordered back to the border. During his short interval in Universal City, however, he managed to put on a film written by F. M. Wiltermood, called "The Missing Link." For the stars in this comedy Griffith secured Victor Potel and Joe Martin, the educated ape, who may be seen perched cozily on the top of the camera smoking a cigarette. Potel is the elongated person with his hand carelessly thrust into the barrel of his blunderbus, and Beverly Griffith is seated in the center of the picture.





LENA BASKETTE IN A STUDIO DESERT PICTURE.

DON'T be deceived by this picture, which shows Raymond Wells, one of Universal City's newest directors, giving instructions to little Lena Baskette. It has every appearance of a desert scene, and when the picture is shown, the illusion will be even more complete than it is here. In reality, however, this desert scene was set on one of Universal City's largest stages, as it required a number of architectural features and a complement of players which it would be difficult to transport to Oxnard Desert, where the rest of this film was taken. Raymond Wells gained a tremendous reputation throughout California for the artistic way in which he staged the "Julius Caesar" outdoor pageant, at Hollywood, which will live long in the memory of all Californians as the most wonderful outdoor spectacle ever beheld under the southern California sun. He seems destined to achieve a like reputation with the Universal, which has just secured his services. His first film will be called "The Caravan," and was written by himself, in three reels. It stars Lena Baskette, the nine-year-old actress-dancer, who has already made a real place for herself in pictures in which she has appeared both, as star and as support.

THE "LIBERTY" COMPANY POSES.

AT the earnest solicitation of M. G. Jonas, manager of the Universal City publicity bureau, Jacques Jaccard, director of the latest Universal serial, "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," devoted ten minutes of the precious time of his company to posing for a still picture which we reproduce herewith. Marie Walcamp, who plays the role of Liberty Horton with a trumpet in her hand; Jack Holt, who enacts the part of Bob Rutledge, wearing a misplaced eyebrow, a wide sombrero hat and a shirt which would be the envy of a Montana miner and Maud Emory, a recent acquisition to the Universal, are in the center of the picture. Directly below Miss Walcamp Jacques Jaccard, the director, is kneeling, with a cigarette in his face and a revolver strapped to his hip. Why he uses this revolver we do not know yet. Eddie Polo, Universal City's champion scrapper, strong man and stunt puller, kneels at his left, and G. Raymond Nye, whose reputation in all of these departments is rapidly approaching Polo's, is kneeling at his right hand. Back of Nye will be seen Neal Hart, who plays the role of one of the trustees, and Townsend Harris, who plays that of the other. Back of Miss Emory stands Roy Stuart, a newcomer to Universal stock, although he played in two Universal pictures almost two years ago. He plays the role of Col. Dalton. Bertram Grassby will be found kneeling at the left of Eddie Polo. Grassby plays the role of Manuel Leon, the rival of Bob Rutledge for the hand of Liberty Horton. Joe Rickson, who made such a sensational jump over the cliff in "The Committee on Credentials," is seen with a Mexican sombrero and two cartridge belts over his shoulder.

BEAR LAKE HAPPY HUNTING GROUND.

MANY Universal directors who have wanted unusually beautiful atmosphere and background for their pictures, have chosen Bear Lake for its fine imitation of the Canadian northwest heavily wooded lakes. Lynn Reynolds needed just this kind of an atmosphere for "The Girl of Lost Lake," which he is filming, with Myrtle Gonzalez featured. So he took his entire company to this choice spot in lower California, where they are seen in the accompanying illustration. From left to right the names of those in the lower row are George Hernandez, Fred Church, Lynn Reynolds, Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul, Jack Curtis and Albert MacQuarrie. Myrtle Gonzalez is holding her pet owl, Oswald, in her hands and Lynn Reynolds, director of the company, is affectionately grasping his pet pipe.

Flora Parker De Haven Stars in "The Seekers"

Ruth is chosen by ballot to accompany John in founding a new colony.

THIS is the second picture that Flora Parker De Haven has starred in since she was put under the direction of Otis Turner. The whole production shows the mark of Mrs. De Haven's personality as well as the stamp of Mr. Turner's faultless production. The Seekers are portrayed in all their peculiarities of dress and mannerism. The Seeker village is worked out in very fine detail.

A feature of the picture is Lem Heck's escape from prison. He is packed in a case by one of the other convicts and smuggled out. The box is put on a train, from which Lem escapes by jumping on to the trestle while the train is moving and then dropping many feet into the river below.

Ruth Heck	Flora Parker
Lem Heck	Paul Byron
Rev. Israel Mount	Charles Mailes
John Mount	Edward Hearn

The character of old Rev. Mount is very well drawn. The man sees that Ruth and John still love each other after the estrangement, so when John is chosen as the one to go out that year to found the new colony, he shyly substitutes for the slips with different girls' names, slips with Ruth Heck written on each. Thus he brings his son together with the girl he loves and their difference is soon forgotten. The story, in brief, follows:

Ruth and Lem Heck are orphans. Ruth is a little village nurse, in a small town populated by a religious sect called "The Seekers." Their object is to seek those that are needy and administer to their needs. Ruth and Lem live with Rev. Hood, where Ruth works in the household, for her brother's and her board. Lem is apprentice in a machine shop. Two crooks, in the machine shop, plan to rob the village bank and steal Lem's tools for the deed. The morning after the crime the tools are found and Lem is accused of the deed. The boy is sentenced to the State penitentiary for fifteen years.

Three years pass. Ruth laments the absence of her brother, who chaffs under the strict discipline of the jail, and his health is failing. Rev. Timothy Hood heeds the call of another little village of the same sect, to send them a nurse, and sends Ruth. She arrives at the little village of Canaan Mountain and is met by Sheriff John Mount, the son of Rev. Israel Mount, with whom she is to live. Ruth is soon established in the household and her kindness wins the hearts of all. One Sabbath a drunken brute is abusing his wife at the very door of the church. John interferes and a struggle ensues, in which he is almost shot, but Ruth slips from the church in time to dash the gun from the hands of the drunken man. Later she administers to the poor wife and gains their friendship. John takes her fishing in the mountains and the brute, who happens to be hunting, sees them. He shoots at John, who is upon a boulder, and John falls unconscious into a rough stream from which Ruth bravely rescues him. She makes a wild dash down the mountain side and falls fainting at the doctor's cabin.

John falls in love with his nurse.

John discovers Lem and Ruth.

Ruth borrows the money from Mount.

John is brought back and Ruth nurses him, and they become engaged. Lem, the brother, is shipped out of jail by an old convict, who places him in a huge packing box which he is filling. Lem makes his escape from the baggage train as it crosses a trestle over the river. He swims ashore and makes his way into the woods. He comes to where Ruth lives and they meet in the woods. A gossip sees them in each other's arms and spreads the news that Ruth is untrue to John, her betrothed. He refuses to believe the tales brought to him. Ruth hides Lem in the barn and continues to visit him at night. Her actions are suspicious and John has all he can do to trust her. It happens that Ruth is compelled to borrow fifty dollars from Rev. Mount, and signs a note for same, promising to work off the debt. She hies away to the barn and John, aroused to action, follows her and sees her give Lem the money and kiss him. He confronts them, and Ruth tells the truth. They plead for liberty, but John's sense of duty is greater, and he starts to take Lem back, but Lem fights for his liberty. His manhood awakens and the struggle begins. Ruth watches the fight and is torn between the two loves. At last, when John is gaining over her brother, she takes an iron chain and strikes John unconscious, then she allows Lem to escape by the river. In the struggle the lantern upsets and when Ruth returns to the barn she finds it in flames. She manages to rescue John and when the crowd of villagers are gathered there, she fears that John will tell what she did, but he tells that he fell and caused the accident himself.

Their first meeting.

Several months pass, in which Ruth works off the debt, and the lovers are estranged. It comes the customary time to send a young couple to another part of the mountains to establish a new settlement. The selected ones are chosen by lottery. John is the young man chosen and Rev. Mount realizes that Ruth and John are torn with anxiety as to who will be the chosen wife. When the day comes the maidens cast their names in the box, and the chosen one on the lottery day is Ruth. They are happy and are married. After they have gone, Rev. Mount takes from a hiding place the pile of slips that the maidens cast hopefully in the box and burns them. The night before the lottery day he has refilled the box with slips of paper, each one containing the name of Ruth Heck, that she would be sure to be the chosen one.

In a big city Lem, the brother, is at work at a printing shop. At every sound he starts guiltily, thinking that some one will arrest him. A man rushes in with a slip of paper and tells Lem to rush it out in type for the next edition. Lem reads the paper, and it is an account of his acquittal and the full confession of the two crooks who robbed the bank.

The State has pardoned his escape and only want news of his whereabouts. Lem is happy that he is at last free. Ruth and John continue on their way over the mountains into the sunset in the old buggy.

Mary Griggs from Hoop Centre, Kansas, arrives in New York, and as she is signing at the hotel register, attracts the attention of Blake and Riley, a couple of confidence men.

The bellboy takes her bag and shows her to her room, where she exhibits a huge roll of bills. She tips him a nickel and the boy promptly hands it back to her in disgust.

On his return to the hotel lobby the boy tells the clerk what happened.

We now see Blake and Riley going to the phone booth, while Harrington, an accomplice, goes up in the elevator and gains access to Mary's room. Mary greets him cordially, and gets very communicative about her private affairs.

Meanwhile, Blake has called up Fanny, another accomplice, who plays the "little sister" and tells her to prepare a lunch for four. After her chat with Harrington, Mary agrees to meet his sister at luncheon, after which he is to take her to the lawyer's office in a taxi.

Before leaving the hotel lobby, Harrington introduces Mary to Blake and Riley, and invites them to the propsed luncheon at his sister's apartment. The "little sister" greets them, and when Fanny is out of the room Mary gazes with admiration at the apartment, and remarks: "I'll have a home like this, when I get the $300,000."

The confidence men question her in regard to that large amount and she shows them a letter from her lawyer, John Pierson, informing her that her uncle has left her $300,000, stipulating that in order to obtain this inheritance she must first show $5,000 in cash, honestly earned. She said she had the cash with her.

Later, the crooks accompany Mary to the law offices of John Pierson. Mary suddenly discovers that she has lost her roll, and gets excited.

Riley takes Blake aside and whispers: "Fanny must have double-crossed us. Beat it to Sullivan's and get $5,000—tell him he'll be in on the deal."

Shortly afterwards Blake returns with the required amount. The lawyer now comes out of his private office and confers with Mary. Then he turns to the confidence men and says: "You'll find cigars in my private office, gentlemen." As soon as the confidence men have left the room, he takes a key from his pocket and noiselessly locks the door after them. Then he removes his disguise and kisses Mary as she shows him the $5,000 that Blake had just handed her, together with the original $5,000, which she has been concealing all the time.

"SHE WAS SOME VAMPIRE."

Written and Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

The Vampire	Gale Henry
The Discarded Lover,	Milburn Moranti
Heinie	Charles Conklin
Detective Binks	William Franey
His Wife	Lillian Peacock

She was a beach vampire. Moranti, one of her discarded lovers, sells pencils and shoestrings for a living, and another of her lovers is the owner of a peanut stand. Moranti finds his lovely ideal on the beach one day and pleads with her to accept his love, but she flouts him and goes to the stand of Heinie, and while he makes love to her she eats his peanuts.

Detective Binks has a wife and two children, but is inclined to flirt. He is taking his two kids out for an airing and they beg for peanuts. He comes up to the stand and, pulling out a large roll of bills, starts to get them a sack. The vampire sees the roll and sets her cap for him at once. Binks is not so bashful, either.

He and the vamp. find a deserted spot on the beach and sit beside a boat. While the kids are playing in the sand the vampire uses all her arts on Binks. They make a date for the next day, which the little Binks overhear.

Heinie and Moranti see the vampire's fresh prey and resolve to re-

"PEG O' THE RING," Episode Twelve

"ON THE HIGH SEAS," No. 12. Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, contains a peach of a sea fight and a fall over a precipice. Directed by Francis Ford; scenario by Grace Cunard. Two Reels.

CAST.

Peg	Grace Cunard
Doctor Lund, Junior	Francis Ford
Doctor Lund, Senior	Marc Fenton
Mrs. Lund	Jean Hathaway
Flip, the Clown	Pete Gerald
Marcus, the Hindoo	Irving Lippner

As Episode 12, "On the High Seas," begins the chance acquaintance of Dr. Lund, Jr., has just been knocked on the head by the river pirates. Their only protection being thus removed, Peg and Dr. Lund, who have sought safety on the after deck of the pirate vessel, are in imminent danger of being recaptured by the harbor pirates, but Dr. Lund's friend recovers consciousness quicker than his assailants had expected, and sneaks up behind them with a revolver. This turns the tide again in his favor, and after a hard, spectacular fight all over the main deck, the three finally jump to safety and swim to the small launch on which Dr. Lund pursued the pirate vessel.

In the meantime the circus people discover Peg's absence, and after some difficulty trace her to the dock from which she was kidnapped. As they reach it the launch lands, and for the first time in months things seem to have straightened themselves out. Dr. Lund offers the hospitality of the circus to the young man who has so staunchly stood by him, and much to his own relief, he hands over Peg's much-fought-over letter to Peg, who turns it over to Flip. Behind the curtain of his dressing room, however, this action is seen by Marcus and another member of Mrs. Lund's gang. Flip hides the letter and starts to dress for the performance, but before the time for the curtain to go up he falls from a trunk and badly sprains his ankle. The manager sees the fix he is in and threatens to fire him if he is not in condition to play that night. Peg, dressed for her own act, comes into Flip's dressing room, and learning of his accident, and the danger in which he stands, she offers to play his role, and under his direction puts on the dress and grease paint of the circus clown.

Mrs. Lund has become impatient at the failure of her gangsters to obtain the letter, and goes herself to the show. Her boys tell her where the letter is, and she advises them to wait until after the show before trying to get it from Flip, for she believes that he has it on his person.

Peg goes on in place of Flip, and makes a big hit as a circus clown, going through his act with even more verve and abandon than Flip had been able to put into his performance. When her act is over, and she is about to run into Flip's dressing-room, she is seized in strong arms, a heavy hand is clapped over her mouth, and she is thrown into an automobile, gagged and bound, and taken to an unoccupied house a short distance from the circus. The girl's absence, of course, is discovered almost instantly, and Dr. Lund, Jr., is the first one to pick up a hot trail. He finally traces Peg to the unoccupied house, breaks into it through a window and crashes through the door just in time to receive the butt end of a revolver on his head, knocking him out completely.

In the excitement, however, Peg embraces her opportunity and jumps out of the window through which Dr. Lund had entered. She runs to the gateway entrance and hides there. The ruffians catch a glimpse of a white figure running outside, and, supposing it to be Peg, one of them fires a shot, bringing down the figure. In the uncertain light they have killed the owner of the house, however, instead of Peg. When they discover their error they decide to tie up Dr. Lund so that he will not be able to escape when he recovers consciousness and make a get-away, but their plans are frustrated through the wonderful vitality of Dr. Lund, who works his way painfully to the window which he had broken, and on the jagged glass which still remains in the frame he cuts the cords which bind his wrists, with the loss of considerable blood in the procedure. Peg has been able to make good her escape, but unfortunately for her, the hour when her strange inheritance frequently takes possession of her approaches and she becomes for the time being a jibbering, irresponsible maniac. She shrieks and tears through the grounds surrounding the house where she had been confined, creating a commotion which alarms the entire household.

Alice Howell's new car.

ALICE HOWELL'S FAVORITE COSTUME FOR MOTOR DRIVING

THE citizens of Los Angeles are often treated to an L-KO Komedy free of charge when Alice Howell drives her car to and from the studio. Alice can often be seen tearing through the streets at a mile a minute, dressed in her characteristic Komedy Kostume. The answer is that the stunts done by the company require early starts, so Miss Howell usually puts on her make-up at home and drives to the studio in costume. At night she is usually too tired to take it off, so comes home as she is. It may be added, however, that when so attired Alice does not let any moss grow under the wheels of her car. She is here shown in her famous get-up beside her car. We also had a picture of Alice in the car and at the wheel, showing conclusively that she can drive the car, though we have no picture of her license. But some other editor needed the other pictures. We had our choice, anyway. A moving picture of the way Alice Howell drives the car would be very illuminating, as illustrative of the L-KO police methods, and it may be that the Moving Picture Weekly will one of these days release movies.

PEGGY COUDRAY, MONG'S LEADING LADY.

WILLIAM V. MONG is working on two pictures at once, at Universal City.

He has selected Peggy Coudray for his leading lady, and the titian-haired actress will play with him in the two film plays now under production.

ZOE RAE CHANGES NAME, LEARNS TO DANCE AND HAS WHOOPING COUGH.

LITTLE ZOE RAE has had so many experiences lately that it is hard to see how they could all happen to so little a lady. Zoe is one of the cleverest child actresses in the moving picture field, although nothing but a tiny tot. To begin with, her name has undergone two alterations. It was formerly Zoe Bech. Then Zoe Du Rae. But this was found too hard to pronounce, and so a slice had to be taken out in the middle. Besides even this short name was too long for such a tiny mite of a girl. It is really a shame to deprive the little lady of anything, even a part of her name which she does not need, but it does not matter so much with girls, as sooner or later they all have their names changed anyway.

Another new experience for Zoe is dancing. She shares her dressing-room with Lena Baskette, noted as a child dancer, and frequently they are favored by a visit from little Dorothy Clark, who is a toe dancer besides doing other fancy steps. The children have a phonograph in their room with a number of dance records, and the older girls are teaching the little actress various steps. Little Lena is a very good teacher as well as a remarkable dancer, so that Zoe is making very rapid progress. She has already passed the first stage of awkwardness, and is now doing some of the steps with the ease and grace of an old-timer. The children take as much interest in their dancing as they do in their school, which is maintained at Universal City especially for the benefit of the kiddies.

Besides her dancing lessons Zoe is also taking lessons in the art of driving an automobile. She has just bought a new car out of her own earnings, which is a remarkable thing for a little girl to accomplish. The other day Zoe arrived at the studio in her car and was actually driving it herself. She had her hand on the wheel guilding the car, although, of course, her mother who is her constant attendant, was helping just a bit. Zoe is already practicing so that when she grows up she can do thrilling auto stunts before the camera.

Zoe, when acting, is a delight to the hearts of the directors. She obeys orders perfectly, which is more than can be said of some of the older stars. In fact, the other day, she was almost too willing. During the filming of a photoplay at Universal City a few days ago, Director Rupert Julian was directing her in a scene in which she was required to weep bitterly. Julian worked on her feelings so completely that the child burst into tears. Julian is one of the most tender-hearted of men, and the sight of the tears actually coursing down her cheeks so overcame him that he had to postpone the action of the scene until he could regain his own lost composure.

The great infantile disease, whooping cough, has not spared Universal City and it has attacked young and old. Zoe Rae is among those who are just recovering from the annoying complaint. Zoe, little Clara Horton, comedian Pat Rooney and director Roy Clements all had it at the same time, and their whoops have been rolling all over the city. She now, however, has quite recovered and is at present working on another picture.

And while on the subject of infantile Universalites we cannot forget to mention Lena Baskette. Lena, who is a favorite with all the people at the city, is under a long time contract with the Universal. She is now being starred in the new pictures called "The Caravan," written and directed by Raymond Wells, who produced the Julius Caesar spectacle in Hollywood a few weeks ago.

Zoe Rae learns dancing under the instruction of Lena Baskette and Dorothy Clark.

Two Noted Principals in The New Serial, "Liberty"

JACK JACCARD is making extremely rapid progress with the next Universal serial, "Liberty, or, A Daughter of the U. S. A." He has completed the first episode, which will be called "Across the Border,: and is already starting upon the second, to which the title, "Fangs of the Wolf," has been given. The photographs which appear on this page are of Marie Walcamp in the dress and character of Liberty Horton, heiress to a huge ranch in Mexico, and Jack Holt, who plays the role of her lover, Bob Rutledge, a lieutenant in the United States Army. Next week we will reproduce on a similar page photographs of Eddie Polo, who plays the role of Liberty's protector; G. Raymond Nye, who plays the part of Pancho Lopez, one of the trustees of Liberty Horton's vast estate, and Neal Hart, who plays the other trustee, Major Winston.

Marie Walcamp is shown here in the dress of a trooper, which she wears part of the time in the serial, in which she has a great deal of riding to do. Miss Walcamp will dare and do anything which is asked of her and has never had a substitute for any stunt. She is fearless and intrepid to a degree and as eager for a difficult feat as the ordinary actor is for the spotlight.

Jack Holt has been with the Universal for almost two years, and in that time has played almost as many roles which require physical courage and agility as Eddie Polo, the recognized champion stunt-puller of the Pacific Coast. This will be the third Universal serial in which he has participated, for he made his first appearance at Universal City while "The Black Box" was being filmed, and although he did not play an extremely important role in this serial, he did take a prominent part in "The Broken Coin." He has appeared in a number of the Ford-Cunard releases on the regular Universal program, and in a number of Broadway and Red Feather features. His role in "Liberty" will be a rather new experience for him, in that he plays a straight character, whereas heretofore, on account of his atheletic prowess, he has usually been cast in the role of the heavy. As Bob Rutledge, lieutenant, and suitor for the hand of Liberty, he will inevitably build up a strong bond of sympathy for himself, as all of his directors have declared that he was capable of playing an excellent hero as well as a desperate villain.

Jack Holt, as Lieut. Bob Rutledge.

Marie Walcamp as Liberty Horton.

Of course the two ruffians hear and follow her. When they discover that it is Peg they resolve to put an end to her at once and for all, although they feel the same restraint which all men do in face of insanity. It is this alone which saves Peg's life as she nears a precipice overlooking the ocean.

As Peg perches on the very brink, her distorted countenance resembling nothing so much as a jabbering monkey, her pursuers close in on her. She threatens to throw herself off the brink, but they only laugh and draw nearer. As they are about to lay hands upon her she makes the crazy jump and crashes down thirty or forty feet, landing bruised and cramped on a shelf of rock, but fortunately restored to her senses. As the crooks look down upon her they hear Dr. Lund behind them and hide in a crevice. With one look over the rock Dr. Lund sizes up the situation and runs to the nearest habitation for a rope.

Fastening one end of the rope to a huge tree trunk, and tying it securely, he throws the other over the rock and goes down hand over hand to Peg's assistance. After comforting her and assuring himself that she is not seriously injured he ties the rope about her preparatory to climbing up himself and pulling her up, but a devilish scheme is being hatched above him. The ruffians, seeing both of the objects of their warfare together, and in such a precarious position, decide first to shoot them. But shooting is too tame for these arch villains. Something which they can enjoy longer is much more in the line of the villainous Hindu and his companion in audacious crime. As the episode fades out they are seen hacking at the rope which is all that lies between Dr. Lund and his companion and either starvation or destruction on the rocks one hundred feet below.

"The Crystal's Warning"

HENRY CHADWICK, a wealthy young diplomat, arrives in Washington with his wife, Florence, to take up his duties in his newly appointed post the State Deparement. A mysterious sensuous, and fascinating woman, Madame Nadra Darak, known as The Sphinx, is the talk of all Washington.

Some time after he has been in Washington, Henry is introduced to Madame Darak by some of his diplomatic friends. As the weeks pass, he neglects his work and his wife, and his fascination for The Sphinx is becoming the talk of the social circles in which he moves.

Previous to his association with The Sphinx, Henry had met Baron Haddad Haig, a high class Indian diplomat, on many occasions. One night, while Henry is alone with The Sphinx, a noise is heard at the window, and a figure enters the room. The Sphinx rises and looks toward the window with terror-stricken eyes. Henry looks also, and to his amazement, sees Baron Haddad Haig.

Henry attacks the baron and is advised to leave at once by The Sphinx.

Outside the house of mystery, two low caste Hindoos, Jang and Hago, have watched the entrance of the intruder into The Sphinx's apartment, and they then glide off into the night.

The next day Henry attacks the Baron in his club, vowing to kill him, but his friends manage to hush up the incident.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama with an Eastern element. A stolen ruby is the center of this remarkable story.

CAST.

Henry Chadwick	Hobart Henley

Madame Darak	Clara Beyers
Baron Haddad Haig Nassib Haig	Sydney Bracey
Secretary of State	Joseph Granby

That evening, Henry goes as usual to visit The Sphinx. A face appears in at the window and The Sphinx puts out the light in terror. She leads Henry into a vault-like room, where we see the God Vishnu, and in front of the image lies an enormous ruby looking like a flaming eye. She asks Henry to take the ruby with him and keep it until she sends for it.

At the window, the face of Baron Haddad Haig disappears into the night. Henry goes home, and The Sphinx sits there thinking under the spell of her Hindoo crystal.

The vampire sees in the crystal that she loves Henry.

Next we see the picture of Baron Haddad Haig passing down the street,

PAT ROONEY IN "The Belle and the Bell Hop"

PAT ROONEY is the ideal bellboy. Indeed, it is impossible to imagine any one but Pat in this part. Read the following story and judge for yourself:

David Kelly, known as Cricket, is bell hop at one of the large metropolitan hotels. Selden is the head clerk and the bane of "Cricket's" life. Mary McFee, the cigar counter girl, is the idol of the bell hop's heart.

Jack Hewlitt, a drummer, arrives at the hotel, and at once finds Mary to his liking. He hangs around her counter and wins the undying hatred of "Cricket" for paying so much attention to his girl.

General Grouch, an old veteran, arrives at the hotel. He angrily orders the bell boys away when they try to take his luggage, but "Cricket outwits him and takes charge of his baggage by force. In the days that pass "Cricket" grows fond of the crusty old man, and does many kind services for him. He notes the growing interest between Mary and Jack with dismay and resolves to do something desperate to break off their interest in each other.

The General's nephew is staying at the hotel and is quite a "rounder." He has many friends for his spending propensity and never pays any attention to his uncle. The old man finally takes sick. He refuses to have a doctor and gets worse. "Cricket" sees the old man is in bad shape and one day stops a doctor who is calling, and asks him what he charges for a visit. The medical man tells him two dollars, and after a vigorous search, "Cricket" digs up the amount in nickels and dimes and pays him for a visit to the old grouch.

CAST.

David (Cricket) Kelly	Pat Rooney
Selden	Jay Belasco
Bliss	H. M. Thurston
Mary McFee	Adele Farrington
General Grouch	O. C. Jackson
Col. Souse	Marc Robbins
Jack Hewlitt	Hayward Mack

The old man is touched by the boy's thoughtfulness for him and agrees to an examination. The doctor tells him that his condition is serious and orders him sent to a hospital. Before leaving, however, he writes out a legal paper, which the doctor witnesses, and he presents it to "Cricket," telling him to keep it safely.

"Cricket" learns that Mary and Jack are going out to supper and resolves to follow them. Jack sends him to his room for a box, containing a present for Mary, and the boy opens the box and substitutes a photo of Jack's wife and child for the present, then ties the box up.

"Cricket" learns that Grouch has died, but does not think of the paper he has.

Jack has taken Mary to a cheap restaurant, where he tries to caress her. She repulses him, and thinking to placate her he opens the box supposed to contain a present for her. When Mary sees the photo she rushes out to "Cricket," who takes her home.

While "Cricket" is waiting on his bench he idly takes out the paper. It is the will of Old Grouch giving him his entire estate. With a whoop of joy he dances around and the others think he is crazy. He has found that Mary looks upon him differently since he has rescued her from Jack, and goes to her now. He begs her to marry him, and she consents. With this good news he quits his job.

That night he tells Mary of his millions, and lays the will on the table. Mary sadly tells him that she could never marry him now as he is a millionaire. "Cricket" vainly pleads with her. In his pleading he drops his cigarette and the will catches fire. Mary then agrees to marry him. He hurries to the phone and getting Bliss on the line tells him to hold the job of assistant clerk for him. Bliss agrees, and Mary will soon be Mrs. "Cricket."

"Midwinter Madness"

Rosalie Sinks, a bullet in her arm.

Her heart is touched by his kindness.

BISON Two-Reel Drama. Written and produced by Winthrop Kelley.

CAST.

Rosalie Lenormand	Dorothy Phillips
Jean Lenormand, her husband	Stanley Walpole
Pierre Laroux	Barrington Barringer
Olympe	Nellie Slattery

ROSALIE, previous to her marriage to Jean Lenormand, had been wooed by a handsome young trapper, Pierre Laroux. It was principally Pierre's unfortunate weakness for drink that induced Rosalie to discard him in favor of the steady-going Jean. But life in Jean Lenormand's cabin is an endless round of drudgery for Rosalie. But although they are poor they are happy in the love of their child, Cecile.

In the opening scene we see Jean leaving for a hard day's work. Rosalie scrubs the floor, and pauses in her work to comfort her child, who seems to be ailing. Then she goes out to chop wood.

Pierre comes and leans over the fence near Jean's cabin. Rosalie recalls her former love for him and lowers her eyes in confusion. Pierre's love is reawakened, and he resolves to win her.

Jean returns at supper time and discovers a bandanna handkerchief, which rouses his suspicions. But he tries to shake off his jealousy as he enters the cabin and kisses his wife with genuine affection.

Later, however, he is tortured by his suspicions, and seeks oblivion at the village saloon. Leaving the saloon slightly intoxicated, he encounters Pierre, whose insolent manner causes Jean to confront him with the accusing evidence of the handkerchief. They draw knives and proceed to fight it out.

Jean gets the worst of it.

Several men rush out of the saloon and find Jean in a helpless condition, from a broken leg. So they lift him up and carry him to his cabin where Rosalie is watching at the bedside of her sick child.

On Saturday night, Olympe Thury, a shamless woman, is comforting her child. One of her lovers enters and invites her to the dance hall. She protests that she cannot leave her nursing baby, and he tells her to take the child along.

At the Lenormand cabin, Jean is in a feverish condition from his broken leg, and Rosalie is worn out from watching at her child's bedside. Jean betrays undue irritation and she gets vexed at his continued irritability. In a moment of anger, he tells her to go to her lover, Pierre Laroux, and obtain the money that is due her as the wages of sin.

As she wraps her shawl about her head, she shouts, "I'll not be accused without cause, I'm going to Pierre Laroux." Then she stumbles into the night, and rushes down the hill to the dance hall. There she seeks out Pierre, and whispers, "I am yours tonight, if you will take me."

Prominent among the dancers we see Olympe. Presently an infant's wail arises from a back room.

Olympe, hearing her baby crying, goes into the back room to nurse it.

Wanton that she is, she is still at heart a loving mother.

Rosalie realizes, for the first time, that she is neglecting her sick child at home, and considers herself a viler sinner than the poor drab she has slandered. Rosalie breaks away

"Branscombe's Pal", Rex Society Drama

Nick delivers the note.

Bob cheats at cards.

SELF-SACRIFICE so supreme is rarely seen, even on the screen, as is displayed in this picture. For the sake of the girl he loves, Jack loses friends, fortune and happiness. Only his dog remains true to him in his misfortune. One of the features of this picture is "Nick," the one who finally succeeds in bringing Helen and Jack together after their misunderstanding. The part of "Nick" is played by "Nick" himself. "Nick," allow us to say, is the dog.

Bob Caerlon is an extravagant youth who has run into debt. When his father refuses to help him his sister, Helen, offers to sell her jewelry to pay his bills, but she cannot give him enough.

Helen loves Bob's chum, Jack Branscombe. Jack agrees to help Bob for his sister's sake. He takes Bob to his apartment and there indorses Bob's note for $4,000, payable in four months' time. Bob leaves for the club to celebrate with Payne, another suitor for Helen's hand.

Helen sends a note to Jack telling him to come over that night, and he sends back his dog, Nick, with a note saying that he will come. However, on his way to see her he stops at the club to get his mail. Here he meets Bob and Payne, who invite him to join a game of cards. Jack stays to to take care of Bob and sends a note to Helen saying that he is detained. When Helen, upon telephoning the club, finds that Jack is there, she is very angry and writes that all is over between them.

TWO-REEL Rex Society Drama. Written by Bannister Merriam and produced by Harold Shaw. The story of a friendship that was too great and a faithful dog.

In the meanwhile Bob has been losing heavily and decides to cheat in order to recoup his fortunes. Bob is accused of cheating and a group quickly gathers. Just then Jack receives Helen's note and is so disgusted with it all that he says he is the one who has cheated.

In his apartments Jack is consoled by his dog, Nick. Bob follows him home to tell him he is sorry for what happened. Jack advises him to go to Canada to avoid disgrace.

Several months later the note which Jack indorsed comes due and Jack, in order to pay it is forced to move into less expensive apartments and write for his living.

A year later he receives a letter from Bob saying that he has struck it rich and is coming home to make amends. Jack falls asleep with Bob's letter in his hand and while asleep calls out Helen's name. Nick hears the name and thinks his master wants him to carry the letter to Helen. So he seizes the letter in his mouth and runs with it to Helen's house.

Helen is glad to hear the truth of what actually happened on the fatal night, especially as she was about to marry Payne. Bob returns and is welcomed by all the family. It only remains for Nick to lead the way to Jack and all is serene.

NOTED SINGER VISITS UNIVERSAL.

ONE of the most interested visitors at Universal City in the last week was Mme. Rappold, the famous grand opera singer, who spent an afternoon at the film capital greeting the stars and watching how motion pictures are made.

The singer was accompanied by Miss Lillian Rappold, Arthur Walsh, violinist, and Verdi E. B. Fuller, of the Edison Company, her manager. Mme. Rappold was delighted with her visit and said she expected to visit California again during the year and would devote at that time an entire day to the motion picture studios at Universal City.

Mme. Rappold posed for photographs with Harry Depp and members of the Richard Donaldson company who were making a comedy in a beautiful cabaret scene.

"KILL THE UMPIRE."

CAST.

Mr. Fan	Eddie Lyons
Mrs. Fan	Eileen Sedgwick
"Bull" Dugan	Lee Moran
Jane	Mina Cunard

Mr. Fan is all that his name implies, for he can neither eat, sleep nor drink without mentioning baseball. The particular bane of his life is the umpire. No matter how the game goes, the umpire does the wrong thing.

Mrs. Fan knows as much about the game as the wildest savage, and her husband's talk of the game is naturally wasted on her. One day she is particularly worried over her husband's remarks at the table and he shows her a notice in the papers in "fan lingo" stating that a new umpire has been secured in the person of "Bull" Dugan. The said "Bull" has quite a reputation for quieting players who get unruly, and even have the fans themselves using the soft pedal. Of course, all this is Greek to her, and Mr. Fan is too excited over the news to explain further; he must seek out his cronies and discuss the new change.

The friends all agree the change is for the worse, but try to calm Mr. Fan. He rages all the way to the ball grounds and threatens dire things to the umpire should he not do the right thing. The game is called. Mr. Fan at once draws attention to himself by guying the umpire, and for a moment "gets the umpire's goat." However, it is for a moment only, and the renowned "Bull" takes a long look at Mr. Fan, intending to settle with him later. The game is a hot one and the excitement is intense. Mr. Fan keeps guying the umpire and in a frenzy at a decision which allows the visiting team to win, Mr. Fan hurls an empty bottle, which knocks Mr. "Bull" out. His friends help him to get out.

Mrs. Fan arrives home and finds a card from a former girl friend who is visiting in the town and will be glad to have Mrs. Fan call upon her. Mr. Fan and a friend decide to have a drink on the way home, and stop in at a saloon. Unfortunately, it is the same one that "Bull" has stopped at and the two come face to face. There is a tense silence and Mr. Fan takes safety in flight. "Bull" pursues, but fear lends wings to Mr. Fan's feet, and he arrives home safely. Jane, the friend, phones Mrs. Fan and begs to bring her husband over, stating that he is a baseball man, and then Mrs. Fan tells her that their husbands must surely meet as they both are in the game.

They meet that night. Mr. Fan almost has heart failure when he sees "Bull," but peace is finally declared and now Mr. Fan is the most ardent supporter of Umpire Dugan.

A Poor Poet	Billy Armstrong
His Rival	Phil Dunham
The Girl	Getrude Selby

They are rivals for the love of a girl of mere acquaintance. One was a poor poet, the other a haphazard nincompoop.

The poet became peeved and nonchalantly chucked his rival into the park pond. The girl ran away and the rivals met again, but this time the wet one was determined to fight and Mr. Poet was forced to defend himself.

He was being hard pressed when a little miss from nowhere stepped in and separted them and threw the wet one back into the pond.

A park bird saw and decided that the poet had no right to so sweet a girl and so the poor poet fell out of the frying pan into the fire.

They had a duel, which resulted in the most exciting and surprising manner imaginable. To get the full humor is impossible from mere words.

KING BAGGOT IN "HIS OWN STORY."

Big U One-Reel Drama.

Written and Produced by George A. Lessey.

CAST.

King Baggot	By Himself
Bill Harding	William Bailey
Mag	Jane Courtney

While at the Screen Club one day, Dan Clayton, a moving picture director, offers $50 for a good one-reel story. It is suggested that King Baggot repeat the story of his own experience that he told the previous evening. Mr. Baggot consents and the story is visualized on the screen.

King and his friend, Bill Harding, are struggling with smugglers on a deserted island, somewhere near the northern coast of Canada. They are overpowered and locked in a hut.

Mag, a girl whom the smugglers have captured and made their drudge, decides to help them.

Mag proceeds to dig a hole in the rear of the hut. King and Bill hear a grating sound and ascertain that some one has started to dig them out. Accordingly, they begin digging from their end, and the secret passage is completed in short order. Mag assists the captives to crawl out, and takes council with them as to how they can make their joint escape.

The men tackle the sleeping guard and after knocking him senseless, overpower and bind the smuggler who has been left in charge of the smuggler's headquarters.

Meanwhile they sight a ship in the distance and signal it with an improvised flag.

A boat is lowered from the ship and is sent to rescue them. It turns out that the ship they have signaled is an American yacht that was fitted out for the express purpose of going in search of King and Bill.

King, Bill and Mag are rowed toward the yacht, and after they have been hoisted on board the Captain tells King that he had almost given him up for lost. King explains that he and Bill had been shipwrecked and held captive by the smugglers, and is overjoyed that the yacht has arrived in time to save them from their peril, and also to rescue the girl who risked her life in coming to their assistance.

In the next scene we see Clayton handing Mr. Baggot a check for $50, declaring that the adventure ought to prove very effective when thrown an the screen.

Martin Ellis	William Garwood
Eva Warren	Violet Mersereau
"Second Story" Pete	Paddy Sullivan

Martin Ellis goes to visit his friend, Neil Spencer. Neil has been called out of town, but leaves a note telling Martin to climb in the window. Martin arrives and enters as per instructions. That same night two others arrive the same way, "Second Story" Pete and Eva Warren, who is being initiated into a Bachelor Girls' Club.

Martin sees the crook and at once notifies the police. His courage then deserts him and he takes refuge in a bed. Eva, dressed in man's clothing, he mistakes for an accomplice of the burglar, and being a timid man by nature, our hero seeks refuge in a bed. Eva is also frightened by one look at Pete and takes refuge in the same bed.

Then Neil returns from his trip with a policeman that Martin has telephoned for. Pete escapes, but Martin and Eva are discovered in a compromising position. To save Eva's reputation Martin says that she is his wife. The girl consents, so they marry and live happily ever after.

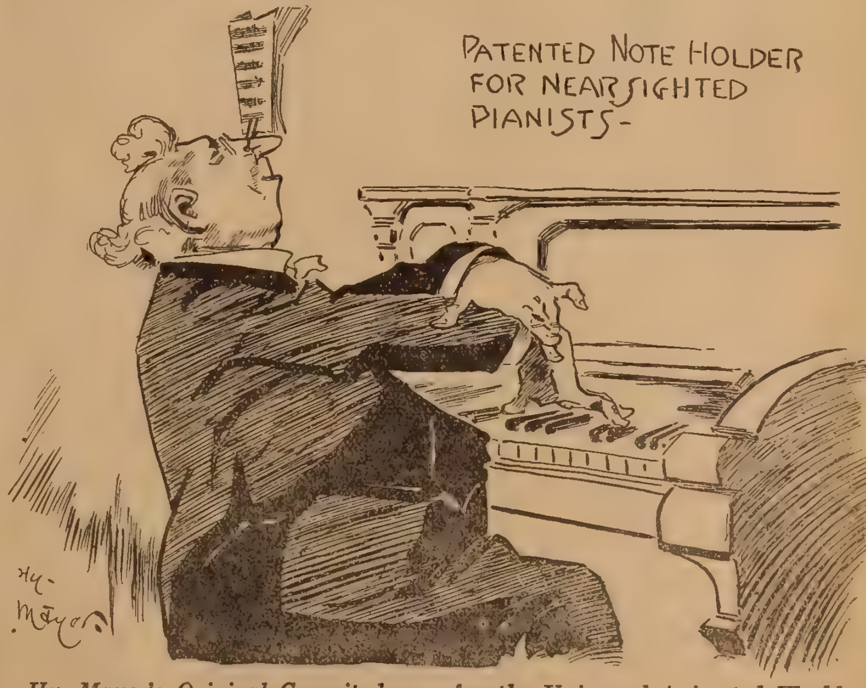
Lazybones	Billie Ritchie
The Husband	Bill Bevan
The Wife	Lucile Hutton

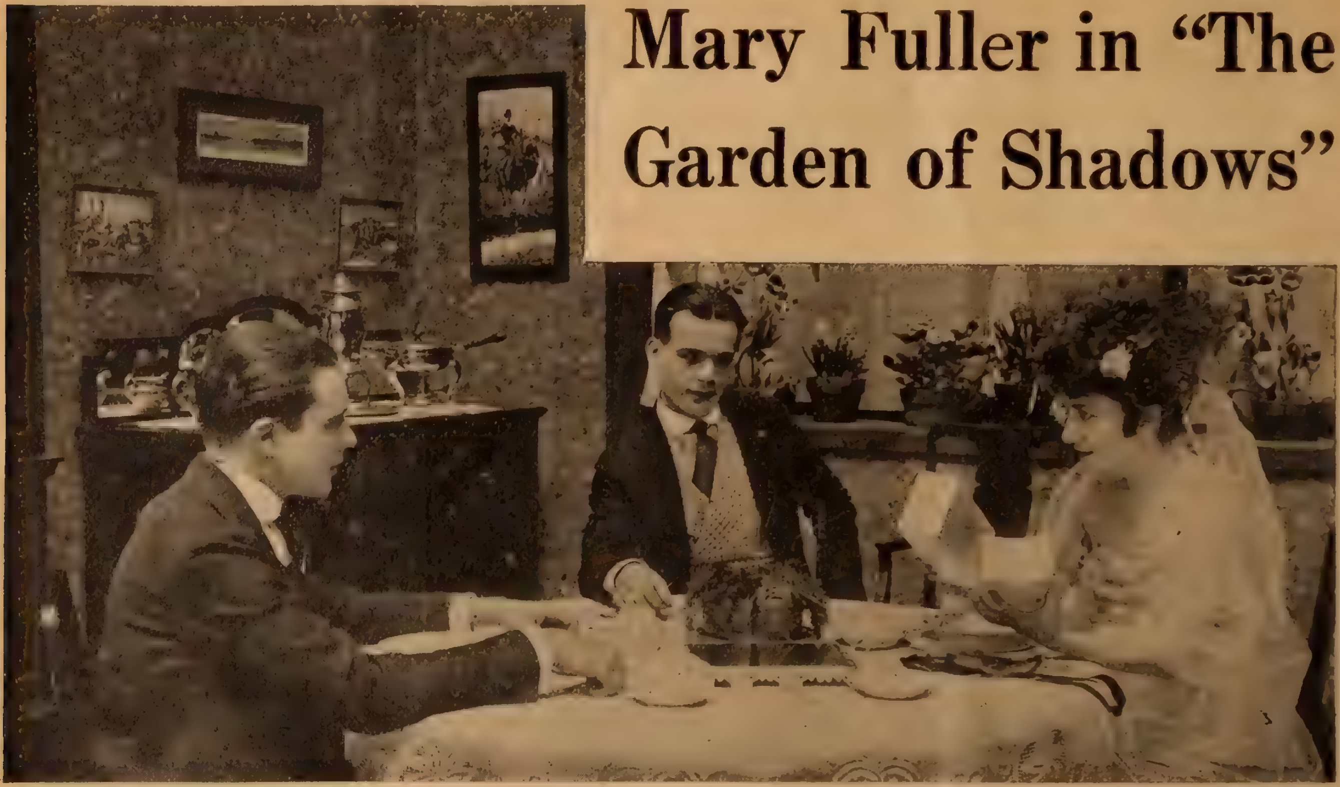
Lazybones loved to sleep and smoke but most of all he loved his neighbor's wife. Loving a neighbor's wife is all right if you do not persist in being caught by her hubby, or forcing your attentions on her when she does not want you. Lucile wanted to do the right thing, but circumstances seemed against her. Hubby was a very jealous old man, and whenever he caught his wife talking to another man the blood boiled in his veins and he wanted to murder. Fate decreed that wifey should be placed in a peculiar circumstance, which almost verged on a tragedy, and Lazybones was the only one at hand to rescue her. But rescue was hardly made when hubby appeared on the scene and demanded an explanation. Hubby wanted to murder. The chase was terrible over the roofs, up and down elevators. Lazybones was finally caught in a little house on the roof and hubby decided that he would end it all by shoving said little house over the edge to the hard street below. Lazybones, however, would not die alone and dragged hubby into the little house just as it was toppling over the edge, so wifey was left minus a husband.



PATENTED NOTE HOLDER FOR NEARSIGHTED PIANISTS-
Hy. Mayer

Hy. Mayer's Original Conceit drawn for the Universal Animated Weekly.

Mary Fuller in “The Garden of Shadows”



The father brings his friend home to dinner.

MARY FULLER is always herself, but in this picture she shows to particular advantage. There is nothing at all of the sensational, no “stunt” of any kind; just Mary Fuller as her own sweet self in a story that is old as the earth, yet one which never loses its interest as it reaches the very heart of human emotions. Some may think that the ending is a bit strained in order to make it end happily, but the authoress claims that the story was suggested to her by an actual incident very much similar.

A child of some friends of Miss Printzlau's was taken suddenly ill with what seemed to be only a sore throat. But the child grew rapidly worse and in a few hours was unconscious. The doctor pronounced it dead, but the parents would not take the physician's word and tried to resuscitate the baby. Their efforts were rewarded and the child lived to grow to maturity. Miss Printzlau says that she has had the incident in her mind for some time, but was at a loss for a suitable plot in which to use it.

The story in brief follows:

The father is busy with his business. The little child is neglected as the mother is occupied in romantic speculations. And then enters the “friend,” who sees his opportunity.

LAEMMLE Two-Reel Modern Society Drama. Produced by Lucius Henderson. It is the same old story of the triangle to be broken only by the entrance of a fourth factor, the child. A fine emotional role for Mary Fuller in the part of the wife. Written by Olga Printzlau.

The Mother	Mary Fuller
The Father	Niles Welsh
The Child	Violet Axtell

One evening when the father is detained on business the wife accepts the “friend's” invitation to theatre. The father returns and finds his wife gone. When the child tells where the mother is he realizes that her love has flown, and the next morning he arranges for a separation.

A year passes and the mother and child are living together, lonely. The “friend” sends her roses and says he is coming that night to claim his love. While dressing, the mother accidentally finds a white rose that her husband gave her a year before, on their wedding anniversary. Memories come back to her, but she disregards them and rushes into the garden to meet her friend.

The child being alone and frightened goes to find its mother in the garden. The child picks a white rose and approaches with it. This brings the mother to her senses and she rushes back to the house with her baby.

The baby then takes sick from exposure. The father is sent for, but before he arrives the baby apparently dies. The mother and father are reconciled by their common grief. In the garden the mother sees a vision of her child, which she follows to the house. Here they find that the child is still alive, and so the family is happily reunited.

DIRECTOR STUART PATON'S TEAR-PRODUCING METHODS.

STUART PATON, the Universal director now at Universal City, employs an unusual method to make the feminine members of his company weep. He makes them laugh!

Paton is a canny Scot and is blessed with the gift of being able to tell as many funny stories as the well known Harry Lauder.

So, in order to make his actresses become “like Niobe, all tears,” he tells them funny stories. Then his subjects laugh till the tears come.

HERBERT RAWLINSON in

"Lee Blount Goes Home"

Jane pleads with Lee.

Lee arrives home.

Lee escapes.

THIS is the last program feature in which Herbert Rawlinson will appear for some time. He has been shifted and is now appearing only in special Universal features. Herbert here appears in a dramatic role, although he is equally good, if not better, in comedy parts. The story, in brief, follows:

Lee Blount is serving a life sentence for a crime. He has just received a letter from his wife telling of her struggle against starvation. She does not complain for her own, but for their child's sake. She pleads for some kind of help. She also tells Lee that Billy-Lo, a supposed friend of the family, has been calling at the house frequently. As Lee reads the letter, the incidents leading up to his arrest come back to him:

Billy-Lo, an old pal of Lee's, who has gone wrong, is often importuned by Lee to live a better life. One day Billy-Lo shoots a policeman and while escaping runs into Lee. Lee is upbraiding him for some misdeeeds, when the poilcemen hurry on. While they are talking, Billy has slipped the revolver with which he shot the policeman, into Lee's pocket and so causes Lee's conviction.

He sinks on his cot and his mind is full of bitter thoughts. He removes a file he has hidden in his bed and bows his head in thought.

The next day Billy Lo reads of Lee's escape and notices the offer of five hundred dollars' reward for his capture. Billy knows where to find Lee and sneaks to the latter's home.

Lee, meanwhile, has managed to reach his home safely. He tells his wife to get her things together quickly and they will leave for the West.

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Produced by William Worthington. She dreams of a broken-hearted prisoner, which ends in his release.

Lee Blount	Herbert Rawlinson
Billy-Lo	William Quinn
The Warden	William Canfield
Jane	Agnes Vernon

However, Billy comes, and Blount hides in the closet. Lee's wife tells Billy her husband is not there. But just as he starts to leave he notices Lee's hat, and drawing his gun orders Lee to come out. Lee flies into a rage and the two men engage in a terrific fight. Billy is knocked out and Lee throws him into the closet.

Lee, learning of the reward for his capture, tells his wife that he could never escape. He forces her to phone the officers that she has captured Lee Blount.. The officers arrive and he is taken in charge. The wife is given the money and just as they start to leave the child opens the door and Billy Lo is discovered. Billy has died from the fight and the officers take both Lee and his wife.

But it was all only a dream. The warden enters to tell Lee that Billy has confessed and he is free.

FORD AND CUNARD REALIZE ON FORGOTTEN GRUBSTAKE.

FRANCIS FORD and Grace Cunard grubstaked a down-and-out prospector at Bisbee, Cal., nearly three months ago. Last week they received a telegram from the man they had helped, telling them that their share in his claims amounted to forty thousand dollars. Ford and Miss Cunard called their claim "Peg O' the Ring," and their choice seems to have brought them luck.

Some time ago, while Ford and Miss Cunard were working on the edge of the desert above Bisbee, Cal., in "The Broken Coin," they ran across a prospector who was staking into some tungstun claims. The prospector told Ford that he lacked means to develop his claims and Ford induced Grace Cunard to invest some of her savings with him in backing the prospector. Both Ford and Miss Cunard then dismissed the matter from their minds, thinking that their money had gone the way of countless other half-dollars for chances on this and chances on that.

The prospector, however, struck it rich. When Ford heard of his luck he sent his brother, Jack, to investigate. Jack reported in such glowing terms that Miss Cunard decided not to sell her share of the "Peg O' the Ring" mine, at any rate not until the serial has run its course, for fear that it would bring her bad luck.

WELLS TO FILM "THE CARAVAN"

DIRECTOR RAYMOND G. Wells, who recently has joined the production forces of Universal City, is making preparations to film his own story, "The Caravan," featuring Lena Baskette, the wonderful actress-dancer, with Claire McDowell, another recent acquisition from the Biograph. It is doubtful if there is a more versatile actress before the camera today than Miss McDowell, and very few who are better known for remarkable work on the screen.

Many of the scenes will be taken on the desert of Southern California, where the real Egyptian atmosphere will be provided.

Written and Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

CAST.

The Man	G. Raymond Nye
The Girl	Roberta Wilson
The Man's Wife	Jessie Arnold
The Idler	W. J. Hageman
The Roue	Frank McQuarrie

The man is married to a woman whose entire time is spent in having a good time socially. The climax comes when the wife tells her husband to have dinner at the club as she is entertaining, and the husband tells her that, as she cares for society more than she does for him, the best course for her is to get a divorce. She replies complacently that she intends to live her life to suit herself and that a divorce is not her intention.

The man's stenographer is a nice, quiet girl, and a subtle love interest has grown between the two.

After the quarrel with his wife, the man realizes that there is no love between them. The girl sees the struggle in his face and is unable to hide her own love for him. The man has a hard battle to keep from avowing his love, but his honor triumphs. He decides his only course is to leave and try to forget.

The man accordingly writes a note to the girl stating that he can no longer contain his love for her, so is leaving. His honor forbids him to divorce his wife. He places the note upon the girl's desk and arranges to leave the office permanently.

The Idler and the Roue are two of the wife's most frequent callers and either one or the other can be found in her society at every function. The husband returns home and packs for a long trip. Arriving at the station, the man remembers leaving a picture of the girl, and on learning that the train is late, determines to return home to get it.

The wife, meanwhile, has received the Idler and is entertaining him in the reception room. The husband arrives and the husband gets the picture. Hearing voices in the parlor he looks in and finds his wife in the Idler's arms. He calls the valet to see the action and, leaving a note for the wife with the valet, leaves without having been seen.

The girl has received the note and breaks down sobbing. The man comes in and comes to her. Her joy is so great on seeing him that he starts to embrace her, then thinks and takes only her hands. He tells her that some day their hour of happiness will come and their long-denied love will come into its own.

THREE FILMS TAKEN IN CALIFORNIA MOUNTAINS.

THE members of the Jay Hunt company have returned to Universal City after spending three weeks in the forests of Humboldt County in Northern California, where three lumber camp stories were filmed.

While in the timber regions the people of the Eureka and Trinidad, where most of the pictures were taken, extended every courtesy to the Universal players and assisted them in every way possible to secure the best results before the camera.

It was the first time that a big company of players had been taken into the timber camps, and they occasioned a great deal of interest among the residents and workmen.

The lead in each of the pictures was taken by Lucille Younge, while others in the company were Jack Holt, Al. MacQuarrie and Jack Nelson. Ben Cohn of the Universal staff accompanied the director and prepared the scenarios.

The company had intended making a sea story en route north by boat, but the members became so sea sick that it was impossible to do any work.

CHILD DANCER PLAYS CHARACTERS.

NEARLY all of the children who work at the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. are capable of assuming almost any role which may be assigned to them, but in addition at least two of the little girls are expert dancers.

There is no more famous child before the camera today than Lena Baskette, who is under a long term contract with the Universal Film Co., but in addition Dorothy Clark is also a regular little worker at the film capital. Dorothy does very clever toe and interpretative dancing, and is called upon frequently for acting roles. Recently she portrayed an Indian girl. Her make-up was perfect.

Powers' Educational Picture.

First monkeys are shown. These are tame, as nothing is wild in India. The cameraman catches them as they look at the people. Wild boars are thrown on the screen, the most fearless animals in existence. We see them feeding.

Next, we see the Devil dancers. They are mystic men who, by their dancing, drive away the evil spirits. The Todas, a poor hill tribe, are a remnant of pre-Aryan India. They have a peculiar marriage plan. Each woman has several husbands, so fatherhood is indeterminate. Their houses are relics of former days. Certain of the Toda buffalo are sacred and are worshipped by the people.

Lastly, we see the most beautiful building in the world the tomb built by a Mogul emperor for his wife. It cost twenty million dollars and is inlaid with many precious stones and covered with costly carving.

She succeeds in reaching the river bank, where she crouches under an overhanging rock. Pierre reaches the rock with unsteady feet and in another moment there is a splash.

Rosalie then returns to her cabin.

Jean, after her sudden departure, doesn't believe that Rosalie has taken him at his word until he hears the child crying for water. He crawls to the spring to get it and meanwhile Rosalie enters the cabin. Hearing Jean coming back, she hides behind the door.

Next day Binks prepares to meet the vampire. His wife notices his indifference to her, and after Binks leaves she learns from the children that father has a date to meet a woman on the beach. She starts out for the scene of activity.

Lillian is parading the beach and the two ex-lovers, mistaking her, rush her to a nearby boat. They row out and dump her overboard, believing they are rid of a wicked woman.

One of the children has seen the abduction, and rescues his mother. He takes her to where the appointment was made and Binks and the vampire are found. The vampire is unmasked and all is serene.

"THE PHONE MESSAGE"

Laurelton attacks Daphne.

Rex Society Drama

CAST.

Dr. Carson	Allen Holubar
Daphne	Ruth Stonehouse
Laurelton	Jack Holt

DR. CARSON had long wooed Daphne Standing, and at last they are married. There was one among the guests at the church who did not wish them happiness and that was Laurelton, the rejected suitor. Racked with jealousy, the latter was even then plotting some way to win the girl, in spite of the marriage.

Laurelton's jealousy grows more and more and after drinking a great deal of liquor he resolves upon a desperate scheme. That night when Carson and his bride are talking over their future the phone rings and Carson is requested to hurry to his office as there has been an accident and he is badly needed.

Hardly has he disappeared when Laurelton enters the apartment. Daphne, seeing the wild look, fears him and takes refuge in a locked room. The man pursues her, however, and starts to break in the door.

Carson arrives at his office and finds no one there but the sleepy porter and he wonders where the mysterious summons came from.

Daphne gets to the phone, and calling up the office, tells her husband to come quick and is then forced to flee as Laurelton has broken in the door. She takes refuge in another locked room, but Laurelton again is pounding on the door.

Carson rushes home at full speed and finds Laurelton trying to break into his wife's room. They have a terrific fight.

Police hearing the disturbance, enter, and finally the two are separated.

Daphne, in fear of her life, grabs up a revolver and when her husband opens the door, believing he is Laurelton, shoots him.

He is only slightly hurt, however, and after explanations are given, the officers take Laurelton in charge while Carson takes the brave girl in his arms and kisses away her fright.

leading out to Pennsylvania avenue. Two figures jump upon him and hurry him into a waiting machine.

Henry arrives home, and while seated in front of the fireplace, gazes intently at the huge ruby eye. The window opens behind him and a figure slowly approaches his bent form, while a hand slowly rises over his head with a long Hindoo knife. Suddenly the figure straightens and reels back.

Henry switches on the lights, and looking down, sees a corpse, shot through the heart and with a red circle on one wrist.

Florence enters the hall and overhears the detective making some reference to a murder. She recalls that her husband's name has been associated with The Sphinx's and also knows of the rumor that after his encounter in the club, Henry has threatened to kill the Baron.

Florence hurries to the house of The Sphinx, and tells her that she is responsible for the charge of murder that has been brought against her husband. The Sphinx angrily dismisses Florence with a demonstration of angry jealousy. Later, after brooding over the danger that threatens her lover, she writes a note to Florence and sends it to her by a messenger.

In the State Department, the investigation is proceeding in regard to Henry's connection with the murder, while Florence has arrived at her home and given herself up to unrestrained grief. She receives the note from The Sphinx and immediately returns to the house of mystery. She enters the Oriental room, which is in semi-darkness, and to her horror, she finds her husband's enamorata lying dead on the divan. Florence starts from the room in terror. Looking back she sees a letter in the hand of the dead woman. She reads the letter and runs from the room in a daze.

At the office of the Secretary of State Henry's guilt seems to have been established and he is about to sign his resignation. Suddenly the Baron Haddad enters, his clothes in rags, and his eyes betraying wild consternation. Presently he explains that it was his twin brother, Nassib Haig, who was killed. His brother had taken one of the ruby eyes of Vishnu and given it to the Sphinx back in India.

"Peg o' the Ring" will not be Extended

PEG O' THE RING" will not be extended beyond its allotted fifteen weeks, or thirty reels. An enthusiastic demand from many of the Universal exchanges and hundreds of Universal exhibitors at first impelled Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, to acceed to their request to extend "Peg o' the Ring" beyond the time alloted to it, but consideration of timeliness of the new serial, "Liberty, or a Daughter of the U. S. A.," made it seem advisable to get that on the market as soon as possible, and all the producing energy of the Universal is being expended to have this new serial as far along as possible when the release date comes on August 14th. Mr. Brandt anticipates that the new serial will be the best which the Universal has ever put out, and in view of that fact he is making provision for a longer run than has even been announced for a Universal serial in the beginning. "Liberty" will run for twenty weeks, forty reels, at the start, and if it is necessary to extend it after that, it can be done.

In the meantime it may be of interest to read a few of the hundreds of letters which have been received by Mr. Brandt and Mr. Hoffman urging them to continue the "Peg o' the Ring" serial. Here they are:

WANTS IT EXTENDED.

Chicago, Ill., June 10, 1916.

Mr. M. H. Hoffman, Gen. Mgr. of Exchanges, Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City.:

My Dear Mr. Hoffman—Don't you think it would be advisable to extend "PEG O' THE RING" say six or seven episodes or perhaps ten episodes, or as many episodes as the Powers That Be consider right?

The exhibitors who are running "PEG O' THE RING" are doing very nicely with same, in fact, are doing better with this serial than with the two last serials released. As long as you keep plenty of circus stunts, animals and sensationalism in the picture, it goes great.

I would like to see the serial extended, I assure you, providing it can be done and be as good on the extension, you might say, as the present serial is running. How about it?

Yours respectfully,
C. R. PLOUGH, Manager,
Universal Film Exchange.

CANNOT SPEAK TOO HIGHLY.

New York City, June 26th, 1916.

Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City.:

Gentlemen—I have seen it intimated that "PEG O' THE RING" might be extended to twenty or twenty-two installments. I certainly hope that there is some basis for this rumor. The business which "PEG O' THE RING" has done in all of my houses has been such that, from a purely selfish standpoint, I could wish for nothing better for my summer business than to have "PEG O' THE RING" extended to twenty installments. I have used this serial in all of my moving picture houses, and I cannot speak too highly of it, as a drawing card. Francis Ford and Grace Cunard have always been popular with my audiences, and in this circus serial they have been particularly acceptable. I certainly trust that "PEG O' THE RING" will be extended.

Yours very truly,
B. S. Moss.

WISH IT WAS SIXTY REELS.

Elyria, O., June 19, 1916.

The Victor Film Service Co.,
850 Prospect Ave., Cleveland, O.

Gentlemen:—

I find "Peg O' the Ring" to be the best drawing card. The play is excellent and I wish it contained sixty reels instead of thirty. In advertising I never mention the number of episodes. I make a slide of my own and show it on the screen; "Peg O' the Ring" circus show at this theatre every Saturday, so that it keeps many people interested who are disgusted with serials. Also, I have made up a sign "Circus show at the Dreamland to-day" and I have a boy carrying this sign through the streets. I find this a great advertising stunt. Any exhibitors can do the same thing and draw the crowds.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I remain,
Dreamland Theatre. E. J. GEORGOPLE.

EXCEEDS "BROKEN COIN."

Cleveland, O., June 20th, 1916.

Mr. J. C. Erdman, Mgr.,
Victor Film Exch., Cleveland, O.

My dear Mr. Erdman:—

As the Universal serial "Peg O' the Ring" starring those popular screen artists, Grace Cunard and Francis Ford has proven such a phenominal drawing card and a big money maker, why wouldn't it be a very good plan to have this serial extended about five weeks, thus making it finish along about the time the fall business starts in, early in September? I find that my Friday night business (when I run this serial) even exceeds the business we did with "Broken Coin."

Of course, Cunard and Ford are very popular with our patrons, and they will stand for a few weeks more of their "hair-bredth" escapes and sensational thrills that are put in each episode of "Peg."

By extending this remarkable serial, I believe you will strike a popular chord in every exhibitor who happens to be fortunate enough to be running it, for it certainly is the best "money-getter" I have ever played.

My Friday night crowds are such that it's impossible to get a seat after 8 o'clock. I trust you can arrange with the "powers that be" to extend "Peg" and give us all a long run for our money.

A Brand New Stunt on a Three Reeler

WONDERLAND
PEG O' THE RING
THE GREATEST CIRCUS SERIAL ON EARTH

Wonderland Theatre of Mankato, Minn., Managed by Sandon Brothers, who also are the proprietors of the Sandon Theatre. It is quite evident that they use Universal service, and the "Peg o' the Ring" serial.

DON'T tell M. H. Hoffman there is nothing new under the sun. Here is a brand new stunt which he and Joe Brandt have devised between them.

Continued stories in magazines and weekly periodicals have always proven to be an absolute success; the same idea can be utilized to make some extra money for your customers, if you are live enough to appreciate the opportunity which is presented, and here it is:

The Tuesday Gold Seal release of August 1st will be called "WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER." The picture was originally made in three reels and it is full of action from start to finish. Marie Walcamp, who will play the lead in the new serial "Liberty," does some wonderful work in this production. "WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER" will be separated into two distinct parts. The first two reels will comprise the first part, and at the end of the second reel there will appear the following trailer:

> "WATCH FOR THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE DAY UPON WHICH THE SOLUTION OF THE MYSTERY OF 'WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER' WILL BE SHOWN."

On the third reel there will appear a short synopsis of the two preceding reels, and this third reel will be called "THE SOLUTION OF WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER."

The reels have been fixed up in such a manner that your customer can run the first two reels as a part of the regular program, or as an extra release on Tuesday (or any other day) and follow it with the third reel (or the Solution) on Thursday (or any other day). The people who see the two reels of the "To Be Continued" picture, will undoubtedly come back to see the third reel entitled "The Solution of the Mystery." Those in the audience who have not seen the first two reels will get the story from the synopsis preceding this third reel. The Poster Department is now making a special one sheet for the third reel so that the exhibitor will have advertising matter to call attention to this special feature of the picture on the day the third reel is run. Let the Morgan Lithograph Company know how many of these you will need. The Supply Department will furnish a slide of the date showing the Solution. Place your order for a sufficient number immediately. There may be a number of exhibitors who will not want to run the picture in this manner. These exhibitors can take the synopsis and the title off the third reel, and the trailer off the second reel and run it as a straight three-reel production on release day.

"Peg o' the Ring" will not be extended, so Shout for "Liberty"

Mr. D. M. Nye, of the Etropal Theatre, La Porte, Ind., was a faithful "general" man until the advantages of the Universal program were brought to his attention. He is now running the "Peg O' the Ring," serial, and this is his comment:

Universal Film Exchange,
Chicago, Ill.
Gentlemen:—

I used "Peg O' the Ring" yesterday and was surprised at both the story and the business done. In fact, I turned them away at every show in spite of the heavy rain all day. Everyone was pleased and no exhibitor can go wrong on this serial. Will see you very shortly about regular service.

Laemmle Film Service,

Gentlemen:—

Well, we ran the first episode of "Peg O' the Ring" last night, and want to say that it made a great impression with our patrons. Say, you ought to have seen the crowd. We had the largest crowd that we ever had in the history of the house. Can you imagine anything like that? And many compliments were handed us as the people passed out. We certainly hope the coming episodes will be up to the same standard as No. 2, and if they are, we know our boys will be able to "mop up."

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

CAMP BORDEN, June, 1916.—Inside the camp lines here will be erected two moving picture theatres for the soldiers. At present there are over two thousand workmen engaged on the grounds and one of the theatres is contracted to be built in seven days. As the grounds are drained, every convenience will be possible, including rooms on the grounds for the staff. Mr. Adams, well known in musical circles, is one of those interested in the theatre. The theatres will be open afternoons and evenings, admission 10 cents, and the pictures shown will be Universal, V. L. S. E. and possibly Fox and Metro.

OTTAWA, June, 1916.—Good authority has it that the Canadian Commission of Conservation is considering the use of motion picture films as propaganda. Mr. Dixon, of the commission recently visited the Universal Film Company, Toronto, to obtain estimates of the cost of picturing the various branches of the service: forests, fisheries, mines, game, furs, prevention, etc.

TORONTO, Ont., July, 1916.—Mr. Burton Holmes, America's foremost traveler, arrived here yesterday with all his photographic paraphernalia. Mr. Holmes is traveling in Canada at the invitation of Lord Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and is accompanied by Mr. Gibson, advertising agent of the road. His next season of lectures will be devoted to making Canada better known to the people of the United States. Mr. Holmes has already secured in Canada more than ten thousand feet of film and over forty dozen photographic plates.

TORONTO, Ont., June, 1916.—The Canadian Film Company has just finished a patriotic picture designed to show an invasion of Canada. The military authorities have co-operated in taking this picture by allowing Canadian troops to take part in the battles. In the picture the enemy invades Canada as far as London, where they are defeated by the Duke of Connaught, who returns to take charge of the forces. Thus is Canada freed from the dangers of the conquest.

In local real estate circles it is said that the Famous Players Company are negotiating to purchase the Garden Theatre, situated on College street of this city. This theatre is one of the largest of the up-town houses. The purchase price is said to be $30,000.

Mr. MacMullen, of Winnipeg, Man., who recently took charge of the Colonial Theatre of this city, has already worked wonders with its appearance. Mr. MacMullen, who has some very progressive ideas, is said to have some very extensive changes and surprises in mind for the patrons of the Colonial. He is using Universal service.

The Local Operators' Union, No. 173, have arranged to conduct an advertising campaign in "The Bulletin," a Canadian paper which reaches all the theatre men in Canada. Mr. MacMahon, the moving spirit in this new idea, has made arrangements with W. A. Bach, the managing editor of the paper, to run an Operators' Column in "The Bulletin," which will be increased as the need for it grows. This will be the first operators' section to be conducted in a Canadian movie paper.

Last week Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and for War for Canada, was a guest at the National Club in Toronto, and subsequently attended a private showing of hastily developed films showing the inspection of troops at London, which he had just completed.

The feature "Cabiria" was brought into this city to play the National Theatre before the owners were aware of the new act respecting regulation and taxation of public amusements, which went into force at the first of May. As a result they have found themselves in a very tight fix. The act requires a license fee of $250 and a further fee of $50 for each reel of each feature presented for censoring and approval if said feature exchange be deemed to be a temporary arrangement for the benefit of non-resident owners or exhibitors or one that does not handle a minimum of one hundred film subjects in a year. In addition to this there is a $2 fee on every reel for censoring and an extra $5 for issuing the license. In the case of "Cabiria" this all totals up to $879. These regulations may prevent the owners of this feature from making any profit after their enterprise in attempting to show the people of Winnipeg a really big subject.

The National Theatre of this city is playing to capacity crowds with "Cabiria," while Mr. Wilson of the Province Theatre reports that Triangle films are going very well indeed. The Starland Theatre will become at once a full first run house, using Universal service, including "Peg o' the Ring."

MONTREAL, P. Q.—It has been learned on unquestionable authority that the Loew circuit will be extended this year in Canada to include Montreal. It stated that the Loew people have elaborate plans for a big new theatre in this city, which will be commenced in early fall or late summer.

Mr. G. H. Davidson, auditor of the Universal Company, has entered the ranks of the "first father" class. Mr. Davidson has just been presented with a very beautiful little baby girl by his wife and is in consequence one of the happiest and proudest men in Canada. Both mother and child are doing well.

LONDON, Ont., June, 1916.—The Canada Film Company was here last week taking several scenes for the company's big patriotic drama, showing the invasion of Canada by a foreign foe. The company manager had secured permission to use the eight or ten thousand soldiers encamped here for the battle scenes.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Mr. C. J. Gallager, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., who manages the King Edward and People's Theatre of that city for Mr. F. G. Spencer, was in St. John, N. B., making arrangements with Mr. Margetts, the Universal manager here, for the running of "Peg o' the Ring" in his houses in Amherst, N. S., and Truro, N. S.

Local papers announce that another company is interested in the production of motion pictures in the Maritime Provinces. This concern is the New Brunswick Portrait Company, Ltd. The capitalization is $9,000, the head office will be at St. John, N. B., and the company is headed by all well known St. John people. The concern is licensed to deal both in wholesale and retail ends of the business.

WINNIPEG, Man., June, 1916.—The theatres in Winnipeg do not notice any change in business because of the removal of the fifteen thousand troops stationed there to summer camp. Every one expected a great drop in the business on this account, but the cool weather prevailing in this part of Canada has been of great value to the theatre men.

BANFF, B. C., July, 1916.—A film producing company is at work in this region taking pictures of Canadian type, it is believed, for exportation purposes. The company is affiliated with Barkers, Ltd., of London, England.

HAMILTON, Ont., June, 1916.—Theatre men in Hamilton and the surrounding district will be interested to know that Mr. David Stewart, proprietor of the Red Mill Theatre in this city, has been appointed by the Ontario Legislature distributor of the theatre war tickets for Hamilton and district. This will mean a very big saving of time and labor for the theatre men and will also save them from a heavy investment in the tickets themselves. Mr. Stewart is ready to supply these tickets upon application.

Shout for "Liberty"

TRANSCONA, Man., June, 1916.—The Transcona Theatre of the town under the able management of Mr. Lyons has progressed wonderfully in the last six months. The town of Transcona houses a large number of railway men and Mr. Lyons specially caters to them by making his house, programs, advertising, etc., appeal to their railroad trained minds. His plans are being met with great approval by the residents, who fill his houses. Universal service is used.

SMITH FALLS, Ont., June, 1916.—The old Princess Theatre in this city is to be remodelled and opened for the showing of motion pictures films, is the latest report current. Mr. Ball, formerly of Perth and latterly of Lanark, has returned to take charge of the big Balderson Theatre in Perth, seating over 1,000 people, and it is said that he may also operate the Smith Falls house. Colonel Balderson, owner of the Perth Theatre, is said to have purchased the theatre here.

MINNEAPOLIS NOTES.

By FRED S. MEYER.

THE Twin Cities were recently favored by a visit from Hobart Henley, the Universal star. He was received by the mayor and a delegation of citizens and in his artless way soon won the hearts of all who met him.

MAYOR NYE of Minneapolis has figured in what may be called silent campaigning. The picture entitled, "What Minneapolis May Be Proud Of," shows the mayor in many of his functions. The idea was Fred Meyer's of the Universal Film Co.

EXHIBITORS in Minneapolis are running children's programs on Saturday mornings to help out the hot weather lull. The exchange here has put out a list of suitable pictures to help along the project.

NEW ENGLAND NOTES.

By E. J. SHEPARD.

"PEG O' THE RING" is a veritable knockout and is cleaning up for every exhibitor showing the serial.

THE New England Universal Film Exchange is sending out a two-page weekly for the benefit of exhibitors in the territory, and is meeting with much favorable comment, not only by the Universal exhibitors, but by those who will eventually come into the fold.

The Universal Bombardment Begins in Chicago

BY the time that this issue of the Moving Picture Weekly reaches the hands of its subscribers, the Chicago convention will have been well under way, but at the time of going to press we had only the news of the large representation of exhibitors, exchangemen, film manufacturers and accessory people who were to attend from New York and other localities. The special train got under way with flying colors, and the only care of the exhibitors who were on it seemed to be the uncertainty in regard to the infantile paralysis situation in New York. Several of the exhibitors cancelled their reservation at the last moment on this account.

Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, went out on the Twentieth Century on Friday, and even at that played a neat trick on several of the other representatives of manufacturers who were out to make a big showing at Chicago. One of the press agents who has a reputation of trying to put it over on everybody else had been in communication with Mr. Brandt for the last few days, trying to ascertain when he was going to Chicago. Mr. Brandt was very frank, and told him exactly when he was going to go, and the anxious individual thereby planned to be in Chicago a day ahead of him. But one has to get up pretty early to get ahead of the general manager of the Universal. He already had H. H. Van Loan on the lot in Chicago for three days picking out advantageous locations, strategic points, consolidating trenches, and making ready emplacements for the big siege guns of the Universal. Before Mr. Brandt started he had a wire from Van Loan assuring him that everything was in readiness for the big bombardment, and all he needed was his presence to start the Universal battle.

Inasmuch as Mr. Brandt cannot be in Chicago for the entire session, Mr. H. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges, is going to take up the work where he leaves it, and will start from New York on Wednesday, the day that Mr. Brandt leaves Chicago. At the half-way point where the trains meet an exchange of confidences will very likely take place.

Preceding Mr. Hoffman, however, Mr. Laemle left for Chicago on the Twentieth Century on Monday, and Mr. P. A. Powers on Tuesday.

Mr. Hoffman, in addition to representing the Universal at the exposition, has another mysterious and diplomatic mission about which he is extremely reticent. A very important announcement in regard to it may be expected from him on his return after a short swing about several Universal exchanges.

HOFFMAN MEETS MENACE.

ONE of the most serious menaces which has ever faced the moving picture exhibitors of Greater New York is that raised by the infantile paralysis epidemic, and the ruling made by the License Bureau. The epidemic was bad enough in itself, and the loss of attendance of the younger children made a serious inroad on daily receipts, but when the License Bureau prohibited the attendance of all children under sixteen by official order, it caused a crisis which called for unusual action on the part of the exchanges. Official cognizance taken by the License Bureau not only kept children under sixteen away from the shows, but kept their parents away, and also many older people who were alarmed at the suggestion of the License Bureau of the contagion.

The exhibitors of Greater New York held a meeting in the Triangle Theatre of Brooklyn, N. Y., on Saturday night, at which they asked all of the exchange managers to be present. The committee waited upon M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges, and asked him to attend, but he gave them an answer so satisfactory that they did not press him to be present at the meeting. Mr. Hoffman's assurance was somewhat after this fashion:

"The Universal Film Exchanges have always been fair with the exhibitors of New York, and always intend to be perfectly fair. I do not intend to be bound by any hard and fast rule in the matter of assistance to exhibitors. It cannot be done because every case is different from every other case. But we will do even better than that. We intend to meet every situation with absolute fairness as we see it. A man who has been making big money will not need the same consideration from us that the man who is barely making a living on his weekly film expenditure will need, and we intend to take care of every exhibitor. Not one of them who uses our service will be forced to close up on account of his film rental bills. I can assure you of that."

This was perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and Mr. Hoffman dictated the following notice to be sent out to all of the Universal accounts in New York:

Dear Sir.—The Universal Film Exchange of New York appreciates what this panic is doing to the exhibitors. The Universal has always been with the exhibitors, and is with you now more than ever.

We will supply you with a service, full and complete, to take care of your entire show, at a price that will enable you to continue business and to pull through this calamity. We will not take into consideration the amount that you pay; we will give you the service you need, regardless of price.

Why continue, for the present at least, with a program consisting of features, regular service and everything else, which is an expensive luxury in the best of times, and make it impossible for you to live while the ruling of the License Bureau is in effect?

No matter what the allowance or concessions your feature concerns will make, you cannot possibly run as cheaply as you would if you spent the little that you can for service with the Universal. It's a matter of pulling through, and you should all know by this time that a full Universal service, at the price we are prepared to let you have it during the panic, will more than do it.

SIGN ASCHER BROTHERS FOR BLUEBIRD FILMS.

I. VAN RONKLE, Chicago manager of the Bluebird Film Corporation, has just returned from a flying trip to New York, where he made arrangements for an increase in his standing order. Business has been so good, he said, that the standing order of April and May almost had to be doubled for June. While in New York, Mr. Van Ronkle saw the Bluebird releases for June. Mr. Van Ronkle states that he has signed contracts with the Ascher Brothers to show a Bluebird release in their houses in Chicago. The Ascher Brothers' houses that will show Bluebird releases are: President Theatre, Oakland Square Theatre, Frolic Theatre, Lakeside Theatre, Calo Theatre, Cosmopolitan Theatre, Columbus Theatre and the Terminal Theatre.

NEW EXCHANGE.

THE Interstate Films Co., Inc., has opened a new film exchange at Clarksburg, W. Va., to handle business which is constantly growing in that neighborhood. The exchange is in charge of J. A. Lavelle, who was formerly in a similar capacity with the Exhibitors' Film Exchange at Wilkes Barre, Pa.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THANK YOU, Exhibitors who are waking up to the opportunities presented on this page from week to week. The Exchanges write that the page is becoming popular, and that is fine, but it doesn't go far enough. We want to hear from Exhibitors as to their actual experience in "Putting It Over." Tell us what pictures you boosted and what the effect was, and we shall always be glad to have you tell us wherein and how you improved on our suggestion.

Don't be bashful. Don't be afraid to speak up in meeting. Co-operation is the spirit of this page and the more suggestions we get the more helpful the page will be to Exhibitors collectively, and remember you are one of them.

IMPORTANT: Do you read the advance notices of releases on the Universal Program four weeks from date of the M. P. WEEKLY? Mr. Laemmle says it is the most important page in the book. Mr. Laemmle knows. He is not only the most successful of producers, but he used to be an Exhibitor, and he knows the value of this advance dope on coming releases.... There is an added reason for reading this page now that we have successfully inaugurated this "Putting It Over" page. When you read the stunts here you can understand a whole lot better what we are driving at if you will read the review of the same releases on the page mentioned. Better still, read the Advance Notices, then turn to this page and get the suggestions on stunts. Begin now and watch these pages for the profit they will bring you.

"Who Pulled the Trigger?"

THE first stunt is in connection with that wonderful picture called "Who Pulled the Trigger?" If you have read the review of this big three-reeler on page 45, you know that the first two reels conceal a mystery, and that the explanation follows in the third reel. Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill play the leads, and the splendid direction is due to Henry McRae. Here is the stunt: Show the first two reels on Tuesday, the release date, and advertise that the solution will be shown as a one-reel subject on Friday following. A special one-sheet poster has been prepared which will be sent you with a paster which announces the solution is to be shown on Friday. This enables you to advertise and show the picture either as a three-reeler on Tuesday, or two reels that day and the third on Friday, as you choose.

For a lobby display stunt, or for a window display in the neighboring merchant's window we suggest a plain ordinary starch box painted black, covered inside with black cloth (velvet preferred). The manager of the house can borrow a wax hand from some glove store and can undoubtedly dig up a pistol. If possible, a small tungsten lamp should be placed somewhere to give sufficient illumination, although this is not absolutely necessary. Place the wax hand on top of the pistol so that one of the fingers touch the trigger, being careful to place the black cloth over the end of the wrist so as to make it appear that the hand is coming out of the box. The sign above the box, of course, will read "WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER?"

"When the Minstrels Came to Town"

WHILE not reviewed this week, the two-reel Victor release of Friday, August 4, is a splendid subject for a clever stunt. The story of this remarkably clever juvenile will appear in the Moving Picture Weekly two weeks from this issue. Watch for it. The story, "When the Minstrels Came to Town," is beyond all question the most interesting and amusing juvenile film ever released. It features "Baby" Early and the cleverest bunch of kids ever assembled. The kids have a minstrel show, following "Baby's" visit to a real one, and what they don't do to get the household and the neighborhood into a mixup isn't worth doing. Be sure to read the review two weeks from date. Now for the stunt: Give free admission to a dozen kids to black up and put on minstrel or crazy costumes. Use both boys and girls and offer a prize of extra admissions for the best costume. You'll be surprised at the ingenuity of the kids in faking minstrel costumes. High collars, plug hats, an Uncle Tom with cotton batting whiskers, an old black mammy with a bandana handkerchief around her head, and plenty of pillows stuffed under her dress. Remember, the picture is unusual; you can't advertise it too strongly; it will please old and young, and this stunt can be put over without the outlay of a cent.

"Where is My Husband?"

THE L-Ko release of Wednesday, August 2, is a humdinging stem-winder. You can't boost it too strongly. The final smash (see review, page 45, this issue) can be made the basis of an effective lobby display. Get an old battered street car headlight; splinters of painted boards that look as though they might have come from the wreck of a trolley car; a broken car wheel, some junk machinery, scraps of cloth as though torn from clothing in a wreck; a switch of human hair; an old car seat, and jumble them up in a pile in your lobby, with the following placard on top of the heap:

ALL THAT'S LEFT OF THE TROLLEY CAR IN
"WHERE IS MY HUSBAND?"
AFTER THE EXPRESS TRAIN HIT IT!
TWO-REEL L-KO NOW BEING SHOWN.

"Timothy Dobbs That's Me"

¶ There is something new under the sun. The new Carter De Haven Comedies are the last word in film fun.

¶ They are clean, fresh, wholesome, original and FUNNY. They are different. There is a lot of foolishness mixed with a lot of shrewd human touches that get not only laughs, but that deep interest that brings the fans back again and again.

Carter De Haven

Is known to millions and millions of people for his clever work in musical comedy. He is known as a star of the first magnitude to millions of film fans besides. We predict for the Timothy Dobbs Series the greatest comedy success of the century. Wire or write your Exchange today for release dates and advance information.

¶ Released two reels a week on the regular Universal Program to Exhibitors who book the ENTIRE program service of 28 reels. Booked to other users of Universal Pictures at a slight advance to cover the cost of individual service. Don't fail to write today for the greatest comedies ever filmed.

Red Feather Photoplay of Four Weeks from This Week

CARTER DE HAVEN in "From Broadway to a Throne." Twenty-seventh Red Feather Production. Directed by William Bowman. Released July 31. All the little brothers of the box office will welcome this five-reel novelty with the increasingly popular Carter De Haven in the lead. It's such pictures as this that keep the Red Feather Photo Plays in the lead, too. Even though you know the wonderful versatility of Carter De Haven, you have a surprise waiting for you when you see him as a bantam weight prizefighter in "From Broadway to a Throne." Being the hero of the play he would naturally be expected to get the decision, but instead he takes the count and staggers to a friend's room to nurse his wounds and his feelings. There he is found by the emissaries of a king (you know, king of the country he was king of), and mistaken for the lost prince. He is forcibly abducted, taken aboard a steamer, and eventually landed in the palace of the king. A lovely lady princess is chosen as his future bride, but his heart is true to the little girl who shared his ups and downs on little old Broadway. Meanwhile the real prince who, incognito, has been a friend of Carter's, has, with an old family retainer and the little girl, taken the next steamer and arrives in time for big doings at the palace. This outline doesn't tell you of the twists of plot and counterplot; of the dramatic situations; of the thread of romance and adventure running through each of the five full reels; nor does it even indicate the clever acting of Carter De Haven and the splendid support of the entire cast. Neither does it enable you to see the magnificent sets and the fascinating realistic detail of every scene. Book it for your patrons and it will bring you pleasure and profit.

Advance Notices

Every Exhibitor should read every word-every week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"WHERE Is My Husband?" With Dan Russell, Bill Kennet and Katherine Griffith. Two-Reel L-Ko Komedy Frolicsome Frivol. Released August 2. If some one asked me what this L-Ko was about, I would say, "About two reels, two nuts and two weeks in the laffing ward for an operation on your crazy bone." There is something about these hilarious L-Ko's that is as gay and carefree as a spring breeze. They wander in and about and over your funny section, tickling you all over in spots and you don't seem to care whether there are four or five pay days this month. You are infected with the nonchalant manner in which Dan Russell makes love to every pretty girl; or draws a stein of Milwaukee water from the lavatory faucet; you begin to giggle when Dan's wife finds him entertaining a most entertaining young thing; and when the lawyer who is going to get poor henpecked Dan a divorce comes on the scene and discovers that it is his (the lawyer's) wife Dan is making love to, you forget the gentle and considerate side of your nature; you roar, and you guffaw until your sides ache. Then when Dan throws a cigarette on the floor and sets fire to both floor and bed and then drops through the burned hole to the lawyer's bedroom, you are quite sure that you will never be able to straighten your face again. But, pshaw, things are just getting good then, because Dan, wrapped in a sheet only, is chased down the fire escape to the street, where he boards a passing car, which does him no good for the relentless lawyer also swings aboard. Finally the car is stalled on the track of a fast express which comes along, seventy-five miles an hour, banging straight through the street car and leaving it a total wreck. That's when you know you have seen the last word in film fun, and you gleefully begin slapping the nearest stranger on the back, and wish you had brought another handkerchief to wipe away the tears of laughter. Some komedy, believe me.

"MY Lady's Millions." with Hobart Henley. Catherine Calvert and Howard Crampton. From the story by John C. Brownell. Two-Reel Laemmle Love and Fortune Drama. Directed by Hobart Henley himself. Doggoned if I know what's getting into the Universal. They don't think no more of putting two top line stars into a play by one of the biggest scenario writers in the country, backing it with a whale of a production and a brilliant supporting cast, and then putting it on the Regular Universal Program, than you do about telling the boy to sweep out the lobby while the show is going on. There was a time when a two-reeler that cost as much as a good star's present weekly salary, was considered expensive (and some producers are still living in them good old days), but—nowadays with the Universal setting the pace by making two-reelers that other producers would pad out to four, well, (drop a tear here), "the old place don't seem quite the same, somehow." But they may wake up after a while and some of them may even realize that becoming "the largest film manufacturing concern in the universe" was not a gift from heaven, but was due to the Universal's consistent policy of giving the Exhibitor the best in the shop every day in the week. But I'm forgetting the story: Hobart is down and out. Catherine is up and coming. She is riding in the park, looking forward to an afternoon's shopping with a hundred dollar bill papa has just given her. She sees Hobart asleep on a park bench. In his hand is a letter from his mother. She tucks the bill into his pocket and rides away. Hobart meets an inventor who needs a hundred to perfect a machine that will put the gasoline trust on the bum. Papa is the gasoline trust. Hobart discovers the hundread. Partnership. Refusal to sell out for less than a million. Complications. Two fond hearts. Climax. Close up. Fade out. Gee, that was a corker. One of the "plays that please particular patrons and pay profits."

"WHO Pulled the Trigger." An original and unusual Novelty Three-Reel Gold Seal Drama. With Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. Directed by Henry McRae. Released August 1. A great big, beautiful play, strong enough to pack 'em in without advertising, but offering an unusual opportunity for one of the greatest publicity stunts ever put over. Marie is the dashing daughter of a wealthy Southern planter. Lee is a Northerner who owns a saw mill nearby. The villain mistreats his help and some of them run away and Lee protects them and gives them work at the mill. Mr. Villain comes to the mill in Lee's absence and demands that the negro helpers return to work for him. A fight follows in which one of the hands is killed by the bad man. He then starts to "get" Lee, who is at Marie's home, her parents being away. Marie goes upstairs to change her dress and while Lee waits her in the hall he answers the telephone. The message tells him of the murder; on the desk lies a revolver; his hand creeps toward it; he dashes out of the door toward the mill. Shortly after the villain is found dead from ambush. Lee is arrested and the revolver is identified as belonging to Marie's father. The dead man's brother organizes a posse to lynch Lee. Marie overhears their plans and makes a daring dash for the jail, racing on a motorcycle with the posse, who are in high-powered automobiles. At the trial Marie has been forced to testify that her father's revolver is missing, so Lee is found guilty, though there is only circumstantial evidence against him. Just why she makes the dangerous dash; how she saves Lee—WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER—is explained in one of the most thrilling of climaxes in the third reel. You will find complete explanations of HOW TO RUN THIS PICTURE for double money in the "Putting It Over" column on page 42, this issue of the M. P. WEEKLY. Turn to it now and act on the suggestion. You can clean up.

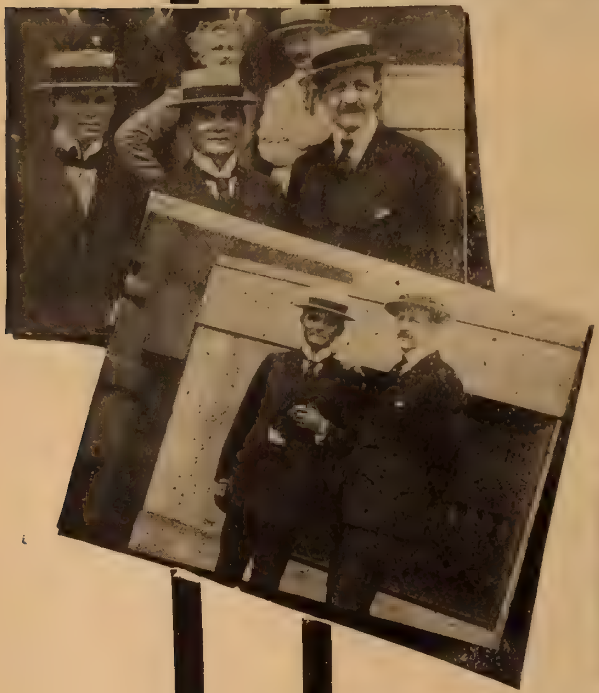
EXCLUSIVE SHOWING

All the world is talking about the wonderful under-sea voyage of the German super-submarine merchantman, "Deutschland."

Wherever the news has spread it is regarded as an achievement marking a new era of marine activity. It is placed by some on a par in importance with the mastery of the air; of the wireless, etc.



Knowing the intense interest in the personalities of the men who achieved this epoch-making voyage, the

this week presents the exclusively posed portraits here shown. In the upper picture are the engineer and the captain of the "Deutschland;" at their right Count Von Bernstorff, the Imperial German Ambassador. Below Captain Koenig and the Ambassador are shown posing for the Universal Animated Weekly cameraman.

Always first with the world's best news the Universal Animated Weekly is easily the greatest of all news weeklies. It will pack your house on the dullest day. Its news is as fresh as that of a morning newspaper. It covers all the world, and brings actual scenes of great events to your audiences in the shortest possible time. Book the Universal Animated Weekly for your dull day of the week and you won't have any dull day. Write for particulars.

A Glorious Victory!

(No. 143. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

EVERY exhibitor in the United States has cause to congratulate himself on the victory of the Universal company over the Motion Picture Patents company in the famous "Latham loop case," recently decided in the Universal's favor by the Supreme Court.

And yet I don't suppose there is one exhibitor in a hundred who really appreciates what might have happened to him if the Universal had not fought this costly lawsuit to the bitter end and—won it.

It represents the climax of legal battling—in which one victory after another has perched on the banner of the Universal.

Lest there be any misunderstanding about it, I want to make it clear once for all that the Universal fought this case alone; fought it at its own expense; fought it without financial or other assistance from any other company, man, woman or child in the moving picture business. The outcome was of vital importance to every man in the entire business; it was a matter which should have been jointly defended by EVERY PRODUCING COMPANY, EVERY EXCHANGE, and EVERY EXHIBITOR in the United States—but the Universal saw it through to the finish alone!

Had the Universal lost this big case, every exhibitor in the country might have been compelled to PAY A WEEKLY ROYALTY for the use of the projecting machine which he thinks he owns! If he refused to pay the royalty his machine might have been seized. In other words, he would have to close his house!

At a minimum weekly royalty of $2 per machine, the 18,000 exhibitors in the United States would have paid $38,000 per week into the coffers of the Patents company.

Thus, at the very least, the Universal company has saved the exhibitors of this land of the free over $1,800,000 per year! It has stood between the exhibitors and legal battles; between them and the possibility of having to close their theatres; and, I repeat, it has done this ALONE AND UNAIDED!

And this, mind you, is only one of the big victories won by the Universal to permit the exhibitors and the exchanges and the manufacturers of pictures to go on with their business, unmolested and unafraid, and earn their bread and butter. Somebody had to fight this case for the whole trade. The Universal assumed the role of goat and butted in with all its might. It proved to be a good butter!

I congratulate the picture trade and every man in it. Incidentally I congratulate the Universal's legal counsel, Stanchfield & Levy and Wetmore & Jenner.

Who Are You Working For?

HAVE you ever watched a squirrel running his head off in one of those treadmill cages? In his effort to beat the wheel he uses up enough energy to carry him miles and miles if he were running out in the open.

THE squirrel in a treadmill cage makes me think of the exhibitor who is wedded to the big-feature-every-day policy. He slaves away from early Sunday morning until late Saturday night—only to find in counting up his week's receipts that he hasn't advanced a dollar's worth over the previous week.

WHO has he been working for? Himself? Not by a long shot! The profits he might have made went to pay for the big feature program. The comforts his wife and babies might have enjoyed were sacrificed to swell the earnings of the feature exchanges!

COMPARE this with conditions as they existed one or two years ago. That, Mr. Exhibitor, was just before you let your opposition stampede you into running big features.

YOU were working for yourself then. The price you paid for a well-balanced, diversified regular service was 'way below the sum you are now paying for a feature program.

ISN'T it a fact that, in spite of the higher cost of your feature show, it has failed to bring you the additional business that your increased rental bill makes absolutely necessary?

ISN'T it a fact that you are now compelled to work twice as hard to hold your patrons because they are dissatisfied with at least 40 per cent. of the big features you show?

EVERY day finds the ranks of the exhibitors who have become tired of wasting their energies in the treadmill—who have become tired of seeing their profits going into the coffers of the feature exchanges, growing larger.

THESE exhibitors have found that, properly advertised, the two or three-reel subject will bring as much business as any five-reel feature. They have returned to Regular Service because they want to work for THEMSELVES—

ANIMATED SHOWS PARALYSIS FILMS IN THE STREETS

The Universal Animated Weekly, in addition to releasing in picture houses, is now carrying an anti-infantile paralysis campaign into the very homes of Greater New York. In connection with the Evening World, one of the most progressive papers in the world, and with the co-operation and approval of the Department of Health and the police, the campaign has been extended to night displays of moving pictures in the streets.

Saturday night when the crowds were greatest in the city thoroughfares, was selected for the opening of the "movie" campaign. The display of moving pictures from the tail end of an army transport was sufficiently unique and startling to catch the attention of the public. The words of wisdom of Robert L. Titus, who has lectured before the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale and at Cornell and Syracuse Universities, held the attention to the last minute. Mr. Titus asked for the co-operation of fathers and mothers in the work of the Board of Health and told of the difficulties which beset the department. He told what the department is doing in the matter of sanitary precaution and showed by word and picture how easy it is for parents to establish health departments in their own homes.

At every street corner where the two-ton Mack motor truck stopped the greatest interest was manifested. Crowds jammed the space in front of the al fresco movie and attested to the popularity of the Evening World's novel and instructive enterprise by the enthusiastic applause with which they greeted it.

Never before had there been seen in the City of New York a cart-tail display of moving pictures of any description, and to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is due the credit of the achievement. The Mack motor truck used was once an army transport of the Seventh Regiment. At the end of it, the entire wagon being covered, was a translux screen, three and three-quarter feet wide by five in height. A special lens of the Nicholas Power Company, with a wide angle and a short "throw," was operated by Al Myers. The length of the army transport permitted no greater than a nine-foot "throw."

The screen pictures were as perfect as those of any of the large moving picture theatres. Every detail was clear and sharply defined. Each picture told its own story, anticipating the description of Dr. Titus. Scenes along the lower East Side, made familiar by the Evening World in its anti-paralysis campaign, were depicted on the screen. Garbage cans, some uncovered, with cats and children at play around them; fly-specked fruit being bought and handled by many and being eaten by more; the congested narrow thoroughfares with their dirt and squalor; the police wrestling with disease breeding push-carts; the Street Department at work removing the garbage and flushing the streets—all were thrown on the screne.

It is the purpose of the Evening World and the Universal Company to have prints made from the original negatives and projected simultaneously in the picture theatres of Greater New York. Later the films will be sent on tour under the auspices of the Evening World and local newspapers throughout the country.

U. S. TROOPS KEPT BUSY ON DRILLS ON MEXICAN BORDER.

THE twenty-ninth number of the Universal Animated Weekly shows how the U. S. troops live on the Mexican border. There are repeated drills, practise invasion, alarms, etc.

This section of the Weekly also shows the funeral of the soldiers slain in the Carrizal battle. Captain Boyd, one of the officers killed in the encounter, was buried with military honors at Arlington Cemetery, the resting place of America's heroes.

ENGLAND MOURNS KITCHENER.

FROM the picture shown in the twenty-ninth number of the Animated Weekly, it seems as though all England attended the service in memory of Earl Kitchener. Besides their royal majesties, the King and Queen, all the celebrities of Great Britain were there. The guards of Kitchener's old regiment formed outside St. Paul's Cathedral, where the service was held, to mourn their lost leader.

ICE PLANT EXPLODES.

NUMBER twenty-nine of the Universal Animated Weekly shows firemen digging for the dead believed to have been buried in an explosion which occurred in a Brooklyn ice plant. The building, a four-story brick structure, was totally demolished, but the exact loss has not yet been determined.

Other events in the Weekly are Duke of Connaught inspecting Western Canadian battalions in Ottawa, Canada; fastest girl swimmers of the U. S. battling for championship in San Francisco, Cal.; and cartoons by Hy Mayer, the world famous caricaturist.

GERMAN U BOAT IN ACTION.

THE German U-boats during the present war have considerably changed International law. Number twenty-nine of the Animated Weekly shows one of these boats in action. After the torpedoes are loaded the craft is off on a cruise. Upon sighting one of the enemy's warships the boat can submerge in twenty-nine seconds. The periscope is the only thing in sight above the water. The Universal Animated Weekly also shows Count Von Bernstorff, German ambassador to the United States, visiting the submarine liner "Deutschland," which recently arrived in Baltimore. The feat of this boat is one of the most remarkable ever accomplished. She has been pronounced a merchant vessel by the naval authorities, as she has no armament of any kind. She carries a cargo of dyestuffs and drugs. The boat is fenced in to guard it from foes.

MAN-EATING SHARKS KILL RURAL BATHERS.

THE whole Jersey coast is terrified by the news that several bathers have been killed by man-eating sharks. The Animated shows the new coast guard, ordered out by President Wilson to hunt down these wolves of the sea, at work. It also shows how the beaches are being netted to keep away the big fish. A remarkable extract from the coming Universal feature, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," is also shown. Here a shark is shown grasping his prey. The pictures which show an actual combat between two sharks and a duel between a shark and a man are the only moving pictures of sharks ever taken under water and show these monsters of the deep in their native element. They were filmed by the Williamson Brothers for the Universal's ten-reel special feature alluded to above, which is an actual visualization of Jules Verne's story.

In addition to the under water views of sharks there is one taken by an Animated cameraman at Princess Bay. Before the captor would allow it to be filmed he made the cameraman buy it. So the Animated has one shark anyway on its staff, even if it is a dead one.

FIVE-REEL DRAMA of the Underworld. Written by Catherine Carr and produced by Robert F. Hill. A gangster falls in love with the society girl who reformed him and makes an enormous sacrifice for her sake.

TEMPTATION and the Man," a five-reel Red Feather feature production, featuring Hobart Henley, is a striking drama of the underworld. Ever since the police scandal in New York, several years ago, the public has been keenly interested in slum life. Plays and novels on this theme have appeared galore, but the screen provides the most realistic representation of underworld life possible to produce. "Temptation and the Man" was filmed by Director Bob Hill. The plot calls for the contrast between one of the wildest of gangsters and a charming society girl. This is the framework upon which the plot of "Temptation and the Man" is built.

There was one amusing incident which happened while the picture was being filmed.

One day recently while crossing on the ferry to the Fort Lee studio Hobart Henley noticed a collection of tramps that made Nat Wills look like the Prince of Wales. Henley remarked the ferocity of the crowd of "Weary Willies" to Sydney Bracy. Later when Henley came on the stage at Universal Heights, dressed for a scene, he nearly collapsed when he saw the whole tribe of hoboes appear on the scene.

"My God, Bob," he cried to Bob Hill, his director, "why the ambush?"

"Oh, they work with you," said Bob. The next scene is a den scene and I thought the real article would lend atmosphere."

"Atmosphere is all right," retorted Hobart, "but I don't see why I should act in the company of a lot of depraved derelicts that are made up like the prize platoon of Villa's army."

But finally Hobart was reconciled and the picture continued.

In the leading part Henley does well and does not overact the tough part and keeps the sympathy of the audience throughout.

Sydell Dowling, in the part of the society girl, is also very good. She does not get too sentimental in the love scenes, but acts her best and is very charming.

The whole picture is remarkable because it is human. The people in it act as people would and do act. There is nothing of the artificial in it. Part of the credit for this is due the actors, but Bob Hill, the director, should receive a good share of the praise for making the picture a success.

The story in brief follows:

John Crosby since early childhood has shifted for himself and has led a life without any love or joy. He has become a gangster, feared by all his companions because of his great physical strength. In a fight, which he enters for his sister's sake, he is arrested and sent to jail for a term of months.

In the meanwhile Ann Payton, a society girl, has rented a saloon and turned it into a mission. She is engaged to be married to Temple Vaughn, her father's young secretary, but decides to wait a year before marrying. The day that Jim is released from prison he gets mixed up in a brawl and, knowing that the police are just waiting for a chance to arrest him again, he seeks refuge in the old saloon, a former hang-out. Ann takes him in and shelters him from the eager police. There then begins to awaken in him the soul which has been sleeping for so many years. He becomes a valuable aid to Ann in her work and for a while forgets the social gulf between them.

Ann is engaged to Vaughn

Vaughn, meanwhile, has been leading a fast life. He has become involved with a woman by the name of Costello and a gambler called Johnson. He loses heavily, and to pay the debt forges a check. Jim, who has been given a position in the bank, recognizes Johnson when he comes to the bank to cash the check. He discovers that Vaughn is not able to meet the check which he has forged and that Johnson intends to use it to blackmail him.

In lieu of settlement Johnson forces Vaughn to invite a number of his wealthy friends to his house for a game of cards. Jim overhears the two planning the card party and, knowing Ann's love for Vaughn, he decides to get the check and so prevent any further blackmail.

At the party Vaughn stands seeing his friends fleeced as long as he can and then accuses Johnson of cheating. There is a tense moment. Then a figure appears at the door, holding a pistol. He rifles all their pockets, taking the money on the table and the forged check. But in robbing Vaughn Jim slips in his pocket the forged check. Crosby is caught while trying to make his escape and is sentenced to a term in prison.

Some time later Vaughn finds in his pocket the forged check and realizes that Jim committed the crime only to save him. He offers to take all the blame, but Crosby will not listen to such a proposal, because he knows it would break Ann's heart.

After his marriage Vaughn again gets connected with Johnson and his mistress. There is a quarrel and Johnson is arrested for running a gambling house. In prison he meets Jim and tells him that the first thing he does upon his release from prison will to kill Vaughn.

The two are released on the same day. Jim at once rushes to warn Vaughn of his danger, but he is too late. As he enters the house Vaughn comes in and accuses him of paying attentions to his wife. Jim tries to warn him, but Johnson steps out from behind a screen and shoots him through the heart.

In the last scene Jim and Ann are seen together, establishing another late As he enters the house Vaughn the spectator whether or not Jim will ever succeed in overcoming the great social gap which lies between them.

CURTIS MAKES BIG RECORD.

DIRECTOR ALLEN CURTIS has been at work at Universal City for the past three years, most of the time directing Joker comedies of one reel and featuring Gale Henry and Wm. Franey.

He looked up his record in the laboratory a few days ago and found that he had made one hundred and seventy-five of these one-reel comedies, practically one each week.

As surely as Monday comes around Curtis may be found working on a new story, and he says it rather tries his wits at times to have the subject ready, not to speak of the necessity of getting a laugh into every scene.

However, he is an old comedian himself, having played with Weber and Fields and owned his own comedy companies, so directing comedies to him is almost second nature.

"BILL" NYE FIGHTS FAT SUCCESSFULLY

"EVER since I came to California, I've been putting on flesh," said G. Raymond Nye, of Director Jaccard's "Liberty" serial company, at Universal City, four weeks ago, and then Nye started to rid himself of his superfluous flesh.

"I weigh 215 pounds, but I'll soon be under the 200 mark—watch me," emphatically said Nye, with determination behind his declaration.

Nye is an all-round athlete, has played football, baseball and hand ball all his life, has a record of 100 yards in 10 seconds and has put many an opponent "to sleep" in amateur boxing contests.

Three weeks after Nye had declared himself he had dropped seventeen pounds, and at the end of the fourth week he had gone to 190 pounds. He is still at it, and will not be satisfied until he has reached the 180 pound mark.

UNIVERSAL EMBLEM FOR CAR.

THE design adopted by Director Lynn Reynolds, of Universal City, for the water cap of his automobile has created considerable interest wherever he has driven.

It is taken from the "Trailer" of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, which is a globe of the world with a broad band about it, and on the band Reynolds has had painted the words, "Yours for Universal Films and Universal Peace."

As the car moves swiftly the air drives the globe slowly around, as if it were the world moving on its axis.

He declares that he had no patent on the idea and believes that every Universal car should carry a similar emblem as distinctly differed from anything that has been done before to distinguish automobiles of the largest film manufacturing company in the world and its directors.

Exhibitors in Convention Elec

Lee A. Ochs, elected president of M. P. E. L. of America.

MORE actual unity and harmony than was ever shown at a meeting of Exhibitors of motion pictures was in evidence at every turn of the annual convention which has just closed at the Coliseum in Chicago. This does not mean that there was no discussion, for with three candidates for president, and many of the most momentous questions which ever faced a body of exhibitors, the fifteen hundred deligates had almost as much business on their hands as a national congress.

The election of a president was the most personal and interesting business, so it was left to the last. After a roll call of part of the states had shown that Lee A. Ochs' supporters were strongly in the majority, the other candidates withdrew their names for harmony's sake, and Mr. Ochs was unanimously elected President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America to succeed Fred Herrington, of Pennsylvania, retiring. A long and noisy demonstration greeted the announcement of the election of the New Yorker.

Mr. Ochs is at present owner and manager of the Costello Theatre on Fort Washington Avenue, New York City, and also of a number of smaller houses. In New York he is very popular, not only with exhibitors, but with the manufacturers and exchange men. He has reached his present position through his loyalty to the exhibitors collectively in their affairs in New York as head of the New York City local. He has been a valiant champion of the exhibitor at all times, and he canvassed for the presidency on a national platform similar to the stand he has taken locally.

Each of the other candidates spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Ochs, and all are personal friends of his so that there seems no danger of any bitterness owing to the close contest.

Retiring President Herrington made a speech in which he said that although he had gone down to defeat he would be "found in the trenches, fighting for his friend, Lee Ochs, and for the best interests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the country." This declaration brought the retiring chief an ovation. Other officers who were elected, with no opposition, were:

First Vice-President—Judge A. P. Tugwell, California.

Second Vice-President—William Isenberg, Mississippi.

Secretary — William J. Sweeney, Illinois.

Treasurer—Peter J. Joup, Michigan.

The national executive board was increased from seven to nine in number, four of whom will be named by the newly elected president.

The place of the 1917 convention will not be announced until bids for it can be secured from various cities, but it was voted that only one authorized convention should be held in any one year. In his speech of acceptance, President-elect Ochs said:

"I am going to extend an earnest invitation to the presidential candidates of the Republican and Democratic parties, asking them to commit themselves on where they stand in the matter of censorship and in other particulars of vital interest to the motion picture exhibitors of America.

"I also make the prediction, based upon knowledge, that unless the publishers of certain motion picture trade papers treat us more fairly in the future and give us the square deal, they have not in the past, this league will start the publication of a trade paper of its own, backed by unlimited capital. They have favored the film manufacturers at our expense until it has become a habit with them, but they cannot do it longer. We are too strong, and we know that we have the exhibitors of the country with us."

The most important of the numerous resolutions adopted was one condemning in strong language the Hughes bill for legalized federal censorship of motion picture films, which is now before Congress for immediate action. This measure, if it becomes a law, will take from state and municipal authorities the power of censoring films and place it in the hands of a government commission. The delegates went on record as regarding it as a pernicious piece of legislation, particularly detrimental to the interests of the exhibitors.

The convention also went on record against being forced by film exchanges to feature serial pictures their full course when they do not come up to expectations, and reserving the privilege to cancel such serials as are unprofitable to run and unsatisfactory to their patrons.

From a spectacular and social standpoint the convention and exposition was a huge success, the crowds filling the huge coliseum at every session.

The Universal exhibit far surpassed the one at Madison Square Garden—and that is "saying something." Dozens of banners, pennants miniature electrically-lighted statues of "Liberty," the new Universal serial, an electric light display which cost the Universal $7,500, two bands, two booths right at the main entrance to the Coliseum and all the available Big U stars combined to call the attention of the public to the fact that the Universal was very much on the job.

On the night of Thursday, July 13, a mammoth ball was held by the Universal in the Louis XIV Ballroom of the Sherman Hotel which was attended by two hundred delegates from all parts of the country, representing every state in the Union. President Laemmle and Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, addressed the exhibitors, outlined the scope of the Universal's fight against censorship, its progressive policy and constant improvement of its program, pointed out how the Big U makes it its foremost endeavor to work with the exhibitor and not to use him as a subject for exploitation, of the millions being spent at Universal City in the interest of better pictures, of the vast process of concentration now being effected at the greatest moving picture municipality in the world, of the impregnable financial status of the Big U organization, and, finally, of the great new Universal serial, "Liberty," shortly to be released, and the submarine film of films, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," now being cut from 185,000 feet to ten reels. Later Claude Plough and Maurice Fleckles gave short talks to the exhibitors present, talks in the spirit and just long enough not to interfere with the general gayety of the occasion.

One of the most popular songs played at the ball was Ted Barron's song of songs, "Liberty," the inspiring strains of which formed the motif of the evening. The song was played outside the Sherman Hotel by a brass band, later in the lobby and finally a stringed Hawaiian orchestra thrummed out its dulcet melody while the fox trotters tripped about the waxed ballroom floor.

In a speech made to the thousands of exhibitors on the floor of the Coliseum on Monday, July 10, Pat Powers, vice-president of the Universal, made it plain that the Universal was willing to support any candidate selected as president of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, whether it be Lee Ochs, of New York, Frank Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Indiana, or any other "dark horse" whom the exhibitors might decide upon.

Joe Brandt showing Carl Laemmle the way into the Coliseum at the head of the big Universal Parade through the sacred streets of Chicago.

On the night the exposition opened the Universal officials, Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane, Pat Powers, Claude Plough, Maurice Fleckles and Joe Brandt headed a torchlight procession of five hundred members of the "Reel Fellows' Club" of Chicago from the Sherman House to the Coliseum.. The parade was headed by the Universal band playing "Liberty," selections from the special orchestral score written for "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," "The Universal Fox Trot" and the "Mary Fuller Fox Trot." The parade passed through the heart of the city, the agile H. H. Van Loan having secured a special permit from the Chief of Police for the demonstration.

The opening night demonstration was only exceeded in enthusiasm by the reception given the Universal officials when they arrived in Chicago. The Universal band greeted the special Universal car and a big parade, headed by Mr. Laemmle and friends, proceeded through the heart of the city to the Sherman Hotel, the Universal headquarters, followed by thirty autos filled with Universal exhibitors and the New York delegates. Upon reaching the hotel the exhibitors and Universal officials lined up for a panorama photograph, while the Universal band played the ever recurrent strains of "Liberty."

The convention was opened by Governor Dunne, who delivered an address of welcome which was popular with all those present on account of its cordial expressions and the censorship ground which he took. This topic of censorship was easily the big thought in the heads of all those present and the various angles of the problem stuck out at every moment. One of the most interesting topics was the formation of a body to succeed the Board of Trade. This was brought up by the official report of the committee of twenty which was appointed at the recent luncheon at the Hotel Astor in New York, at which a tentative plan for the formation of such a body was presented and ratified. It was voted to present the plan to the convention in Chicago. W. W. Irwin was spokesman and made one of the most interesting and eagerly listened to speeches of the whole convention. A committee was appointed to decide upon the report made by W. W. Irwin and after a debate of ten hours they decided to adopt the proposition by a vote of 10 to 5. This necessitated an amendment to the constitution enabling the League to affiliate with other organizations for the welfare of the entire industry. This was promptly passed, and there seems no reason why the actual formation of the new association cannot proceed.

"The proposed plan," said Mr. Irwin, "instead of attempting to destroy or weaken any existing organization, such as the Motion Picture Exhibitorors' League of America, has for its foundation the fostering and strengthening of your organization and of any similar organization that may come."

The following named delegates, constituting a board of directors to affiliate with other branches of the industry in the proposed National Association, were elected:

Thomas Furniss, Minnesota; Samuel Trigger, New York; M. A. Cheynski, Illinois; A. P. Tugwell, California; Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana; C. H. Phillips, Wisconsin; Peter J. Joup, Michigan; Louis Blumenthal, New York; A. L. Levine, New York, and Fred J. Herrington, Pennsylvania.

J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Silent Battle"

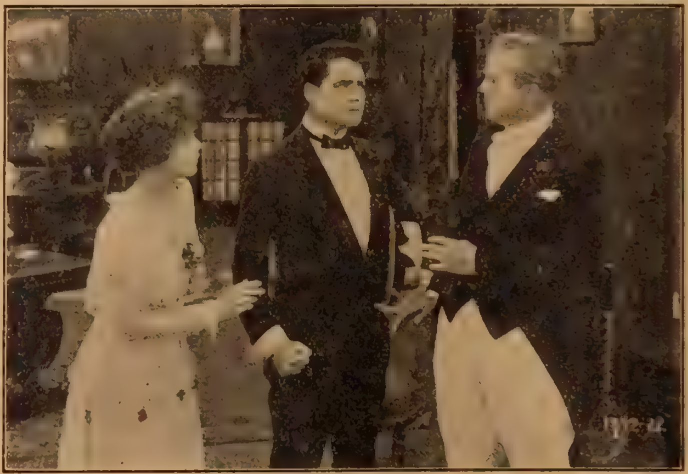
IN producing "The Silent Battle," a five-reel feature production with J. Warren Kerrigan, the Bluebird is still adhering to its original policy of featuring the play and not the star of a production. They agree with Shakespeare that "The play's the thing." They, of course, believe that the finest artists should be engaged in order to make the play a success, and this production is a shining example. "The Silent Battle" is a famous novel, and before it was put on the screen thousands of copies were sold. The author, George Gibbs, reaped a fortune from the book, and now it has become a Bluebird photoplay to further increase its popularity.

The production of "The Silent Battle" is accomplished in a very realistic manner. With all their craftsmanship theatrical producers have never been able to fittingly substitute artifice for nature, and this is one advantage the photoplay will always have over the acted drama. The painted illusion of a forest will never satisfy the captious photoplay critics, though a two-dollar audience might accept it in the spoken drama. Most of the action of this play transpires out of doors; and there are numerous scenes taken in the heart of a vast forest where the players are supposed to be lost in the Canadian woods. Giant trees spread their massive branches with interlocking effect over ground strewn with flowers and thick grass; massive rocks are half hidden beneath the sweeping vines and the overhanging leaves of the trees; vistas of sky and far reaches of rugged country beautify the scene and rippling brooks descend in rushing courses down the hillsides. So intensely natural are the settings that at times the players appears but incidental in the varying panoramas.



Tom threatens the treacherous Van Duyn.

J. Warren Kerrigan, who plays Tom Gallatin, has appeared in two Bluebird features, "The Gay Lord Waring" and "A Son of the Immortals." In this picture he takes the part of a brilliant young lawyer who cannot overcome his desire for drink. Kerrigan does a clever bit of acting in the woods where he is overcome by the drink of whiskey Jane gives him after his exposure. Lois Wilson, playing opposite Kerrigan, is excellent in a sympathetic part. Maud George and Harry Carter are good in supporting parts.

The story follows:

Tom Gallatin, a brilliant young lawyer, who has inherited a craving for drink, is on the verge of ruining his career by over-indulgence in liquor. He goes to the Canadian woods to recuperate, far from temptation and his old associates.

The Lorings, wealthy Westerners, have a camp in the vicinity, and one day Gallatin rescues Jane Loring from the clutches of one of the Loring guests, Coleman Van Duyn, who has taken advantage of Jane's defenseless position while she is alone with Van Duyn on a ramble through the woods.

Having driven Van Duyn from his prey, Gallatin starts to escort the girl to the Loring camp, but the pair lose their way. For several days and nights they wander in search of the trail. During a heavy storm Gallatin becomes rain-soaked and gets a chill.

Jane gives Gallatin a draught from her emergency flask of whiskey. Tasting liquor for the first time in months, the fumes go to Gallatin's brain, unsettle his judgment and he attacks the girl. She is rescued by a searching party in the nick of time.

Gallatin begins again his "silent battle" against his insidous enemy. The Lorings go to New York and enter the same social circle in which Gallatin has moved. Nina Jaffray is a society leader who has long desired to make herself the wife of Gallatin, but the young lawyer has failed to respond very heartily to her schemes.

Coleman Van Duyn has brought to Nina some confusing and mysterious hints of Gallatin having met a young lady at his camp in the woods and there entertained her. Nina's suspicions center upon the Loring girl, and to make certain, Nina plans that Gallatin and Jane shall met at a reception.

Nina takes this occasion to show that Tom's affections have been previously claimed by Nina, and to further impress the Loring girl that she cannot hope for Gallatin's love Nina goes further with her demonstrations.

To lower the young lawyer still further in the esteem of the girl he loves, the "villainess" arranges to take the young man on an automobile trip, and bribes the driver of the car to draw off the gasoline at a given spot during the journey. With no gasoline available the jaunt cannot be continued. Then the "villainess" goes further with her plans and induces the young lawyer to remain over night at a nearby farmhouse, the adventuress, of course, occupying a room under the same roof.

Then the "woman scorned" arranges that a report of the adventure shall reach the ears of the innocent young girl who has promised the lawyer that she would give him a chance to make good—and then marry him.

All this time Van Duyn has been retrieving his own reputation with Jane and Tom has been trying to establish himself in the Loring girl's favor. Van Duyn has the "inside track" and Nina connives with him that he may hold it, while as a matter of fact Jane Loring is in love with Tom but cannot forget his beastly conduct when he was drunk in the woods.

In working out this tangled situation splendid photoplay entertainment is provided and the desired "happy ending" is arrived at through a series of intensely emotional episodes that keep the interest at keenest pitch to the very end.

Nina is piqued into a confession.

Nina introduces Tom Gallation to Jane Loring.

NEW ASSISTANT FOR LEWIS.

WYNDHAM GITTENS has left New York for Universal City, where he will assist Eugene B. Lewis, editor of the Scenario Department, in conducting his constantly growing force of expert scenario writers. Mr. Gittens has had a pretty thorough all-around experience in the moving picture business, having assisted Mr. Lewis before in the Biograph, and having also worked in the scenario department of G. Melies, and with the advertising firm of Nicholas Finn. Eugene Lewis now has one of the best scenario departments ever collected.

CARTER DE HAVEN WORKS WITH ELEPHANT.

"I WANT you to meet the new heavy man of my company," called out Carter De Haven, the well known comedian, to his dainty little wife, Flora Parker De Haven, who is featured under the direction of Otis Turner.

With this, the comedian led Mrs. De Haven to the center of the big stages and pointed out Charlie, the huge Universal elephant, and then he demonstrated to his surprised wife how he was able to lead the big animal around with a small string attached to its leg.

The elephant was playing a part in "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," in which De Haven is being starred, under the direction of Wallace Beery.

"SMILING" BILLY MASON WRESTLES KANGAROO.

A FEW days ago, "Smiling" Billy Mason, one of the well-known comedians of Universal City, was walking in Hollywood with his wife, when, in a collision between two auto trucks, a big box was thrown out on the street.

The lid broke off, and the comedian was surprised to see a big kangaroo hop forth. He says he nearly split his sides laughing at the antics of this native of the South Sea Islands on the paved streets of the fashionable suburb.

Finally, de decided it was up to him to capture the animal, and a wrestling match ensued. Billy is an old-time ball player and athlete, but he said that kangaroo put up a fight that surprised him. Eventually the animal was captured and returned to its box. Don't be surprised if you see this in a picture.

BLUEBIRD NATIONAL ADVERTISING EFFECTIVE.

THE national advertising of Bluebird photoplays which has been carried in the Saturday Evening Post for the last three weeks has had an immense and immediate effect upon New York exhibitors alone. S. B. Kramer, manager of the exchange, is reporting not only a vast flood of letters received from film enthusiasts asking where they can see the first-run releases of the Bluebird, but has booked the largest amount of business during the last week which the Bluebird exchange has ever taken on in one week. Nearly all of the letters agree in stating that the play is the thing; that what they go to a theatre for is to see a play, and not to follow the action of any actor or actress.

“ART FOR ART’S SAKE.”

Written by Ben Cohn.
Produced by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

CAST.

Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Lee	Lee Moran
Fadeaway Ann	Roberta Wilson
Her Pal	Harry Nolan

Fresh from Hicktown’s leading emporium, Lee and Eddie arrive at the beach for a week’s outing. “Fadeaway” Ann, a notable crook, and her pal have learned that the house of a millionaire containing some valuable painting is left in the care of a drunken janitor. To carry out their plan they decide to get a “sucker” to do the dangerous work. In search of the easy mark, Ann strolls along the beach and meets the impressionable Eddie, who is basking in the sun. She makes an appointment to see him that night.

Eddie proves a willing accomplice until the girl tells him that she is being plotted against and wants him to rob a house of some paintings that belong to her. Here he balks and Ann, disgusted, leaves him. Left alone, Eddie meditates over the matter and indulges free in wine. His courage receiving this impetus, he at last decides to aid the lady in distress and steal the house, too, if necessary.

Disgusted, Ann returns to the hotel and sees Lee hanging around. She again tries her sympathy “gag” and Lee falls for it at once. Learning she needs a protector he gladly agrees to get her “rightful possessions” and securing an outfit suitable to open an arsenal, he sets out. Eddie, meanwhile, fired with his new courage, knocks out the waiter when he demands his pay and, securing a wagon and tools, puts on a mask and hurries to the house.

The watchman is sleeping off a drunk, and after many trials Eddie at last gets in through the cellar door. Lee, too, arrives and after several attempts, manages to get in the house. He goes to some of the rooms and starts to overhaul the house, not knowing that Eddie is at work. The caretaker awakens and, seeing lights in the house, calls a policeman and investigates. They succeed in capturing the intruders.

A detective, however, has been following the crooks and at last hears them confessing the prearranged robbery of the paintings. He takes them in charge and hurries them to the police station. All the parties come together here and Ann, seeing “the police have the goods on her,” states that she never saw the two rubes before. They are freed after a lecture by the judge to let “chickens” alone, which advice they scrupulously follow.

The “Herald’s” city editor gives Bert Allen, cub reporter, an opportunity to scoop the “Express” by detailing him to interview Lesley Hartman, the mysterious country architect of Barlow, who has just won the ten thousand dollar prize in the court house design contest.

At about the same time, Jim Baker, veteran reporter of the “Express,” sets out to scoop on the same story.

When Bert arrives at the Barlow station he looks about, wondering how he is to get out to the Hartman ranch. Spying the blacksmith shop across the street, and seeing a horse tied nearby, it seems likely that he can hire a rig without going further.

Walking briskly over to the “smithy,” Bert is almost tempted to turn back when he sees an amazingly pretty girl drive past him to the station. But duty demands that he make haste and, besides, the pretty girl holds a baby in her lap, which is discouraging.

“An Unexpected Scoop”

"Peg o' the Ring," Episode Thirteen

Marcus is in the box on which Peg, Flip and Dr. Lund are sitting.

Dr. Lund, Senior, denounces Mrs. Lund's activity.

"THE CIRCUS ACT," the title of the Thirteenth Episode, details the original and daring stunt in which Peg is again captured by the thugs and is rescued with the greatest difficulty. Scenario by Grace Cunard. Directed by Francis Ford.

EPISODE number twelve left Peg and Dr. Lund on the little projection on the cliff, with Marcus and his assistant hacking at the rope, by means of which they were about to climb up. As Episode Thirteen, "The Circus Act," opens, they are finally helped up by the circus people, who arrive in time to drive the villains away. Peg is still in her clown's make-up, so they return to the tent in order that she can dress.

At the tent, Peg sees Marcus and his accomplice hide in a case, so she and the doctor and Flip arrange a false plan to put them on the wrong track. Marcus then goes to report what he has heard to Mrs. Lund. The doctor comes home before they have left, so they hide in the next room. When he goes into his room they attack him, and after a violent struggle succeed in overpowering him. They then lock him in the cellar. But the maid has seen what has happened. She aids him to escape by dropping him the key through an old stove pipe.

In the meanwhile, Peg is at the circus. The clowns have just finished an act where they make some one disappear in a box when Marcus and his gang arrive, disguised as clowns. They take Peg and rush her into a box in the ring of the circus, while the audience laughs, thinking that this is another of the clown's stunts. The circus people realize too late that Peg has been abducted. They run frantically after the car in which Peg is being carried away, but do not succeed in rescuing her.

Peg is taken to a shack nearby, where she makes a terrific struggle to free herself from the clutches of the villains. But they are too many for a single girl to fight. At last she is overcome and thrown into a room. A man is placed at each door and window to see that she does not escape, with instructions to shoot if she tries to get away.

Then Dr. Lund arrives upon the scene. He quickly overpowers the guards and changes clothes with one of them to escape recognition. But luck is against him, for the unconscious guards are discovered and he is attacked by the whole mob. He manages to get into the room where Peg is, but just as they are about to escape through the window a shot rings out and the doctor falls limp on the bed.

EXHIBITOR VISITS UNIVERSAL.

MR. AND MRS. IMMENHAUSEN and Mrs. Westphall, of Chicago, were recent visitors at Universal City and were much interested in the making of pictures on the big stages.

Mr. Immenhausen, aside from being an exhibitor, also represents the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, which just held a convention in Chicago, July 12 to 18.

He met a number of the leading directors and stars, and declared his only regret was that he could not transport all of them to Chicago for the convention.

HAS NOTED RELATIVES.

LITTLE Eunice Hughes, who is now working at Universal City, is the niece of Rupert Hughes, the well-known New York novelist and writer. She claims she can trace her family genealogy back to the safe stock in Wales from which sprang Charles E. Hughes, Presidential nominee.

Three of the Principals in the New Serial, "Liberty"

G. Raymond Nye as Pancho Lopez.

AS promised last week, we here reproduce on this page three photographs of principals in "Liberty, or A Daughter of the U. S. A.," the next Universal serial which will start the week of August 14th. The illustrations show Eddie Polo, who plays the role of Pedro; G. Raymond Nye, who will be seen in the character of Pancho Lopez, a Mexican bandit, and Neal Hart, who plays the role of Major Winston.

Eddie Polo, who did such fine work in "The Broken Coin" and in "The Campbells Are Coming," has a very important and spectacular part in the latest Universal serial, "Liberty, or A Daughter of the U. S. A." In this picture he has the part of Pedro, a faithful old Yaqui servant to Liberty Horton, the heroine of the play. In the first two episodes he follows his mistress when she is captured by bandits in Mexico. He aids her to escape by throwing sticks of dynamite at the Mexicans. The role is a sympathetic one.

Polo, before he joined the Universal Company, was an acrobat with Barnum & Bailey's circus, where he was a high diver, aero acrobat, animal trainer and parachute dropper. He was born in Italy and all his life has been doing daring stunts. In Paris he dropped from the top of the Eiffel Tower in a parachute. He also claims to be the only man who has ever caught a fellow acrobat after a triple somersault in the air. As an under-water swimmer Polo also stars, having accomplished the feat of swimming 385 feet under water without coming to the surface for air.

Eddie Polo as Pedro, Liberty's Faithful Servant.

In "The Broken Coin," Eddie Polo made his first sensational success and the echoes of it are still reverberating in the far corners of the world. Polo's admirers have waited patiently for his reappearance on the screen in a sympathetic role in which he will have the opportunity to use his almost super-human strength and agility. In the role of Pedro, the servant and protector of Liberty Horton, the beautiful owner, through the death of her father, of a rich and extensive ranch across the border in Mexico, Jacques Jaccard, who wrote the serial, has made special provision for Polo to be in all of the sensational climaxes, and if he cannot stem the Mexican flood it will not be Jaccard's fault.

G. Raymond Nye, the former Biograph player, is now appearing in the new serial, "Liberty, or A Daughter of the U. S. A." G. Raymond has the part of a villain. He usually does. He plays the role of Pancho Lopez, a Mexican bandit, who abducts Liberty Horton, the heroine of the picture. Nye is the ideal type for heavy parts, as he has a very strong, determined face and a remarkably powerful physique.

A few months ago Nye rejoined the Universal after about a year's absence. Raymond's face belies his character, for although he looks very fierce as the heavy in a picture, he is in real life kind and considerate and is very popular among the actors at Universal City.

No Universal Western picture would be complete without Neal Hart in the role of Sheriff. But they will have to do without sheriffs for a

New Faces at Universal City

EDITH JOHNSON IS NEW LEAD FOR McRAE.

WHAT'S one's gain is another's loss. Marie Walcamp, one of the most daring young women who ever defied death in front of a camera, is going to do it in front of Jaccard's camera now for a twenty weeks' serial. By the law of subtraction we deduce that she can no longer do it for Henry McRae and his Bison Company. Therefore McRae had to get busy and get someone to take her place. After a thorough search, Mr. McRae signed Edith Johnson for this important position. In our photograph Edith looks very intrepid, and also very beautiful. Harry Carey, her leading man, should need no other inspiration to assist him in rescuing Edith as often as Director McRae imperils her life.

Their first production will be a five-reeler entitled, "Behind the Lines," which is a Mexican war drama.

Edith Johnson, the new Bison leading woman, directed by Henry McRae.

JOHN STEPPLING AGAIN A UNIVERSALITE.

JOHN STEPPLING, director and actor, has rejoined the Universal City forces and will direct "Smiling" Billy Mason in slap-bang comedies.

Steppling has been associated with the Universal, Essanay, Famous Players and American companies, and directed and acted in the "Billy Van Deusen" comedy series, which he put on for the American Company, the series running for more than a year. He was also prominent in the Nestor Company. Director Steppling and Comedian Mason worked together at the Essanay Company in Chicago.

In the company which has been collected to support Mason will be found Peggy Custer, who will play leads opposite Mason; Countess Du Cello, Mrs. Ashton and Fred Gamble. The first film is a comedy written by L. V. Waters, called "Betty's Bandit."

"CURLEY" STECKER IN CHARGE OF ZOO.

DURING the absence of Rex de Rosselli, who is playing the lead in a series of mountain pictures being filmed by Director George Cochrane, "Curley" Stecker has been put in charge of Universal City Zoo. Stecker worked for seven years with wild animals before he came to Universal City.

A. W. RICE IN BEAR VALLEY.

DIRECTOR A. W. RICE, of the Universal Company, left for Bear Valley this week, where he will remain for several weeks with his company, headed by Jane Bernoudy, George Pearce and James F. Farley.

Among the stories he will film is a two-reeler entitled, "The Circuit Rider," by Earl R. Hewitt, of the Universal City scenario staff. It is a story of the Tennessee mountains.

Hewitt has also written two one-reelers which are to be filmed by Director Rice during his stay in Bear Valley. One of these is entitled "The Girl of Black Mountain."

ANOTHER UNIVERSAL BABY.

THERE'S a new baby at Universal City this week—a Shetland pony. Wallace Kerrigan, superintendent of the Universal ranch, found the youngster in the corral, and as it had a white mark on its neck in the shape of a champagne glass, he christened the little animal "Champagne."

Molly Malone, new leading lady at Universal City.

PETITE MOLLY MALONE BECOMES A UNIVERSALITE.

MOLLY MALONE, a dainty miss of nineteen, has just been made leading lady of George Cochrane's Universal Company. Miss Malone's first engagement was when she was seventeen, with the Western Vitagraph, with which she played leads. She next accepted an engagement with the Lubin Company, and later went to the Lasky Feature Plays Company. Previous to entering the pictures Miss Malone traveled extensively in America and Mexico, and took a trip around the world, spending a year in South Africa with relatives.

Miss Malone is a real out-door girl and loves to hunt, fish, swim and row a boat. She revels in the pictures, the scenes of which take her to the mountains or the seashore.

"At the studios I always feel like a bird in a cage," she said a few days ago at Universal City before leaving for the northern California mountains with the Cochrane Company.

"I joy in the great outdoors under the blue skies and the vast, crowning mountains around me. The cities have no attraction whatever for me, and I want to get as far away as I possibly can from 'the maddening throng's ignoble strife.' "

Cleo Madison in "PRISCILLA'S PRISONER"

Priscilla holds up Gerrard, caught red-handed in her kitchen.

BIG U Two-Reel Rural Drama. Written by Harvey Gates and produced by Cleo Madison. A girl takes a thief on her farm to work out his punishment and falls in love with him. The thief turns out to be the wayward son of a wealthy family.

IN this production, "Priscilla's Prisoner," a two-reel Big U Rural Drama, Cleo Madison, the beautiful Universal Star, is shown to admirable advantage in a role in which few stars would permit themselves to be cast. It is all the more credit to Miss Madison that she chose the role herself, for she is her own director. In a few weeks she will return to the feature ranks, so make the most of this picture and the one to follow it. "Priscilla's Prisoner" is a rural, homely story and Priscilla herself is not any society butterfly, but she has a lot of sense and the decision she made in regard to a suspected thief was both novel and Solomonesque. In brief the story follows:

Gerrard Maxime leaves home with a friend because of a quarrel with his father. After tramping around the country for some time they arrive one day, hungry and tired, at the farm of Priscilla Graves, a girl who is working her own farm. Priscilla is saving up to pay off the mortgage on the farm and Gerrard arrives just as she is putting away her savings. She refuses to give them anything to eat as they look so terrible.

Gerrard tells his friend of the refusal and also of the money and the two go to pick out a soft rock for a bed. Gerrard awakes in the night to find his friend gone. Guessing that he has gone to steal the money, Maxime follows and tries to prevent the robbery. Priscilla arrives just in time to capture Gerrard, the friend making his escape.

As punishment Gerrard is sentenced to work out his imprisonment on the farm. He is very happy, as he has fallen in love with Priscilla, until one day he is accused of stealing a horse and without being given a chance to clear himself is beaten by some farmers.

In the meantime his friend has gone home and told the Maximes of their son's plight. They come after him and find him in bed from his beating. Priscilla is of course astonished when she learns that Gerrard comes from a prominent family.

When Priscilla next goes to her lawyer's to see about the mortgage she finds that it is paid. Gerrard then steps out and offers to be her prisoner for life. Does she accept? She does.

ARBUCKLES AS DROMIOS.

IT often has been suggested that the famous Maclyn Arbuckle and his brother Andrew, the well-known comedian, now at Universal City, be filmed in Shakespeare's "The Two Dromios."

The resemblance of the two brothers is so great that they certainly would "set the table on a roar." It is a difficult matter to get the Arbuckles together at one place long enough for the camera to pick them up. However, the attempt is being made and the work of putting "The Two Dromios" on the screen probably will be begun in the near future.

"For the Love of a Girl," BISON DRAMA

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama. Written by Harvey Gates and Produced by Harry Carey. The story of how a red-blooded man who has it in his blood to fight at the drop of a hat, comes to realize through a girl's soft hand that there is much more in life than fighting.

HARRY CAREY and the Wild West are like old comrades. In this play Carey performs many feats never before seen in Universal or any other films. In one place he leap from a horse and drags a man from another horse. At another time, when he is about to be hung, he swings like a pendulum on the rope and drops into the middle of a stream. These are but a few of the thrills of the picture. The story in brief follows:

Before he was born, Black La Rue's father was killed battling on the Mexican border.

Wishing to be away from the turmoil of the unsettled country, Mrs. La Rue emigrates West with her child. Throughout this region the son is known as "Black" La Rue, the man who always fights. The mother is deeply worried over this trait in her son, but never tells him of the strange condition surrounding his birth. She realizes that, being born under the stress of fighting, he has inherited this uncontrollable desire to be in conflict.

Cliff Buckley, a gambler, and his daughter, Jane, arrive in the cow town. La Rue comes to town shortly afterwards and quickly gets into a fight. He whips his man and is choking him, when he is interrupted by the arrival of Jane, who pleads with him to desist. Buckley comes on and angrily orders the girl to return home and mind her own business.

The interest between Black La Rue and the girl grows and very often they are found together, riding about the surrounding country. At last Black confesses his love for the girl and they get to where he asks her father's consent. Buckley is not in favor of the arrangement and quickly tells Le Rue that his daughter must marry a better man than an ordinary bully.

That night he can't sleep and is tormented with thoughts of fighting. At last he arises and slips away to the town. Jane sees him as he comes in and notices his wild manner. When she intercepts him and asks him what he is doing in town he tells her he has just come in for a little game, but Jane realizes the state of mind he is in and tries to detain him.

"Please don't fight," said Jane, and La Rue heeded her.

CAST.

Black La Rue	Harry Carey
His Mother	Jessie Arnold

Buckley, meanwhile, is having a game with some of the boys which ends in a dispute. They are engaged in the fight when the sheriff enters and quiets matters. He takes Buckley in charge and they leave for the lock-up. As they exit from the building, Buckley becomes obstinate and refuses to go further. The men struggle and Buckley accidentally kills the sheriff.

Jane has been standing near with Black La Rue and they both hear the shot. They are first to reach Buckley and see the sheriff lying down. Black quickly takes in the situation and realizes the position the girl will be in and as the men gather about he confesses that he killed the sheriff. Knowing his reputation for fighting it is easy to believe that La Rue is guilty and the crowd take him in charge.

With drinking and talking the feeling against Black Le Rue grows and they decide to take things in their own hands. He is taken in charge by a crowd, who leave with him for the hills, where they expect to hang him. They take him to a tree overhanging the river, but just as they are about to hang him he manages to break away and makes a wild leap for the river, far below. The men try to stop him, but in vain, and by the time they make their way to the river Black has escaped.

The men return to the town and tell of his escape.

Black makes his way home and his mother looks after his bruises. Just before dawn he prepares to leave the country, when Jane hurriedly comes in. She tells him that she has learned of his sacrifice and that she intends to wait for him. La Rue tells her that he intends going away until he can master his strange obsession and will then return. She promises to wait for him and La Rue leaves with a happy heart, knowing that things will adjust themselves, sooner or later.

COWBOY MAKES HAIR ROPE.

HARRY CAREY, the well known actor-director of Universal City, prizes very much a hair rope made for him by one of his cowboys, Pedro Leon, one of the world's champion ropers.

The other day Leon was waiting around to work in the scenes when he conceived the idea of making Carey a present.

Gathering up a pair of scissors he went from one horse to the other, and finally accumulated a handful of hair from the tails of the animals. Then he went to work and in a remarkably short space of time had the rope completed and that night presented it to Carey.

Marie Walcamp, the

A Talk with the Star

Marie Walcamp in a costume which delights her heart.

She will wear it in "Liberty," the new serial.

IT was Fourth of July out in the little town of Dennison, Ohio, just as it was in the biggest city of the Union, and the citizens were preparing for a grand and glorious time. One of the principal events scheduled for the day was a children's cake walking contest, to be held in "The Park," the largest entertainment hall in the little town. Entrants of all ages, from three to sixteen, fat babies not able to do more than toddle, lanky, overgrown youngsters, included by courtesy under the designation "children's contest," waited for their turns behind the scenes, anxious mothers fluttering helplessly around them, perking up ribbons, pulling out sash bows and smoothing down curls. Some of the young ones were stricken with stage fright and set up a dismal howling when their names wer called. Others were overcome with bashfulness and had to be shoved onto the stage by main force. But among the throng was one little golden-haired creature of five years of age who was in her element and monarch of all she surveyed. No stage fright or inconvenient case of nerves for her. She meant to have that cake and enjoy every minute of the earning of it, and she did. The name which was announced as prize winner was none other than Marie Walcamp, known to fame, at present, as the Bison Universal daredevil of the films. That was her first public appearance, and it was distinguished by the same sang froid in the face of a crisis that she has since shown in countless situations fraught with real, red danger.

This Fourth of July debut of Marie Walcamp's is recalled at this time more forcibly owing to the fact that she has been selected as leading lady of the next Universal serial, to be called "Liberty, or A Daughter of the U. S. A.," and deals with the Mexican situation as it is presented at the present time with all of the kaleidescopic changes which are taking place daily on the border between the United States and Mexico. As Liberty Horton, Miss Walcamp will be able to realize in popularity on the ability she has previously shown and Jacques Jaccard, who will direct her, has promised that she will not want for opportunities to shine in difficult situations.

Marie liked her first experience of the footlights so well that she never forgot it. The family did a great deal of moving about for some time and they lived successively in Steubenville, Ohio, in the suburbs of Pittsburg, in Buffalo, Auburn and Seattle. All this time, while acquiring an education which included outdoor as well as book training, Marie kept her determination to make a stage career for herself. But she was preparing herself for it in everything she did, training her memory and her voice, learning to dance, and constantly observing the people about her and impressing the way they did things on her retentive memory.

At last she reached the zenith of her desires and was engaged by the Kolb & Dill stock company for "second roles" in San Francisco. But her real place was musical comedy, and she knew it. So accepted a chance in the "line" of the c rus of a company in order to test her al

she obtained permission to visit one of the big producing plants and was so fascinated by what she found there that she determined, on the spot, to become a picture actress—a determination which she never as for a moment regretted. Her lucky star led her to the company of Otis Turner, dean of directors, and she realized her ambition to appear on the screen. Then she played several roles for the nalleys, so that she has reason to pride rself on her directors. She was offered e choice of a contract to play either leads ith the Powers comedies or to join the 1 Bisons, under Henry McRae.

"I did not hesitate a moment," says Miss alcamp. "I had wanted to do 'stunts' om the time that I first heard the click the camera. I was advanced to leads, d soon we were on our way to Honolulu r a special series of pictures. ere I had one of the most exting experiences of my life. I was riding a surf board at Waikiki one evening—one of the finest sports in the world, by the way—and coming in on a big wave, when suddenly something black and shiny bumped my board and threw me into the water. It was nothing more nor less than a man-eating shark. He fought with my board and I expected him to turn his attention to me every moment. But fortunately there were some native boys in a canoe not far off and my shrieks attracted them to the spot. The shark sensed trouble and made off. We often saw him after that and I imagine he would have made a nice pet if I could have got to know him."

It may have been this experience which cured Miss Walcamp, once and for all, of all sensation of fear; or perhaps, like Siegfried, she was born without it. However that may be, since her experience in Honolulu she has performed a constant succession of hazardous feats with all the indifference to danger of a Palladin.

"I love diving and jumping from great heights," says this intrepid girl. "Coming back from Hawaii I made a sixty-foot dive from the bow of the steamer, which was afterwards incorporated in the picture, 'Our Enemy's Spy.'"

If you ask her for the narrowest escape she ever had she will tell you that it was in the filming of a Bison called "In Jungle Wilds," in which a ferocious male lion, fully grown, jumped over her head from a height of fifteen feet down the side of a cliff while she lay crouched on a tiny ledge in his path. His hind feet struck her shoulder, tearing her dress to ribbons and severely bruising the flesh. For all that, she goes on record as saying that one of her greatest pleasure is working with wild animals. A curious taste!

"In the same picture," adds Miss Walcamp, "Dolly, a beautiful leopard, had to jump from one log to the other, while I ducked under water. She missed her footing and landed on my head, slightly scratching my face. The animals are really wild and would tear one to pieces if they got the chance, but I love 'em just the same."

Besides her performances with animals. Marie has taken hundreds of perilous risks in the railroad thrillers with which her name has been particularly associated lately. She was asked the other day how it came about that she possessed the seemingly unfeminine accomplishment of running an engine.

Another of Dare-Devil Marie's stunts.

"Why that is easy," she replied; "it is natural for me. My father was a railroad engineer, and so is my brother, and I really believe that I could run a fast mail as well as either of them do. If there is anything in heredity it is certainly shown in my family, for next to an animal I love an engine."

Countless are the hazards to which she has been exposed in the films. In "The Iron Rivals" she played the part of a fearless telegraph operator, who sets out to warn friends of the attempt to blow up the railroad bridge, finds herself carried away in a runaway engine and leaps into the stream from the cab as the engine roars to destruction across the weakened bridge. In another picture called "The Kidnapped Bride" she was hauled out of the window of a train going at great speed and on to the back of a galloping horse by her equally intrepid film partner, Lee Hill. The imminent danger of being dropped somewhere between the wheels of the train and the feet of the horse was nothing more than a gentle stimulus to this high-spirited young woman.

Besides her railroad stunts Marie has taken some of the most daring chances on horseback which any screen Amazon has ever been called upon to perform. She is an expert horsewoman and has two saddle horses of her own, Betty and Harry, to whom she is devoted. In a forthcoming Bison release, called "The Indian's Lament," Miss Walcamp performed a sensational fall. The animal had been trained to turn a somersault at the right moment and Miss Walcamp had rehearsed him in the scene herself. But when the camera was called into play either the actress or the steed became excited by a desire to excel and the fall was made while the horse was going at such terrific speed that he missed her body only by perilously few inches as she rolled on the ground, over and over.

“THE LATEST in VAMPIRES”--Victor

Mugs an artist.

Mug.

Loretta has her inning.

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy. Written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Harry C. Myers. Thief discovers he has a past and uses it to good advantage. He almost makes a getaway on the strength of his weepy tale. Watch the ex-vampire wilt.

CAST.

“Mug” Leavy	Harry C. Myers
Elbert Diggs	Sidney Bracey
Loretta, his wife	Rosemary Theby

IT is certainly a hard world when people refuse to believe even what we tell them about ourselves. “Mugs” did not find it that way because they swallowed his story, hook, sinker and all. “Mugs” was a gentleman of the ancient order of “take what you find.” He invented a troublesome past for himself, but forgot that the trouble would continue over into the present. The story follows:

The scene opens upon a family squabble between Diggs and his wife. Then enters “Mugs” Leavy on robbery intent. But “Mug” is discovered by Elbert in the act of burglarizing. “Mug,” however, has the presence of mind to seize a picture of Mrs. Diggs and cry in a tragic manner, “My God, who is that woman?” “Mug” then sinks into a chair and feverishly tells his story.

In the opening picture we see “Mug” taking a fond farewell of his mother. In the city “Mug” struggles to make his way as an artist. With the help of some wealthy patrons “Mug” succeeds in his profession. One night, in search of inspiration, he meets the vampire, Loretta. “Mug’s” prosperity increases, but Loretta develops into a regular vampire. His sweetheart in the country comes to rescue her lover from the wiles of temptation, but after one look at his old sweetheart “Mug” decides that he prefers the vampire. Then Loretta deserts him for one of his wealthy patrons and “Mug” goes to the dogs. And while Elbert is trying to get an explanation out of his hysterical wife, “Mug” silently makes his departure.

When “Mug” arrives at the saloon where he and his pals are accustomed to hang out, he is so elated that he orders drinks for the whole house and proceeds to tell the story of his clever getaway. At that he might have gotten away with the job had not a couple of plain-clothes men been lurking in the back of the saloon and heard the story.

In the station house the lieutenant has a great laugh over the whole affair. But when Diggs hears how he has misjudged his wife he implores forgiveness and Loretta is overjoyed at the fact that she could be a dangerous vampire if she wanted to.

“Mug” is seen languishing in a cell as the picture fades out.

AGNES VERNON LEAPS INTO PACIFIC OCEAN

IN one scene of “A Daughter of the Night,” being produced by Francis Powers, Agnes Vernon, affectionately known by her associates at Universal City as “Brownie,” was required to make a leap from a pier into the Pacific Ocean.

The nervy little actress made the leap, despite the fact that she cannot swim and she was rescued, actually and for the purpose of the picture, by the leading man of the company, A. Lowrie. She admits that it is an experience she does not wish to repeat.

RUTH STONEHOUSE— HENRY DE VRIES, CO-STARS

RUTH STONEHOUSE, the beautiful actress who came to the Universal from Essanay, and Henry De Vries, the protean actor, will appear hereafter as co-stars under the direction of Raymond Wells, who produced the famous “Julius Caesar” production at Hollywood.

Miss Stonehouse recently completed “The Spring Song,” under the direction of William Worthington. De Vries recently signed a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to work at Universal City. Wells will be provided with an all-star cast, including Dorothy Drake, Raymond Whitaker, Fred Montague, Wilfred Rogers and Jack Mulhall, many of whom are new to Universal audiences.

ALICE HOWELL is always funny. But in the L-Ko Komedy, Lizzie's Lingering Love," she is really a scream. On the whole, this is the best picture yet produced by the L-Ko. Kompany. There are no stunts in the play. It is just funny because of the humorous situations and acting. Fatty Voss, in the part of the manager of the Dunderworld Den, is made up to look the part to perfection. He looks tough enough to eat nails.

The annals of Lizzie's adventures follow in very condensed form:

Her term was over and she stood on the outside of the prison grasping the few dollars the institution had provided against her forthcoming.

She had determined to go straight, but the underworld folks with whom, before her going up, she had rendered service not easily replaced, wanted her back. Her day of release was heavily chalked by the boss of the den which had been her habitat, and his crooks were there to extend the glad hand. These worthies, posing as friends to the newly liberated, lifted the precious dollars needed for the new start, and the late jailbird found herself under their guidance among her old cronies. The "go straight notion" wasn't entirely killed and they found she had lost her former congeniality. Over strenuous efforts on the part of the boss to revive the old spirit drove her to an attempt to end it all.

CAST.

Jailbird	Alice Howell
Opium Fiend	Phil Dunham
Manager Dunderworld Den,	Fatty Voss
Assistant Manager	Bill Bevan

At this point the hero entered, saved her life, persuaded her to live a little longer, and won her heart.

She stepped blithely forth to start anew, but met up with the underworld folks again and strong arm methods convinced her of the good policy of joining their operations.

She served as an outpost to their burglar jobs with good success, until at a millionaire's home where the haul of the season was due for a gathering, she met up with a mouse. This drove her unceremoniously into the privacy of the home, where she found she was aiding in the sacking of the house of her hero.

Gratitude welled up—had he not saved her life? She turned on her pals, protected the sick mother, returned the family jewels, and then stepped out of his life forever—but being the last one out ran into the lately aroused cops, her exit being badly marred by her efforts to gain headway on the flatfoot hot step of the protectors of peace.

POTEL PREFERS WILD ANIMALS

VICTOR POTEL, the famous "Slim" of Universal Comedies, is being featured in a one-reel animal comedy entitled "What Darwin Missed," under the direction of Beverly Griffith.

"Slim" is required to work with many of the wild animals of the Universal City zoo, and the long, slim fellow has made himself a favorite with the beasts of the jungle.

So far he has had no trouble with them, but a few days ago he appeared at Universal City with some bad scratches on his arms and hands. It seems that at home the comedian has a fine Persian cat and he had stooped to drag the animal from underneath the bed, and that is where he got scratched.

"Just to think of it—the first time I worked with wild animals," said Potel, "I am absolutely immune, but when I go home I get tangled up with a tame one and get hurt. I am for the wild animals from now on."

Archie	Victor Potel
Mildred	Ruby Cox
Fred	Wallace Beery
Nurse	Gretchen Lederer

Archie, a man well past the age of forty-five, proposes to Mildred, a young and pretty girl, and is rejected.

Fred, her youthful lover, then enters and does the same thing, and is accepted. As Fred leaves the house, it is very windy and a young lady passing by gets some dust in her eyes. He tries to assist and from Mildred's window it appears that he is embracing the young lady. Mildred's temper quickly rises, and she writes to Fred, calling off their engagement.

She then telephones Archie, and they marry immediately. Arriving at Archie's home, Mildred is dumbfounded to find that she has suddenly become the mother of six children.

Fred becomes sick, and the tender sympathies of the nurse at the hospital so play on his heart that he proposes marriage. After the ceremony, he goes to his bride's house and finds he has married a widow with seven children.

One year elapses. Mildred is dressed in mourning; Fred is without a wife. They meet by accident one day and after explanations have straightened matters out, they decide to get married at once. After the marriage they find they have a family of thirteen children; but in the final scene they are both happy, as they send the thirteen off to school.

Village Constable	Chas. Conklin
Flo, Cabaret Dancer	Lillian Peacock
Mr. Spinner	Milburn Moranti

Mr. Binks, the poor henpecked husband of the stern Mrs. Binks, goes to a banquet at the Cafe Salome, but it is only because the occasion is one of the gravest business importance that she permits him to go. Being somewhat late, he drives his car to the cafe, and there proceeds to drown his sorrows. Now comes along Mr. Spinner, a rather speedy specimen of humanity; well, after speeding things up a bit in the cafe, Spinner takes Flo, the cabaret girl, out for a spin. Being pretty tipsy he can't make his own car go so he swipes the nearest other one, which unfortunately is poor Binks'. During his joy ride Spinner does much damage in certain rural sections, ending up by smashing Slowton's monument, but Hank, the village constable at Slowton, gets his number, or, rather, gets Binks' number. Spinner returns Binks' car undamaged long before Binks is ready for it.

Well, things might not have been so bad for Binks the next morning when the charges were preferred against him for manslaughter, joy riding with pretty cabaret girls and destruction of valuable property, if a strange coincident had not occurred. During the most vital transaction of business affairs at the cafe, Binks, lying snoozing on a divan, dreams of the pretty cabaret girls; of his taking them out spinning in his car, of numerous smashups to the other parties, of getting away from the constable of Slowtown and of the very destruction of the monument of Slowtown.

So when Binks sees the warrant for his arrest, he actually believes himself guilty. He tips Hank, the constable, to give him time to make good the damages before his wife learns all. Mrs. Binks discovers Binks in the act of buying the girls hats and gowns to make amends. But Spinner arrives and explains all, so everybody is once more happy.

"MUTINY."

Imp Drama in One Reel.

Written by Ben Cohn.
Produced by Jay Hunt.

Capt. Gant	Albert MacQuarrie
Warren Gillcrest	Jack Holt
Grace	Lucille Younge

Captain Gant is a hard man. The closest he had ever come to having a friend was in the person of his mate, Warren Gillcrest. The Captain was hated by his men and his ever-ready fists were often called to keep them in subjection.

A few hours out of port, the men's dissatisfaction over their treatment comes to a head and they are on the point of attacking the captain when the leader counsels the men to wait until the ship is further away from land. The captain sees the signs of dissatisfaction among his men and returns to his cabin to prepare for it. As he starts down the gangway his attention is suddenly attracted to one of the hatchways and, watching unobserved, he sees a slight figure, dressed as a boy, emerge. When the captain confronts the stowaway the shock causes the stranger to stagger backward. Gant, seeing that it is a girl, takes her into his cabin and then attacks her.

Gillcrest has overheard the scuffle and realizes what is going on. He is unable to stand the thought of the girl being in the captain's power, and in spite of consequences, goes to her assistance. He and Gant have an awful fight, in which the captain is knocked out. Gillcrest takes the girl to the deck, and is on the point of lowering her to one of the boats when he looks back and sees the crew sneaking towards the captain's cabin.

The captain, meanwhile, has rushed on deck and finds himself in the midst of the men; they have a fierce fight and the captain is about overpowered from numbers when the leader is knocked out. The others hesitate, and at this moment Gillcrest rushes in and the crew all quit fighting. Gant is down. The girl rushes up and they find that he is seriously hurt. Gillcrest and the girl take him to his cabin and try to ease the last moments, but it is all in vain and the captain slowly sinks. He gradually loses his strength and begs forgiveness of both Gillcrest and the girl and tells them that he has always been among hard people and that is what had caused him to become so hard. As they forgive him the captain sinks back and his life slowly leaves his body.

Bertram Marshall	Howard Crampton
Ellen, his daughter	Sydell Dowling
The Groom	Sidney Bracey

A new groom is engaged by Marshall as an instructor for his daughter Ellen. Her horse runs away and she falls off, whereupon the groom, in picking her up, kisses her. She resents this, but does not tell her father. She is not so very averse to being in love with the groom, however, as he is very handsome and distinguished looking.

The next week the Marshalls give a ball. Two crooks gain entrance and are robbing the ladies' dressing room when the groom discovers them and tries to stop them. Ellen enters and fires her tiny revolver at the crowd, wounding the groom. When she sees who it is she accuses him of being an accomplice.

But the groom is recognized as Lord Deering. He says he came disguised as a groom to win Ellen's hand, knowing that she despised titled fortune-hunters. So there is no further obstacle to a happy marriage.

Ben Wilson in "The Circular Room"

"THE CIRCULAR ROOM," an Imp Drama in two reels, starring Ben Wilson and Edna Hunter, deals with the plots of foreigners to destroy American munition plants. The plot, by William Addison Lathrop, is very timely in these days when almost every morning's newspaper tells of some new atrocity. "The Circular Room" shows these plotters in their secret meeting place conspiring the destruction of a plant. And interwoven with this stirring story is a romantic love plot.

A feature of the picture is an explosion of one of the plotter's infernal machines in the round room from which the photoplay derives its name. The scene is very realistically worked out, the explosion being real in every respect. Edna Hunter, playing opposite Ben Wilson, in the leading female role, is very sympathetic. The story in brief follows:

Stuart Travers, the son of an American steel magnate, falls in love with Maida, the ward of Count Orloff. The count is the head of a league plotting the destruction of American munition plants. They hold their meetings in a secret circular room which can be entered only by way of a secret panel. At a meeting of the league there is produced a new type of infernal machine with which they hope to destroy the Travers steel plant.

A certain Von Tahn, one of the league, is also in love with Maida. He proposes and is furious when she refuses him. Maida then follows Von Tahn to the secret room and while looking for the spring to open the panel she overhears them plotting the ruin of the Travers steel works.

When the plotters leave, Maida hides in a closet to escape discovery. Just as Van Tahn, the last to leave, is passing the closet Maida drops something and is discovered. Von Tahn binds her in the circular room and sets the machine for five minutes past nine. He then leaves and overtakes his confederates. When he tells them what he has done they upbraid him and all return.

Meanwhile Maida has managed to knock the receiver off the telephone and phones Suart to come at once. He rushes to the scene with a policeman and just succeeds in getting Maida out in time. He himself is a trifle too late and is knocked unconscious by the explosion. However, Maida finds him still alive, and as the conspirators are arrested there is no obstacle to their happiness.

MARY FULLER in "A Splash of Local Color"

GOLD SEAL Two-Reel Modern Drama. Adapted by Catherine Carr from the story of Clifford F. Ivins. Produced by Lucius Henderson. Authoress, in search for local color, meets and marries her editor, who is on the same mission.

BESSIE LEE, a writer, is rooming in a cheap New York lodging house, an uncle in the country forwarding her an allowance each month. One morning with a rejected manuscript Bessie receives a sarcastic note from Thomas Harvey, editor of "Modern Life," a monthly magazine, informing her that she will never sell a story until she has had some actual experience and is able to put at least a splash of local color in her work. The same mail brings a letter from a country lawyer stating that Bessie's uncle died suddenly, leaving a heritage of debts.

After several pathetic experiences, friendless and penniless in the streets at night, Bessie, in desperation, appeals to a pedestrian, who proves to be a plain clothes detective, and he arrests her for soliciting. She is arraigned in the Night Court on a charge of street walking. Bessie frantically denies the accusation, but upon hearing her confession that she is but eighteen years of age and has no employment, home, money, friends or relatives, the judge sentences her to the Home of the Good Shepherd.

As the detective is about to lead her away a man seated in the rear of the courtroom, who has been an interested listener, rises, tells the judge that he is a Western ranch owner, that he likes Bessie's looks, believes her story and will marry her and give her a good home. Bessie, dazed, distracted and in a terror at the thought of the institution, agrees to marry the stranger.

CAST.

Bessie Lee	Mary Fuller
Thomas Harvey	Joseph W. Girard
Jake, a gangster	Charles Slattery
Bill, another gangster	Ed Murphy

Bessie, giving the name of Alice Kale, and the man, giving the name of Tom Moore, are married in the Night Court. Tom takes Bessie to a dilapidated furnished room in another part of the city. There they find food, which Bessie ravenously devours.

Two gangsters indulge in a quarrel in a nearby saloon. One gangster strikes the other and flees into the night; the other gangster, pistol in hand, pursues.

Bessie finishes her meal. Tom tells her that he is a burglar, that he lied in the court, and warns her not to leave the room until he returns. As Tom steps out in the upper hallway the fleeing gangster, who has dodged into the door below, arrives at the head of the stairs and quickly hides behind a barrel.

The pursuing gangster enters the lower hall, sees Tom at the head of the stairs, mistakes him for the enemy and fires at him. Tom sinks to the floor wounded. By a clever ruse she makes them believe she was the victim of the shot and sends them on a wild goose chase. The gangster, who hid behind the barrel, appears, congratulates the terrified Bessie on the clever way she "stalled" the "bulls" and helps her lay Tom on the bed in the room.

As the days go by Bessie nurses Tom and works as a scrub woman in a nearby drug store. Evenings and in spare moments she writes a story based on her recent experience.

One morning Tom, much improved, leaves a note for Bessie and disappears. Bessie has her story, "A Splash of Local Color," typewritten at a public stenographer's office and mails the script to "Modern Life," giving her address as general delivery, so that Tom will not know what she is doing. She returns to the room, finds Tom gone and discovers the note.

In the note Tom informs Bessie that he is not a burglar, and says he is worse than that, a masquerader, who married her for selfish reasons with the deliberate intention of deserting her, but instead of carrying out his plans he fell madly in love with her and could not stand living platonically with her any longer. The note concludes: "If you love me, wait for my Fayette Durand has had since childhood a mysterious ability to foretell the future. Her father scoffs at her power and an irksome antagonism arises between them. Henry Durand, the father, also objects to Gaston Du Valle as a suitor for his daughter's hand. So Gaston, wishing to exploit Fayette's power, induces her to leave home and establishes her as a professional medium.

A young man called Edgar Pearson calls on her several times to ask her advice about investments and finds that the advice is always sound. One day he asks her about a certain stock and she advises him to buy. Her father, not knowing who she is, asks her advice about the same stock. It is a choice between Edgar and her father. At last she decides to favor Edgar and advises her father to sell.

Later, Fayette's conscience hurts her and she reverses her decision. She rushes to the floor of the exchange and reverses her advice. As a result her father wins a fortune and Edgar loses all he has. When he rebukes Fayette for willfully ruining him, she takes pity on him and takes him to her father to try to make him return some of the money. Durand is immovable until Fayette lifts her veil. Then he relents and Fayette and Edgar are happily married.

Whitley arrives and she notices some papers in his coat pocket. Thinking these are the required documents, she proceeds to drug young Whitley. The Grand Duke, being in the next room, there is no way out. But Whitley sees her drug the wine and, instead of drinking it, pours it out and feigns to be in a stupor. When she starts to take the papers her love for the man overcomes her fear for the duke, and she locks the door to the room where the duke is and tries to waken Whitley. But the duke breaks down the door. There ensues a terrific struggle, which ends in the overthrow of the duke. Whitley then says that he is John Standing of the secret service, on detail to find out who it is that wants to steal the plans.

Standing then tells Lisa that she is his prisoner. She offers to be led away, but he tells her that if she is willing he will be her jailer for life.

Harold du Vane	Hayward Mack
Lillian	Mina Cunard
Nell	Vola Smith
Jim	Nobert Myles
Dave	Edward Brown

Harold du Vane and his wife have a misunderstanding, caused by Harold's attentiveness to his paintings. He and his wife quarrel and Harold tells her that he is going to some quiet place where he can work without interruption.

A short time later, Harold arrives in the heart of the wilderness. Nearby, there is a camp of an old woodcutter, Dave Woodward, and his daughter Nell. Jim Smith, a young man, assists old Dave with his wood cutting. He has long loved Nell, but she has refused to take his love seriously and puts him off from time to time.

She and Harold meet and he recognizes her as a type he is desirous of painting. She is easily persuaded to pose for him. Their intimacy grows from day to day. One day Harold realizes that Nell loves him and he feels a momentary pang of regret for leading her on and neglecting his wife. He is unable to forget the thought and leans against a tree fighting his battle. At last his weary mind rests and he dozes off.

Nell's father is mortally wounded by a falling tree and Jim brings him to the cabin. Before dying, the old man places the care of his daughter in Jim's hands and tells him he hopes that they will marry. This thought is too much for Nell, and in an outburst she tells Jim that she could never marry him and the artist has her love. She rushes out and hurries to the artist's camp. She throws herself in Harold's arms and declares her love. He sadly tells her that he is married and that he must return to his wife. She begs him to meet her that night at a certain spot under the fourth tree. Harold goes to the appointed place and finds the fourth tree to be in the midst of a lake. On looking closer, he finds Nell beneath the water. Jim has crept to the place and accused Harold of murdering the girl, and just as Harold is about to be killed he is awakened by Nell playfully shaking him.

He can hardly believe Nell is real. He tells her that he is returning to his wife and that as a wedding present to Jim and herself he is leaving the picture. He returns home and hurrying to his wife's room, finds that in his absence a little stranger has arrived. There is a happy reconciliation between the husband and the wife and it is hoped that the presence of the third person will tend to draw them closer.

Bert persuades the blacksmith to rent him a rig, but must wait until the smith has finished mending the wagon. While this is going on, Bert hears a scream from the pretty girl, whose purse has been snatched by a thief. Bert gives chase to the tramp and after a battle recovers the purse and hurries back with it. He then consents to take charge of the child for a few seconds.

In the meanwhile, Jim Baker has arrived at Barlow, and has bribed the blacksmith to hire him the rig.

Bert sees his rival, Jim Baker, calmly driving away with his rig, to steal his story. Bert gives chase with the baby clinging to his neck, and the girl, thinking the child about to be kidnapped, runs wildly after.

Baker triumphantly escapes, and Bert, too angry to explain to the girl, thrusts the baby in her arms and dashes away to whip the traitorous blacksmith. As they are about to fight, the girl comes up and gets the facts. Thereupon she bursts into laughter, announces that she is Lesley Hartman, the architect, and that Baker will have his trip for nothing. Also, she is NOT married.

"Timothy Dobbs, That's Me"

GREATEST comedy series ever filmed, with Carter De Haven in title role, will start the week of August 14—Twelve two-reel episodes to be released—Directed by Wallace Beery from scenarios by Bess Meredyth.

Carter De Haven and his director, Wallace Beery, talking over a script for "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," Series.

MANY series, as distinguished from serials, have been released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in its brilliant career. They have found a recognized place on the wonderful Universal program and exhibitors have been enabled to make a great deal of extra money owing to the cumulative advertising value which accompanies this kind of picture. Examples in point are the "Terence O'Rourke" series, the "Under the Crescent" series, and the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series. Exhibitors made tremendous amounts of money with each one. Now the Universal announces a series which it considers superior to any of these and in fact, to any series which has ever been released on any program. Its series title is "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," and Carter De Haven is starred in the title role.

The underlying idea of the series was suggested to Carter De Haven by Vice-President H. O. Davis himself, and the general manager of Universal City felt so strongly the picture possibilities of the idea, that he asked Mr. Laemmle to hold the episodes of this series as they came in, until he himself realized that in them the Universal had a unique and tremendously valuable property. This has been done, and now seven two-reel episodes are on the shelf of the Universal vaults at 1600 Broadway, ready to go out to exhibitors, and the Universal officials were never so confident of a knockout as they are with the Carter De Haven series which they know will clean up the world over.

Upon his return from Chicago, Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, announced that this series would begin on August 14th, and that one two-reel episode would be released each week from then on, until the twelve episodes have been completed. This series will be released in the same manner as the Universal serials, and will be listed in the program in the same way—that is, "The week of August 14th." The title of the first two-reel episode is "The Soda Clerk," and that of the second, which will be released the week of August 21st, "A Thousand Dollars a Week?"

Carter De Haven is the star of the series, and is supported by various people in the different episodes, although Ropert Milash, who plays the role of Jeff, appears in every episode, too. The series was directed by Wallace Beery, who made such a hit with Mr. Davis, and the other Universal officials, that he was given a year's contract at a much better figure, and the synopsis were made by Bess Meredyth, whose genius at scenario writing was never better shown than in this series. Particular attention has been paid to the sets, and an immense amount of money has been expended, oftentimes for the thrill of a single moment. No pains or expense have been spared to make these productions complete, and on a par with the best that Universal City can furnish.

The background of the entire series is Universal City; for be it known that Timothy Dobbs, quite apart from any desire of his own, is a moving picture aspirant, and one in whom the torch of confidence in his own ability burns with the brightness of the Statue of Liberty, and entirely by self-fed fires. In the first episode we find Timothy Dobbs, as the title of the episode implies, a soda clerk in the humble town of Centerville. Due to his attractive appearance, his confidence in himself, his ability to mix soda drinks, and his natural politeness to the women patrons of the soda factory, he is a social lion among the girls, and an object of disdain and jealousy among the boys.

Mildred, the belle of another hamlet, arrives in town with a new vogue. She is a moving picture hero worshipper. Nothing to her eyes is of any importance unless it centers about a moving picture hero, and the names of Kerrigan, Rawlinson, Leonard, Baggot, Garwood, Wilson, Carey, Henley, Smalley, and Billie Ritchie are household words to her. So thoroughly does she divert the interest of the town from Timothy to the alluring delights of the moving picture stars that he sees his popularity rapidly vanishing down the back street. Something must be done, and in a careless moment he suggests to Mildred that he, too, has received an offer to go into pictures. The effect is so electrical, and the news so quickly spread, that his inventive genius is catapulted into an imaginary thousand dollars a week offer, and there is nothing left for him to do but to start for California in order to keep the air rising in his newly inflated balloon of popular interest. This is Timothy's start.

His mand maidens are Jeff, a giant

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

MONTREAL, P. Q., July.—For operating a moving picture theatre on St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal, without a license, George Gladianos and Henry Pulos were condemned to $30 and costs, or two months in jail, by Judge Ganctot in the Police Court yesterday.

Mr. Louis Kauffman, late of the Metro staff and formerly of the old Canadian Film Company, was married on Wednesday, July 12, in Winnipeg. As Mr. Kauffman is very well and favorably known in Canada, he has the united good wishes of all Canadian film men.

The Toronto Universal Exchange here reports another very busy week, including many visitors from out of town. Mr. Joseph Bedard, of Quebec City; Mr. Walsh, of Huntingdon, Que.; Mr. Kennedy, of Coaticooke, Que., were among the film men in town, and Mr. Kennedy was combining business with pleasure, as he was visiting his youngest son, who has enlisted in one of the Montreal regiments. Mr. Bayeur, of Sherbrooke, was also in Montreal and agreed with the gentlemen above that business was very satisfactory as far as general conditions were concerned.

PERTH, Ont., July.—It is said that Mr. Soper, of the Radeau Theatre, Smith Falls, Ont., will either erect a new house in Perth or will occupy one of the present houses.

HAMILTON, Ontario, July.—Reports from all sections of Ontario, and in fact from all over Canada, indicate that "Peg O' the Ring" is breaking all records for paid admissions. This is due partly to the popularity of Grace Cunard since the popularity contest, in which she made such a remarkable showing in Toronto, and partly to the cleverness of the story and the very fact that it is a circus serial. The Empire Theatre of this city reports that "The Broken Coin" was the house record-breaker, but that "Peg O' the Ring" has gone over the old figure by more than $20.000 at every performance.

HAMILTON, Ont., July.—The practical work of baby week in Hamilton, Ont., consisted in lectures, which were given nightly in the city's schools to the mothers, and the exhibition of moving pictures sent out by the Provincial Board of Health. In the afternoon there is a special showing for the children, while the evening exhibition is chiefly for the mothers. During the last month, previous to the baby week, in Hamilton exhibitions were given in twenty-four towns in eastern Ontario, and it is estimated that over 29,000 people saw the films.

TORONTO, Ont., July, 1916.—The government is seriously considering taking legal action against some of the playhouses here because of fraud in connection with the collection of the war-time amusement tax. Some of the tickets sold to patrons are being turned back to the theatres to be resold. It is interesting to know that this tax will be permanent after the war to replace the tax on liquor, now that the province has gone dry.

OTTAWA, Ont., July—Among the new corporations in Ottawa, Can., is the Standard Film Service, Ltd., moving picture manufacturers.

Teaching Surgery in Canada by Moving Pictures

THE scientific value of the moving picture has been demonstrated in many fields, but few are aware of the part it is destined to play in the saving of human life. Yet this phase of the moving picture field was fully demonstrated last week in Toronto before a recent meeting of the Ontario Medical Association when an exhibition of pictures was given by Drs. I. A. Wyeth, John A. Bodine and C. H. Chetwood, of New York City, illustrating sugical operations. It was a novel experience for all the medical men present and was heralded as a wonderful advance in the method of teaching students.

That the present method of teaching medical students the technique of surgical operations is very defective has long been a recognized fact among the professors in the great medical schools of the country. It is at best very difficult to pay attention to anything for a period of time. But when one has to observe a delicate operation from a distance it borders on the impossible. Yet this is what is demanded of the students in all of the medical colleges in the country. The operating theatres are arranged with galleries of benches in which the students sit. Even the first row students are anywhere from ten to fifteen feet from the operation, whereas the students in the back rows can see almost nothing.

Another difficulty with the present facilities is that only one or two at most of each type of operation can be demonstrated. The student is left to get most of his instruction at the expense of the patients. And still another fault is that the professor is so busy with the operation that he cannot explain to the students exactly what he is doing.

It is obvious that the films eliminate all these difficulties. The pictures thrown on the screen at Ontario illustrated some of the work done in the famous New York Polyclinic Hospital and included some amputations, bone transplantations and other delicate operations. Only the actual field occupied by the surgeon's hands was shown, so that the minutest detail was visible to the eye. Even the student in the front row could not see as much as these pictures reveal. Furthermore, by merely turning a handle any required stage in a particular operation can be projected on the screen and repeated as many times as desired without fear of bad consequences to the patient upon whom the original surgical demonstration was made.

The value to the student of pictures such as these is incalculable. Of course nothing can take the place of actual experience in the operating room, but to the student in his third year, instruction will be given in the future by means of moving pictures. The picture theatre will be an indispensable adjunct to every well equipped school of medicine.

WITH THE EXCHANGES

IN order to give more space to the constantly growing business carried on by the Film Supply Company, of Portland, Ore., Mr. G. A. Metzger, manager of the exchange, has seen fit to change quarters, and the exchange is now located in their new and elaborate offices at 405-407 Davis Street. The Portland office is now the finest equipped exchange on the Pacific Coast. The space they are occupying is 50 x 100 feet with basement. The offices are arranged according to their usefulness, as follows:

On the left, as you enter the door, is the cashier and bookkeeper's office. On the right is the manager's office, which is arranged in such a manner that the manager can sit at his desk and see what is going on over the entire exchange, not only seeing all the customers that come into the office, but also what the various departments are doing. There is one vault which will accommodate 1,500 reels; also a second vault for records, books and stationery. The shipping room is a separate fireproof room and the inspection room is also a separate fireproof room. The exhibition room is twelve feet wide by thirty feet in length. This big projection room is a separate room with a standard moving picture lamp room built in at the back, equipped with a Power Six B Cameragraph. The poster department is equipped with racks with movable partitions arranged in such a manner that six sheets, three sheets and one sheet on every subject are carried together. The Supply Department is arranged for the convenience of exhibitors, so that they can be waited on promptly and with efficiency.

Mr. Metzger has also been appointed by the Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc., to manage the Bluebird exchange of Portland, and for his own convenience he has seen fit to keep the two exchanges under the same roof. The Bluebird Exchange of Portland is therefore located at the same address, with offices equally as elaborate, and Mr. Metzger can easily boast of having under his supervision two of the best equipped and smoothest running exchanges in that section of the country.

"A SPLASH OF LOCAL COLOR."

return one week from today, when you shall know me as my true self." Bessie is delighted, for she has grown to love Tom.

Every morning Bessie goes to the postoffice. One morning she gets a letter from "Modern Life." Editor Harvey writes that he accepts "A Splash of Local Color" and adds that he recently took great pains and jeopardized his life to obtain local color for a story which he himself intended to write along the same lines, but that Bessie's story is much the best and he wishes she would call personally at the office so that he may congratulate her and hand her the check.

At the magazine headquarters Bessie is announced and enters Editor Harvey's private office. Harvey is sitting at a desk, his back to the door. He rises, turns and holds out his hand. Harvey is Tom Moore. Both Bessie and Tom are amazed at discovering each other's true identity and rush into each other's arms.

servant in his family, and a devoted slave to the diminutive Timothy, and the Colossal Confidence aforementioned. Jeff becomes in the new regime Timothy's valet, his right-hand bower, the scape-goat for his many and inevitable failures at picture acting, and his protector and sympathetic confidant upon all occasions. Colossal Confidence, the left-hand bower, is the motive power, the commander-in-chief, and cause of the mishaps which follow with amazing regularity through the twelve episodes. The idea is unique, and each episode, while embodying the same central thought, is worked out in so different a way that each story in the series brings a new angle to the much-suffering Timothy's picture career.

Carter De Haven was for years, before going into moving pictures, one of the bright lights on Broadway. A charming personality combined with a great amount of real talent for entertainment have made him dear to the hearts of theatre-goers all over the country. It was Carter who so ably stepped into George Cohan's shoes when the latter fell ill during the production of "The Yankee Prince." In less than eighteen hours he mastered the songs, lines, cues, business, and in short everything that was necessary to make the part a success. In fact De Haven was such a success that Mr. Cohan insisted on having him play the part for the remainder of the season.

THREE OF THE PRINCIPALS IN "LIBERTY" SERIAL

time, for Hart has forsaken his old part to play in the new Universal serial, "Liberty." In this he takes the part of Major Winston, a United States army officer, one of the guardians of Liberty Horton, the heroine of the picture, and a trustee of her estate. The plot of the picture gives Hart a fine chance to display his talent as an expert horseman.

Neal Hart is thoroughly familiar with Western Life, as he has always lived in that section of the country. For many years he was deputy sheriff in Converse County, Wyoming. Before being an officer of the law Hart rode the range for twenty years and was secretary of a land and live stock company. He was foreman on a ranch for five years at Willow, Wyo., and bought thousands of horses for foreign governments. About two years ago he entered the moving picture field and has been a great success in Western photoplays.

MARIE WALCAMP, THE DARE-DEVIL OF THE FILMS.

that even this dare-devil of the films ever performed, furnishes the principal thrill in the Bison picture, "The Human Pendulum." Miss Walcamp rides a runaway horse, which has been scared by a real live bear, over the brink of a cliff, over one hundred and fifty feet in height. In her plunge, she manages to grasp the edge of a projecting ridge of rock, and hang there in midair. The hero and his friends are attracted by her shouts for help, but cannot reach her. Then the hero, Lee Hill again, has himself suspended by the ankles over the brink of the cliff, his friend holding him firmly. Still he cannot reach the girl. But he wriggles out of his coat and drops the sleeve of that down to her. She grasps it and they are drawn gradually up and over the edge to safety. During the staging of this feature, the three actors hung for several minutes in a human chain, swaying like the pendulum, which gives the picture its name. None of them was sorry when the incident was safely recorded.

A book might be filled with descriptions of the feats which this daring girl has accomplished. She fairly thrives on danger, and is perfectly happy when allowed to risk her life. The Universal Film Company has decided to take still further advantage of this idiosyncrasy of hers, and is preparing to put Marie Walcamp into their next serial as heroine, where she will have a splendid opportunity to endanger life and limb to her heart's content.

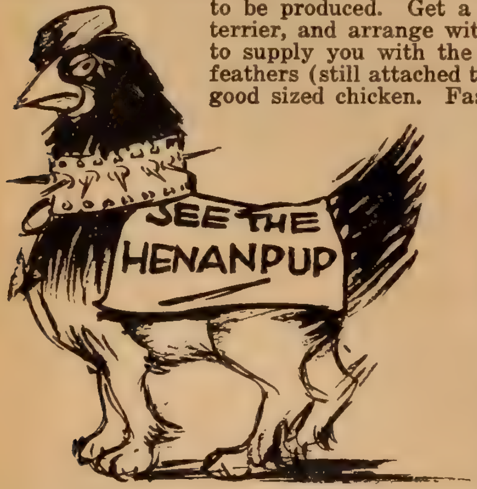
PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

PLEASE remember, friends, that it isn't so much the bigness of a picture that you do special advertising for, as much as it is the merit of the subject. Just to show you we have included in this week's stunts two single reel subjects that are novelties and crackerjacks and sure to please. Also they lend themselves easily to stunt advertising. With the basis of an attractive stunt to arouse the interest of the fans, all you have to do is to take advantage of this fact by calling attention not only to the feature or subject specially advertised, but also to THE BALANCE OF YOUR PROGRAM FOR THE WEEK OR THE DAY as the case may be. Remember to get full value from every stunt.

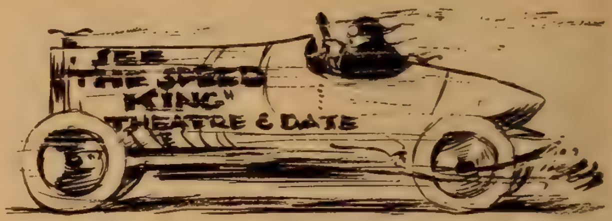
"THE HENANPUP"

"THE HENANPUP," to be released August 8, is the odd title of one of the oddest, most fascinating novelties ever presented. Strictly speaking, it is a juvenile, but it is the sort of juvenile that gives keen enjoyment to young and old alike. While this picture is a one-reeler it is well worth boosting in the following novel manner: The illustration shows the effect to be produced. Get a small dog, fox terrier, and arrange with your butcher to supply you with the head and neck feathers (still attached to the skin) of a good sized chicken. Fasten these on a wire head muzzle and add the tail feathers as shown. Put a blanket on the dog with the name of the picture, "The Henanpup," name of your theatre and have the dog led through the streets by a man or a boy dressed as an old professor. Give him a long frock, old-fashioned standing collar, black string tie, long gray wig, rusty "stovepipe" hat, spectacles or colored goggles, etc. You'll attract a lot of attention. Let the boy or man distribute your heralds, programs, throwaways, etc., en route.



"THE SPEED KING"

"THE SPEED KING" is a wonderful racing play, to be released August 13. It is reviewed on page 45 of this issue. The illustration shows plainly the stunt that will attract the attention of every one in your town. If there is no racing car to be had you can take the body off of any car available and substitute a long hood and body of tin, painted a battleship gray. Or you can put a false body looking like the one in the illustration on any runabout and make a classy, sassy looking racer. Dress the driver in racing togs; leather helmet, goggles, gauntlets, etc. Read the review and you will get a lot of ideas for copy for placards, banners, etc. When the car is not being driven on the streets have it standing in front of your theatre.



"BEN, THE SAILOR"

FOR a clever window or lobby display get a half dozen large size dolls and dress them as shown in the accompanying illustration as boys and girls and sailors. Get some crepe hair, to make whiskers, or to change the style of hair as you choose. This comes in any color desired and costs but a few cents a foot. One foot is all you need. Apply with spirit gum. Put a pedestal in your lobby, on which you can put placards announcing the picture something like this:

SEE THE GREATEST OF THE SEASON'S NOVELTIES

DOLLS AS MOVING PICTURE ACTORS

IN THE MANIKIN COMEDY,
"BEN, THE SAILOR,"
Now Being Shown. See if You Can Tell How This Marvellous Picture Was Produced.

On top of the pedestal put a box lined with black velvet on the top, bottom and side walls; at the back tack blue cloth and arrange a toy battleship in the folds of the blue cloth which represents sea and sky. A little care will make this very effective. Use an electric bulb in the box if necessary, but conceal it. You can get a rich effect by putting a gold frame around the box. Paint the outside of the box black. "Ben the Sailor," is to be released August 10.

"Timothy Dobbs--that's Me"

The Inimitable

Carter De Haven Comedy Series

Beyond question the funniest thing in film comedy. Absolutely clean, fresh and wholesome fun. No resort to slap-stick methods to produce roars of laughter. Imagine if you can that master of stagecraft—Carter De Haven—portraying a boob who thinks he can act, who is trying to break into the movies on his nerve, and you get a faint idea of the outline on which this clever series is built. Directed by Wallace Beery, with the cleverest people in Universal City as a supporting company, with the Universal City Zoo, the magnificent stages, outdoor props, all the mighty facilities and resources of the Universal, and you can see that the "Timothy Dobbs" Series is being produced on a scale more lavish than ever before attempted.

This superb series will be released two reels a week on the regular Universal Program TO EXHIBITORS WHO TAKE THE ENTIRE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM SERVICE. To those using a split program a slight additional charge will be made to cover cost of individual bookings. If you want to make yours the popular comedy house of your town, write your nearest Universal Exchange today before your competitor does.

Red Feather Photoplay of Four Weeks from This Week

"THE SPEED KING." With Richard Stanton and Marcia Moore. Two-Reel Imp Automobile Racing Drama. Directed by Richard Stanton. Released August 13. A wonderful picture, as unusual as it is thrilling and absorbing. Every one who saw the great Universal serial "Graft," which Richard Stanton directed, knows that he has the power of putting a punch into his pictures and that he is a stickler for realism. The latter quality is responsible for the wonderful auto racing scenes in "The Speed King," for the picture was staged and photographed at the Corona race track at the time of the big race meet there when the famous racing driver, Bob Burman, was killed. In the story Richard, known as the "Speed King," is building a special racing car to enter the big Corona race. He is short of funds and does repairing on the side to keep going; but he is in despair as the race is only a week away and he has not enough money to complete his big speedster. Marcia is the daughter of a wealthy man, who, because of past performance, has bet a thousand dollars on the "speed king" with a friend who wants to marry Marcia. Marcia's own little car goes wrong and Richard comes to fix it. They are mutually attracted and Richard tells her of his money troubles. She tells her father, who realizes that unless the speed king races, his bet is lost. The friend proposes to Marcia and is refused. When father gives the money to Richard the friend bribes Richard's mechanician to cripple the car. Then comes the actual Corona race with close-ups of Barney Oldfield, Earl Cooper, Bob Burman, and other daredevil drivers. In an exciting finish Richard's car wins, in spite of the traitorous helper, and a fitting climax closes one of the most exciting and novel pictures we have seen in many moons. See the special advertising stunt on the "Putting It Over" page, this issue.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"THE MARK OF CAIN." With Dorothy Phillips. and Lon Chaney. Twenty-eighth Red Feather Production. A Drama of Love Under the Shadow of the Law. Directed by Joseph De Grasse. Released August 27. "Life is real; life is earnest"—so the poet tells us, but that doesn't mean that all the real and earnest things of life are disagreable. This strong Red Feather shows us that the most real and earnest things in life, even though they come only after a struggle, are love and faith and comradeship and loyalty. You remember the old guy that said, "I've had a lot of trouble in my life, but most of it never happened." Well, Dorothy and Lon had their troubles all right, but when the clouds rolled by they found that all their troubles were but dross and only the pure gold of love remained. Each had a wrong start in life. Lon's father was a criminal, and Lon never knew it until his father, fleeing from the law, begged his son to save him for the sake of the wife and mother. Lon took his father's crime of burglary on his own shoulders and was sent to prison. Dorothy was the step-daughter of a drunken crook, who forced her to steal. Reaching the limit of his abuse she left him to end all 'neath friendly waters. Lon at the bridge, on a similar errand, sees and rescues her and the two derelicts start out to battle together for existence. Desperate for food for Dorothy more than for himself Lon attempts to pick a pocket. He is caught in the act and his intended victim gives him money and offers him a job. Dorothy has secured work as a nurse girl, and the two seem on the high road to a modest prosperity. Lon's benefactor proves to be head of a gang of jewel thieves and soon has Lon fast in his toils. His mother, for whom he has searched in vain, is housekeeper for Dorothy's employers, unknown to either. The gang boss plans to use Lon and Dorothy to pull off a big robbery, and a tremendous scene in which all the principals are engaged, ensues which forces a climax both unexpected and unusual.

"ONDA OF THE ORIENT." With Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo. Three - Reel Gold Seal Missing-Will Drama in an Oriental Setting. Directed by Henry McRae. Released August 8. Isn't it the funniest thing how some producers find it necessary to call all their pictures over two reels a "classic, de luxe, extra special gold medal prize feature"—while the poor old decrepit Universal has to stumble along putting big two-reel and three-reel features and novelties with honest-to-goodness stars and stories big enough for five reelers on the regular Universal Program, with no loud shouting or special advertising, except the modest efforts of yours truly on this page. Just putting them on the regular Universal Program, making high-priced special features unnecessary; giving the Universal Exhibitors a varied and scientifically balanced program that gets the crowds and the dough, and scares the well known wolf up the street to camp on the doorstep of their competitors. You betcha. You all know both Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo and how much pep they put into their work. In this unusual picture Marie is the supposed daughter of a wealthy man with a dissolute son, whom he threatens to cast off. In a quarrel the father tells the son Marie is not his daughter; that twenty years ago he, the father, was the confidential agent of the Filipino insurrectos; that he murdered his chief, stole his fortune and his daughter Marie, and escaped to America. The three reels are filled with the most thrilling situations. Marie sails for the Philippines to learn who her father was and to regain her fortune through her father's will, written in cipher on the blade of a dagger. Eddie Polo is the avenger who, formerly in the service of Marie's real father, thinks Marie an impostor. Much of the action takes place on a Pacific liner, and the thrills come fast and furious. In big scenes and dramatic action, in suspense, love interest and climax this picture is a corker.

"THE GUILTY ONE." Cleo Madison and Wm. V. Mong. Directed by Cleo Madison herself. Two-Reel 101 Bison Stage Robbery Drama with a Strong Love Motive. Released August 12. In real life Cleo Madison is the sweetest and most womanly young person it is possible to imagine. As a director Cleo Madison stages some of the most thrilling and daring pictures known to the screen. And as an actress she is a combination of the sweet and womanly and the recklessly daring. Perhaps these statements explain why all the Universal fans of the male persuasion want to marry Cleo, and why all the sweet girl fans want to go into the movies and "be like Cleo Madison." Well, anyhow, be that as it may comma, Cleo is about as popular a young person as there is on the screen today, and she has earned every bit of her popularity. She adds to her reputation in this picture, both as an actress and as a director. It's strong stuff, gentlemen" and deserves a lot of boosting. Cleo is the daughter of a stage driver and is loved by Billy and by Charlie, the deputy sheriff. Billy proposes and is refused. She shows her love for Charlie, who complains to the sheriff that his deputy's salary is too small. Billy plans to rob the stage and throw the blame on Charlie. He and a pal stretch a rope across the road and when Charlie comes riding by he is thrown violently. Billy takes Charlie's coat and hat and holds up the stage. He drops the hat at the scene of the robbery and returns the coat to the unconscious deputy. A posse starts for Charlie, who, on regaining consciousness, goes to Cleo's home, where he first learns that he is wanted for the robbery. Cleo sends him into hiding and starts to unravel the mystery. Billy attempts to double cross his pal on the division of the spoils. A terrific fight ensues. Cleo enters, the stage loot is discovered as a table is overturned, and she leaves to join her vindicated lover and lead him from his hiding place. One of the strongest two-reelers you ever saw with beautiful photography and a strong plot.

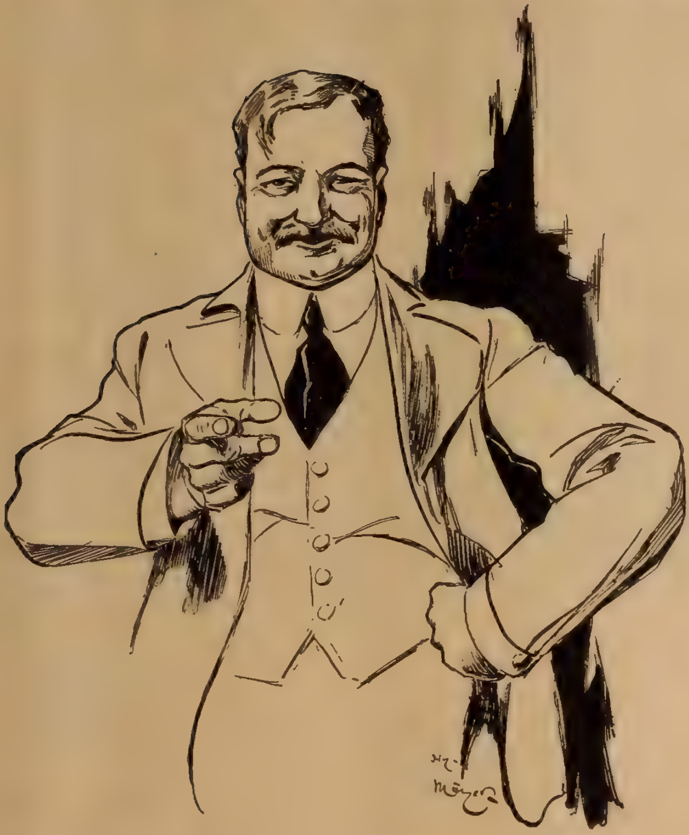
Introducing



"Universal Sam"

I am "Universal Sam!"

I am ALL exhibitors rolled into ONE.

I am Sam Rothapfel—and the fellow who runs that 150-seat house in Pee Dee, S. C.

Experience? Lots of it. It started back in the days of the first store show and has ripened with the industry.

So, because I am the average exhibitor, I'm going to speak to you occasionally through the medium of this page, on those matters which interest the average exhibitor——

YOU!

I'm going to talk plainly on the subject of features and service—principally service, because service has made the most money for you and me, and back to which we're rapidly going.

My first talk will appear next week——

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

ANIMATED WEEKLY HAS HUMPBACKED MASCOT.

"RUB a hump for luck."

It's an old proverb and Jack Cohn, editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, so firmly believes in it that he has engaged a hunchbacked dwarf as a permanent mascot for the Animated cameramen. Every time a cameraman begins work, Jack has warned him to rub his hand quickly over the hump of the Animated Dwarf.

"Films will never buckle and static will positively not occur when the hump of the hunchback has been appeased by a gentle massage," declares Jack.

Whenever Jack has an important assignment to be filled the dwarf is hustled out of the Animated Weekly office at 1600 Broadway with the cameraman.

HURRICANE RUINS MOBILE.

NUMBER thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly shows what was left of Mobile, Ala., after it was devasted by the hurricane. It is estimated that the damage amounts to about $5,000,000 dollars, to say nothing of the hardships the people are forced to undergo on account of their ruined houses.

The force of the storm was something that is hard to conceive of. The steamer "City of Mobile" was lifted bodily out of the water and heaved upon the city dock. A large tug belonging to the United Fruit Company was also stranded high and dry on shore. A banana elevator was entirely ruined by the water which was fifteen feet deep at this point. The L. and N. pier was entirely demolished. It was very humorous to see some of the oyster boats rammed against buildings on Commerce Street over 150 feet from the bay. Sea-going barges were found as far inland as three miles, some of them being stranded on the main line of the L. and N. road.

Cotton was blown about in a radius of about three miles, and had to be gathered by a huge salvage corps. The Mobile Yacht Club, a building two stories high, was completely blown way. There is nothing left to show that a building was there, even the foundation being gone.

NAVAL MILITIA ALSO OUT.

THE land militia seem to be getting about all the glory out of the present situation. No one thinks of the poor Jack-Tar rookies who have turned out at the call of President Wilson. Number Thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly, however, shows the naval militia turning out for their cruise. The New York Battalion is shown boarding the old battleship, Kentucky.

BOY SCOUTS REVIEWED AT CONEY ISLAND.

THE review of over 7,000 Boy Scouts at Coney Island is shown in the thirtieth number of the Universal Animated Weekly. There were contests in all the fields of the Boy Scout work and prizes amounting to over a thousand dollars were awarded.

For the first time in the history of the Boy Scout movement there was a battery of light mounted artillery all in heavy marching order, with regulation guns and equipment.

Among the guests in the reviewing standing were many U. S. Army officers and high officials in the Boy Scout movement.

GENERAL FRENCH REVIEWS VOLUNTEERS.

NUMBER Thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Field Marshal Viscount French, commander-in-chief of the home forces of Great Britain, inspecting the volunteer training corps in Hyde Park. The review was held in celebration of government recognition having been accorded to the body.

The film shows the arrival of Viscount French and his staff, the inspection of the lines, the volunteers marching past and Marshal French addressing the officers.

A WELCOME DIP.

NUMBER Thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Baltimore infantry on their way to the border stopping at North Bend, Ind., for a swim. The troops were Companies A, B, C and D, Fourth Infantry, Baltimore, Md. The soldiers seem to enjoy their swim after the long and dusty train ride and make the most of their opportunity for fun. Lieutenant-Colonel Filbert is shown in somewhat undignified attire enjoying the sport with the rest of the boys.

FIRST AMERICAN DERBY IN ELEVEN YEARS.

FOR the first time in eleven years the American Derby, with $10,000 in the prize money, was held in Chicago. Number Thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly shows a view of the whole affair. There is a panorama of the grandstand watching a finish, also the start and finish of the Sherman Subscription Handicap is shown.

And then the big event itself, the Derby, is shown. They're off and the horses go racing around the track. A few seconds later they finish and the big event is over. A close view of the winner is also shown.

WITH THE BOYS ON THE BORDER.

THE Animated Weekly for this week gives a good idea of the life that the militiamen are leading on the border. First they are shown at bayonet drill. This is very tiring work, as the rifles and bayonets weigh about twelve pounds and to lunge with them held out at arms' length is no snap. The ease with which they go through the different evolutions belies their difficulties.

Next they are shown in combat drill, advancing on the enemy by rushes. Sometimes they go forward by companies or platoons, although when in tight places a squad and corporal is the largest number that can be spared from the firing line at one time to take up a new position. They advance in sections so that the ones advancing can have the protection of their comrades' fire.

"Eats" is the term applied to the most important event of the day. The table manners are not all exactly according to Hoyle, but there is no lack of appetite. The commissary department has been endeavoring to give the men a diet suitable to the great heat on the border.

Needless to say, every precaution is taken against typhoid. Innoculation with the serum is made compulsory and all the men bravely march up to undergo the great ordeal. It is not so terrible, however, being nothing more than a hypodermic injection of the serum.

SPANISH U-BOATS.

THE first submarine to be built in this country for the Spanish government was just recently launched. Number Thirty of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Ambassador Riano's wife christening the new boat.

Other events in the Weekly are girl swimmers battling for national titles in San Francisco; Mme. Christine Tangenhan giving a cup to Paul Koenig, the Deutschland's intrepid commander; society girls aeroplaning on the Hudson, and wreckers pulling down buildings wrecked by fire and rioters in Dublin, Ireland.

"The Secret of the Swamp"

Chet moves in to the Slocum place.

BLUEBIRD Photo Play, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, featuring George Hernandez, Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Fred Church. Unanimous approval of trade press greets unusual story with strong dramatic construction, plenty of comedy, and a delightful touch of mystery at the end.

"A GEM"—that is the verdict of the reviewers on the latest Bluebird release, "The Secret of the Swamp." Some of these opinions are quoted in full on next page. This charming photoplay was written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, a young director who has been making a name for himself by the direction of his own stories, with Miss Myrtle Gonzalez as his featured player. This picture is the finest thing that he has ever done, and worthy of the high standards of Bluebird Photoplays. Their slogan, "The play's the thing," has excited much favorable comment in the press and in the publications devoted to motion picture affairs. Their policy of making the story their first consideration, not the "stars," has been approved far and wide, as the most promising for the future of motion pictures. But their insistence upon a first-class story first of all does not mean that the casts will be neglected. A review of the names of players appearing in Bluebird Photoplays is enough to refute this idea. It does mean, however, that players who are peculiarly fitted for the portrayal of certain roles will be cast for them, whether their names are familiar to the public or not. This is as it should be. One has only to read the countless books and articles by famous critics of the stage on the evils of the abuse of the star-system to realize that the Bluebird organization has taken a stand which means improvement in the production of motion pictures.

CAST.

Major Burke	George Hernandez
Emily Burke	Myrtle Gonzalez
Allan Waite	Fred Church
Deacon Todd	Frank MacQuarrie
Chet Wells	Val Paul
His Mother	Countess du Cello
Deacon's houstekeeper,	Lule Warrenton
The Sheriff	Jack Curtis

A glance at the cast selected for this picture by Director Reynolds shows that, although they were chosen primarily for their suitability to the roles they are called upon to portray, yet many of them bear names which are well and honorably known to the patrons of the silent drama. Miss Gonzalez has been steadily gaining in popularity, and the number of letters which she receives every day proves that she is a favorite. Many of them bear South American post-marks, for the temperamental Southerners seem particularly attracted by her brunette beauty. She makes a captivating figure as Emily in this play. Val Paul is exactly the type which the story calls for, and as Chet Wells he gives a sympathetic and apealing performance. George Hernandez, than whom there is no better player of his type of light comedy roles on the screen to-day, is excellent as the peppery Major. All the smaller roles fit their portrayers like the proverbial glove, and the whole thing moves with a smoothness and steady increase of effect until the climax at the end, which is as original as any ever seen on the screen.

The story of this splendid play runs as follows:

Chet Wells, with his invalid mother, rents a piece of property from Deacon Todd for the purpose of demonstrating Chet's ideas of "scientific farming." Major Burke and his daughter, Emily, are near neighbors. Emily is engaged to marry a wealthy young man of the neighborhood. The girl's neighborly kindness to the invalid, Mrs. Wells, brings her into frequent association with Chet, with the result that the young people become fond of each other without openly expressing their mutual regard.

Chet is unable to make the farm pay, despite his hard labor and faithful effort. His mother's sickness is an additional drain upon his finances and when Deacon Todd demands his rent the young man cannot pay. During the argument Mrs. Wells arises from her bed and the excited conversation between Todd, the sheriff and Chet gives her such a shock that she falls to the floor, fatally stricken. Chet swears vengeance upon Deacon Todd whom he blames for hastening his mother's death.

The Deacon lets his cows into the Major's corn.

Finally compelled to vacate, Chet sells his chattels and goes away to seek his fortune, intending to return and lay seige to Emily's heart when on more even financial footing with the girl. Deacon Todd moves into the house Chet has vacated and there soon arises an enmity between Major Burke and the miserly old Deacon. Trouble climaxes when the Major sends a charge of shot in the direction of Todd, because he has discovered the Deacon letting his cows into the Major's corn over and over again.

Todd disappears the night that Chet returns. Suspicion is directed toward Chet because of the threats he had made to get even" with the Deacon. Major Burke is conscience-stricken when he sees a flock of buzzards hovering over a nearby swamp and fancies that the dead body of his "victim" is the attraction for the vultures. Taking assiduously to drinking for the purpose of quieting his conscience, the Major is overcome by the stuff and sleeps.

Chet enters the Major's house to call upon Emily and hears the Major talking in his maudlin slumber, revealing the facts in the shooting of Todd. By the same method of transmission Emily has also learned from her own father's lips the truth of the Deacon's demise." When officers come to Burke's house and accuse Chet of the crime the young man admits that he is guilty, and tells the officers to search the swamp for Todd's remains. Chet of course does this out of consideration for Emily. While he has been away she has become engaged to the son of a neighbor, Allan Waite, and Chet feels that as he has lost her, he may as well assume the Major's guilt, to spare her sorrow.

Chet is locked up in one of the outhouses, and Emily determines to help him to escape. The Major has confessed to her the sacrifice that Chet is making for him. She succeeds in getting Chet away from the house, and begs him to hurry. He insists upon remaining to congratulate her upon her coming marriage. She forgets her duty to her fiance and begs him to take her with him.

In the meantime, the search party has been exploring the swamp, and they discover that the "Body" is that of a cow which has strayed and got stuck in the mud. The mystery now is, where is the Deacon? The Major seeks to forget his troubles in a stroll around his property, and comes suddenly upon the Deacon, riding in a new automobile. He is terrified and thinks he has seen a ghost, but the Deacon informs him that he has just been to town for a day or two to buy a Ford and offers him a ride. The searching party returns with the news of their find, and a little nigger is sent after Chet whose escape has been discovered. So every one is happy except Allan Waite.

Chet assumes the Major's guilt.

Allan begs Emily for her answer.

Seldom has a photoplay been received with higher praise than this one. Says the Motion Picture News: "Briefly, this picture is a gem, and, in passing, there are few pictures about which such can be said.

"The story is laid in the Southwest, and the glorious and picturesque settings that have been chosen for it pay still further tribute to the director's sense of detail. Harry Grant, by excellent camera work, has assisted the production beyond measure. Some of the light effects he has secured are without parallel.

"Myrtle Gonzalez makes an entrancing figure of Emily and Val Paul does sterling work as Chet. George Hernandez is bubbling over with comedy as Burke, while Fred Church and Frank Macquarrie appear respectively as Waite and the Deacon.

"If we remember correctly, H. O. Davis, manager of Universal City, was recently quoted as saying that good pictures could be made without murders, double standards or unfaithful better halves. Mr. Davis was not the only one who believed so, but there have been very few pictures in the past devoid of such elements. Our hat, for one, is off to Mr. Reynolds, and we know that after viewing 'The Secret of the Swamp' many, many people will be going about bare-headed, so to speak."

The New York Sunday Telegraph for July 16 had this to say:

"A charming girl for the leading role, some exquisite settings, good acting and photography of the best make of 'The Secret of the Swamp' a thoroughly satisfactory picture. Coupled with this is a mystery that is not revealed until the last few feet of film—something that is essential to a good mystery story.

"Myrtle Gonzalez has the faculty of 'screening' exceptionally well, but more than that, she is a good actress with an entire freedom from the reprehensible habit of over-acting.

"There are few men capable of depicting character types better than George Hernandez, and in this feature, as Major Burke, with a prediletion for mint juleps, he is a delight.

"Val Paul does a good hero part as Chet Wells and the other roles are interpreted with due unction by the cast.

"Such striking scenes as that wherein the Major sees the shadow of a buzzard upon the lawn render the film original and are a credit to the photographer, Harry Grant, and to the director."

A monster birthday cake, which was used by Director Reynolds in one of the scenes, was the cause of more trouble to him than all the rest of the production put together. He wanted it to be the real thing, so ordered one from

"Fighting Infantile Paralysis" Through Universal Special Feature

EVENING WORLD-UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO MOVING PICTURES
FIGHTING INFANTILE PARALYSIS
EVENING WORLD UNIVERSAL FILM M. G. CO
ANTI INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Lecturer Titus being filmed by an Animated Weekly cameraman for the special one-reel release.

WORKING in co-operation with the New York Board of Health and the United States Public Health Service bureaus throughout the country which are making a determined effort to stamp out the plague of infantile paralysis, which already has claimed more than 550 lives in the metropolis, the Universal Film Mfg. Co. has issued fifty prints of its special release, "Fighting Infantile Paralysis," which will be exhibited in theatres all over the country under the auspices of the newspapers of largest circulation in their respective localities. A great deal of the credit for the idea is due to Dr. Kaplan, who suggested it and helped to make it possible.

The New York Evening World, with characteristic enterprise, is the first newspaper to take up the campaign against the infantile plague which is now sweeping the country. In conjunction with the Universal Film Mfg. Co., the World is showing the film on several motor trucks equipped with translucent screens and in the theatres of Greater New York. A lecturer frfom the New York Board of Health accompanies each army transport truck and lectures to mothers and fathers as the film is projected through the screen at the rear of the auto van. Other lecturers appointed by the Board of Health speak to mothers and fathers only in the theatres where "Fighting Infantile Paralysis" is being shown.

The exhibition of moving pictures through a translucent screen at the rear end of a motor truck had never been attempted before the Universal essayed the task Two calcium tanks were used to feed the projection machine for the use of which especial permits were obtained from the Division of Combustibles. A special short focus lens furnished by the Nich-olas Power Company enabled the operator to throw his picture to the full extent of the screen, which was approximately five feet wide by four feet deep. A special shadow box was erected over the screen and the pictures were shown in Times Square, New York, in the full light of day.

NEW method of disseminating knowledge of the dread disease and the way to prevent it, adopted by the Universal and the Evening World. Has already had its effect.

"Fighting Infantile Paralysis" already has received the approval of Dr. Haven Emerson, Health Commissioner of New York; Dr. John S. Billings, Deputy Health Commissioner; Dr. Charles F. Bolduan, Director of the Bureau of Infectious Diseases; Dr. O. M. Leiser, assistant director of the bureau; and Drs D. M. Kaplan and Joseph Collins, of the Neurological Institute.

At first, when the infantile paralysis plague was confined to New York City, the Universal planned to give the film only local distribution, but, owing to the hundreds of deaths and the rapid spread of the disease reported from all parts of the country, General Manager Brandt, of the Universal Film Co., decided to make a special release of the picture as a public-spirited measure. One print of the Universal film has been sent to Melbourne, Australia, where the moving picture theatres have been closed down because of the infantile paralysis epidemic. The Universal film, "Fighting Infantile Paralysis," is the only infantile paralysis film which has the official stamp of approval of both the New York Board of Health and the New York Police Department. Permission has been refused by both city departments of the City of New York to other film companies to issue infantile paralysis films under their auspices.

"Fighting Infantile Paralysis" was taken by Universal cameramen working under the direction of two inspectors of the Board of Health in the South Brooklyn district of New York, the plague spot from which the disease spread to all parts of the country, in the Erie Basin district of Brooklyn, on the lower East Side of New York and in the Borough of Richmond. Scenes at the Rockefeller Institute, the Willard Parker, Kingston Avenue, Seabreeze and Neurological hospitals are shown and "interiors" illustrating the methods used by Dr. Simon Flexner of the Rockefeller Institute in the treatment of the disease also were taken.

Further, it graphically illustrates the activities of the Bureau of Child Hygiene, the measures adopted by the Bureau of Infectious Diseases, the Quarantine officials, the City and State health departments and the United States Public Health Service which is striving to prevent the spread of the disease to all parts of the country. Pictures of monkeys and the experiments made upon them to solve the problem of who and what are the most dangerous "carriers" of infantile paralysis, a map of New York City showing the plague spots and a larger map showing how the disease is spreading all over the country also are included in the film. Dr. O. M. Leiser, of the New York Board of Health, wrote the sub-titles of the film which hammer home his precautionary "dont's" to mothers. instructing them how to discover and to treat the first symptoms of the disease in their children.

Special copies of the film have been sent to the State Board of Health of South Carolina, upon the request of Dr. F. A. Coward, of Columbia, S. C.; to the New Rochelle, N. Y., Board of Health; the Somerville, N. J., etc.

Jane Bernoudy in Brand New Role

An interview with the erstwhile Sally Sloppus
by
MLLE. CHIC.

Jane Bernoudy, in character of Sally Sloppus, which she originated herself.

CERTAIN characters of the stage have become so familiar to us, that we mention them constantly in conversation and in writing as the best description in a few words of special types of persons in our acquaintance. "Beau Brummel" is a term which is in common use to describe a man who dresses with scrupulous care, for example, while "Mrs. Malaprop" denotes to every one a person who confuses the meaning of words. It seems quite probable that, in a short time, the screen also will give us such generally descriptive types as the stage already has done. If the new art is much younger, its audience at the same time is so much larger that it bids fair to overtake the older institution in this as in every other particular.

Perhaps, then, it will not be long before we speak of a regular "Detective Potts," or of a typical "Lady Baffles;" and certainly when that day comes we shall find ourselves referring to a particularly slovenly servant girl, as "a perfect Sally Sloppus."

Jane Bernoudy, the creator of this screen character, is a person of varied accomplishments. She came to Universal City in the first place to play in Western dramas, for she is a champion woman roper and rider. After working for a time in this sort of role she discovered a hitherto unsuspected vein of comedy, which she was eager to develop. Her directors were equally eager, for Jane's ideas of comedy were novel and truly amusing, and what more can a director want? Like so many comedians, she cherished a secret ambition to shine in dramatic parts as well, and she is now about to achieve her desires to play straight leads in regular dramas.

"Sally Sloppus" of the quaintly descriptive name, is the creation of Jane Bernoudy. She imagined, invented and created this highly ornamental character, and she feels for her all the affection of a mother for an unfortunate duckling of a daughter—a poor thing, but her own. Sally appeared for the first time outside Miss Bernoudy's imagination, in the Joker comedy, "Bill's Plumber and Plumber's Bill," playing opposite that other laugh-provoker, Victor Potel. The reception which she received from the professional critics, as well as from the public, was a surprise to her creator. Everybody was of the opinion that a new screen character had arrived. In many succeeding comedies, Sally has deepened this impression, until it seems probable that she is destined to become one of the really time-proof comedy-characters of the films.

Miss Bernoudy does not resort to unnatural exaggerations of make-up, but gets her best laughs by perfectly legitimate means. Her colleagues have named her Sally Sloppus visage her "vacuum expression," for it really seems as if she was able to switch off her mental magneto and throw all facial expression out of gear at will. Several times retakes of scenes have been necessary because one of her associates laughed in the wrong place at some of the contortions of her countenance.

Jane is a Colorado girl of French and Spanish descent, and will be twenty-three this July. She has four years of picture work to her credit, having played with the Kay-Bee-Broncho and Vitagraph companies before she joined the Universal. Her previous occupation was a curious one for a woman, for she was a member of a Wild West show. She is one of the finest horse-women in the west, and a champion rider and roper, having won laurels in various contests in Oregon and California. She has ridden ever since she was a tiny child, and loves horses more than anything else in the world, though "pictures" are a close second.

Her horsemanship was put to the test in the five-reeler, "A Son of the Immortals." This was a Bluebird Photoplay, featuring Warren Kerrigan, and the script called for a regular Paul Revere ride, which had to be performed by a peasant girl. The ride had to be made bareback, and there was no one among the Bluebird players capable of making it, so they had to borrow Jane Bernoudy for the purpose. She enjoyed the experience immensely and was sorry when it was over. When the Knights Templars visited Universal City on June 23d, Jane had another opportunity to show her prowess, for one of the most attractive features of the entertainment was the Wild West performance by the Universal cowboys and cow-girls, in which Jane had a leading role.

You might imagine that Sally Sloppus would be spared one of the trials of the picture star, and that is the "mash notes" and offers of marriage, which are so difficult to answer without giving offense, and which demand so much of a player's scanty leisure. But this is not the case. Sally has her share of matrimonial chances and a bit over. One admirer wrote her the other day that he wanted her to come on at once and take charge of his farm. Another begged her to marry him because her face would make him laugh all the rest of his life, and he was of a melancholy disposition!

"One of them wanted a hired man, and the other a comic supplement," said Jane on reading the letters, "and they both thought they wanted Jane Bernoudy; but that is as far as it is going to get either of them."

It might be advisable for her to let prospective admirers know of her prowess with a rope!

Jane has just left Universal City for Dear Valley, where she will play the lead in several outdoor dramas in the company of Director A. W. Rice. The other leading members of the company are Geo. Pearce and Jas. F. Farley. The first story she appears in will be "The Circus Rider."

"From Broadway to A Throne"

Grand reception at the Magonian Court to the returning Crown Prince.

CARTER DE HAVEN'S name has grown to have a magical attraction for the motion picture fan. Probably no player in motion pictures has gained so large a following in so short a time as the diminutive comedian, whose methods are as unique as his appearance. He is never obvious, and he is never vulgar, but his fun is of the spontaneous order which makes the "tired business man" forget his troubles and takes us all out of ourselves while his pictures are being run. De Haven has appeared in Red Feather Productions before, and his pictures have always "gone big," and there is good reason to think that the present one will beat the record.

From Broadway to a throne is quite a jump, but "Battling Jimmie" accomplishes it safely. How he gets back again is the surprise, and it is such an unexpected one that it is a shame to spoil it by telling it before hand. The story is by W. J. Bowman, who also produced the picture, and the adaptation for the screen was made by E. J. Clauson. It will be somewhat of a shock to De Haven's admirers who are used to seeing him the very glass of fashion and the mold of form to behold him in the strictly utilitarian garments of a would-be lightweight champion. But later on he blossoms into all the gorgeousness of the Crown Prince of Magonia, one of those convenient countries which exist solely for the use of novelists and playwrights. To be sure, he wears his shako hind side before, drapes his sword belt around his manly form in the wrong way, and commits other sartorial solecisms, but his gorgeousness remains undimmed all the same.

Jimmie travels as a dog.

A very real prizefight is a feature of the first part of the story. "Battling" Jimmy meets a real fighter,

"That's what'll happen if you disobey orders!"

"Jockey" Pierce, by name, who at one time rode for James Keene. Jimmie is knocked out at the end of the bout, and the feature had to be reahearsel many times in order to reach the standard of realism demanded by Director Bowman. All this time De Haven had to entertain Pierce, and he declared that he spent at least a third of his salary bribing the "pro" with dinners and cigars not to make the punch too realistic in the numerous rehearsals.

"Before the camera you can go as far as you like," said De Haven, who is as game as a fighting cock," but for Heaven's sake spare my manly beauty in the rehearsals!"

As is usual in events of this kind, there were preliminary bouts before the main one of the evening, and for these real fighters were engaged, real trainers and a real referee. The result is, that if you came suddenly into the theatre without knowing what you were going to see you would imagine that you were looking at the forbidden "fight films" of some celebrated fistic encounter.

The story of the play is as follows:

"Battling" Jimmie, a fighter and a dreamer of great dreams, is preparing to meet "Killer" Briggs in the prize ring. It is the chance of Jimmie's life, because the winner of the fight is scheduled to meet the champion. It is not merely the glory Jimmie is after, but the purse as well, for if he wins the fight he will be in a position to marry Bess, a dancer at the Gaiety Theatre. Bess is anxious for Jimmie to give up fighting and go into vaudeville with her, but Jimmie will not hear of giving up his "art." On the afternoon before the fight "Silent" Billie, a newspaper reporter without a job, presents Jimmie with a lucky coin which has the general appearance of a royal emblem of some art. The emblem was given to Billie by his foster father, Herman Marlex, an eccentric old musician and writer, who is so peculiar in most ways that his neighbors think him partially insane.

The eccentric Marlex catches Jimmie wearing the emblem and with excitement and suggestions of the mysterious he tells Jimmie that the emblem is the key to a throne. He goes on to tell Jimmie a wild story of how twenty years before, he kidnapped the heir apparent to the kingdom of Magonia and brought him to this country. He tells Jimmie that Billie is the kidnapped prince. Jimmie is greatly impressed by all this until the arrival of Billie, who tells Jimmie that the Magonia story is Marlex's hallucination.

Bess begs Jimmie to go into vaudeville with her.

The fight is held that night as scheduled. In the second round Jimmie receives a stunning blow upon the forehead. He goes down and loses consciousness. The referee begins to count him out. No sooner does Jimmie lose consciousness than he begins to dream. He dreams that he loses the fight and returns home. He writes a letter to Bess telling her that he is now broke and that he intends leaving New York and staying away until he makes good. The room of old Marlex is just across the hallway from Jimmie's room. Jimmie hears a noise in Marlex's room. He goes into the hallway and listens. It appears to him that the three emissaries from the King of Magonia are in Marlex's room and are demanding of Marlex that he place the kidnapped prince in their hands. When Marlex learns that the emissaries intend to rob him of the reward he refuses to inform them of the prince's whereabouts. The emissaries bind and gag Marlex and throw him into a closet. Jimmie breaks into the room at this juncture. The emissaries see the emblem upon his sweater front and take him to be the king. Jimmie tries to tell them that they are mistaken, but they will not listen to him. When he refuses to accompany them the emissaries bind and gag him and carry him away in a trunk. From the trunk Jimmie is transferred to a dog cage and smuggled into the hold of a ship.

He finally arrives in the Kingdom of Magonia, and tries to explain to King Felix that he is not the prince. The king will not believe him. The arrival of the alleged prince throws Heldone, pretender to the throne, out of favor. Heldone organizes a conspiracy which ripens into a revolt against the king.

In the meantime Bess is hired by Princess Iona of Magonia, who is visiting in the United States. She accompanies her to Europe. The princess meets Billie and convinces him that he is the real prince. Thereupon the princess, Billie, Bess and Marlex leave for Magonia. Welcome greets the

"Kate's Lover's Knot"

JOKER. COMEDY.

"KATE'S LOVERS' KNOT."

Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Kate, an old maid, anxious to get married	Gale Henry
Maxine, her sister	Lillian Peacock
Bill, a slow, sober young man, Kate's affinity	Wm. Franey
Charlie, a sailor, another affinity, Bill's brother	Chas. Conklin
Lovejoy, Maxine's fiance,	Milburn Morante

The friends of pretty Maxine and her fiance, Lovejoy, consider Maxine's old maid sister, Kate, a "lemon" and Kate has never had a beau until her photo is seen by plain, sober-going Bill, who promptly falls in love. They are "affinities" and all goes well until Charlie, a sailor, home from a long voyage, meets Kate at a picnic. Thereupon, Charlie falls in love with Kate, also. Kate has the time of her life with the new experience of playing off one man against another. But Charlie and Bill quarrel and a duel is arranged. Bill is hit, but his life is saved by a locket containing his mother's picture, which he always carried over his heart. This locket brings out the fact that Charlie and Bill are long lost brothers. Privately, each decides to sacrifice for his brother and goes away, leaving a note for Kate, telling her he has given her up for brother's sake. This is the end of Kate's matrimonial hopes, for there were only two brothers in that family, which exhausts Kate's possible affinities.

"THE YOUNGEST IN THE FAMILY."

CAST.

Father	Gene Rogers
Mother	Elsie Cort
Daughter	Lucille Hutton
The Suitor	Bert Roach

She was a very young thing and her father thought her too young to be married, but, as is always the case, she thought she knew better and so had clandestine meetings with her sweetheart, an adventurer. He was nothing more than a janitor, but with his fine looks and clothes he impressed her very much. Her father had a janitor who got fresh with the head janitor and father fired him, but father made a sad mistake when he left the safe open and the said janitor grabbed all the kale in sight and skipped with it without the least compunction. Daughter was married and they were getting along fine on father's money, when she happened to read an article wherein it stated that poor Mr. Broke was busted and had to pawn his furniture to buy bread and eats. She went to hubby and asked him if father and mother could not enjoy their old age with them. Being a good-natured fellow he readily consented to their spending their reclining years with them in their magnificent home. Father took a wallop at him and son-in-law raced from the house into a jitney and away, with father and the cops in hot pursuit.

"A LUCKY GOLD PIECE."

Written by Jessie McAllister.
Produced by Ben Wilson.

CAST.

Bob Dunn	Ben Wilson
Frederick Bruce	Charles Ogle
Marion Bruce	Edna Hunter
Little Bobbin	Sherry Tansey

Bob Dunn while making the rounds of his book factory loses a lucky gold piece. It is found by a girl in his employ, who brings it back in spite of the fact that she needs the money very much herself. Bob then tells her why he values the coin so highly.

Years before, when he was a street urchin, he happened to pass a house where a lawn party was being given for a little girl. It was the little lady's birthday and her father had given her a gold coin as a present. All the children shunned the boy because he was poorly dressed, but the child gave him some cake and felt so sorry for him that she made him take her gold piece. Giving the gold piece as security, he went into business and prospered.

When Bob finishes his story the girl tells him that she is the one who befriended him as a child. After her father's death, she says, she was forced to earn her own living, and so came to work in the factory.

Bob is delighted and at once proposes to Marion. They have a wedding ring made out of the gold piece and the last picture shows Bob placing it on her finger. Then Marion gets her delayed happiness.

"Peg o' the Ring," Episode 14

Mrs. Lund tells her son and Peg of the death of Dr. Lund, Senior.

Peg, in the grip of her strange malady, craftily waits to throttle Flip.

"THE WILL," the latest two-reel Episode of the Universal Special Serial brings the action of the story to a climax with the death of Dr. Lund, the elder. Peg must now prove her parentage and Mrs. Lund will make every effort to discredit her. Scenario by Grace Cunard. Directed by Francis Ford.

CAST.

Peg	Grace Cunard
Doctor Lund, Junior	Francis Ford
Doctor Lund, Senior	Marc Fenton
Mrs. Lund	Jean Hathaway
Flip, the Clown	Pete Gerald
Marcus, the Hindoo	Irving Lippner

EPISODE No. 13 left Peg and the doctor in the hands of Marcus and his band of ruffians. While trying to escape Dr. Lund was shot and fell limp on the bed.

It is very fortunate for Peg and the doctor that the circus people arrive in time to save them. Just as Peg is about to be overcome they all arrive and succeed in driving Marcus away. Dr. Lund proves to be but slightly wounded, so they all go home, as it is very late at night by this time.

The next morning old Doctor Lund is not feeling as well as usual when Mrs. Lund comes to give him his medicine. He is very suspicious of his wife, and as she fixes his draught he slyly watches her out of the corner of his eye. When the doctor sees his wife trying to poison him it is the last straw. With a terrific effort he gets out of bed and starts to strangle his wife. But he has overestimated his strength. The exertion proves too much and he falls over dead.

When Dr. Lund and Peg come in and learn of the old man' death they are both heart-broken. Peg is about to leave when she hears footsteps in the hall, and, quickly hiding behind a chair, sees Marcus and his assistant come in. They talk to Mrs. Lund in the next room, and as Peg warily creeps up to eavesdrop she hears Mrs. Lund say, "This will leaves everything to his only child. Peg is the rightful heir and must be gotten out of the way." Peg then leaves and manages to get away undiscovered.

Mrs. Lund's next move is to give Marcus a letter, putting him in full charge of the circus. He goes to the tent and insolently tries to boss the company and actually insults Peg in her dressing-room.

During the afternoon performance, when all the performers are in the ring, Marcus breaks open Peg's trunk to see if he can find Flip's letter.

And, to cap the climax, Peg has another of her fits just as she is about to perform in the ring. She rushes about, attacking the spectators and performers, and finally goes to her dressing-room. Here Flip tries to quiet her, but she viciously turns on him and almost chokes him, when she falls exhausted to the ground. Here Marcus finds her prostrate body and he and his assistant carry her off.

ACTOR SAVES GIRL'S LIFE.

ON July 4 E. P. Everz of the Universal forces spent the holiday at Long Beach, a summer resort near Los Angeles. As he was crossing the street a little girl dashed in front of him just as an automobile was approaching at a high rate of speed.

Everz grabbed the girl by her skirts and quickly dragged her back in time to save her from being run over. He did not get her name, but modestly walked away into the crowd.

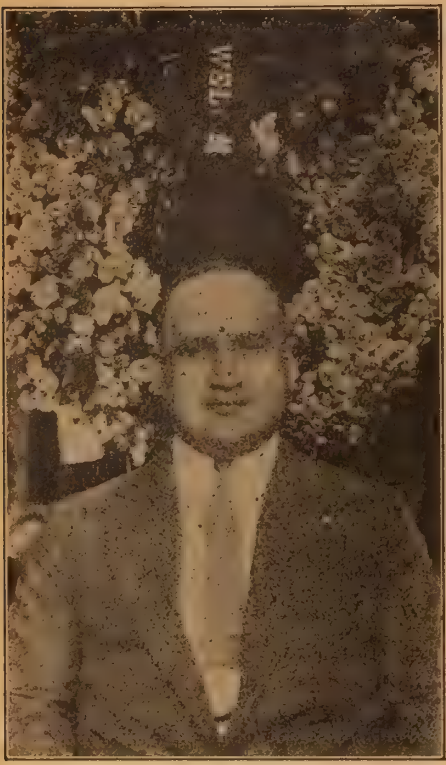
CLAIRE McDOWELL CLEVER IN "THE CARAVAN."

IN the production of "The Caravan," written and produced by Director Raymond Wells, and featuring little Lena Baskette, Claire McDowell is seen to an excellent advantage in a leading supporting role.

Before joining the Universal, Miss McDowell was for some six years with the Biograph company, where she played everything from comedy to emotional roles.

Echoes from Chicago

By H. H. VAN LOAN



President Lee Ochs and the floral wreath presented on his arrival at New York by the Universal.

THIS has been a very big week in Chicago. In fact the place has been hotter than a certain community often referred to in the Bible. Naturally, everybody connected, in any way, with this berg, declared it was the warmest weather since the hot waves of the Republican convention passed over. So much for the weather, or, as we might say, the "back-drop" to the setting.

The next two important happenings of the week were the election of Lee Ochs as President of the M. P. E. L. O. A.—a title altogether too long for even such a big man as Ochs. The second was the gathering of the Universal exchangemen to confer with M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of Exchanges, who announces that he will have a very important statement sometime during the next two weeks. He left Monday for Minneapolis and is still traveling throughout the West. I will be somewhere between Chicago and Las Vegas, New Mexico, by the time he is ready to announce what he thinks I know nothing about, but which has been known to me for the past five days. So, now that I know it, there is no need of telling the reader, for, a good writer only tells what he doesn't know. Third in importance is the exposition at the Coliseum, which, although accompanied previous to the opening by a lot of predictions which had something to do with record-breakers, attracts our attention now because it failed to live up to its promise, and has not put one blemish on the reputation of Miss New York for entertaining moving picture people on a lavish scale.

Of course there are, or were, I should say—for I'm writing this last Sunday and it must read in the past tense—a lot of other attractive features to the convention and exposition. I might say a lot about Joe Brandt and the way he hustled to put the Universal way in front of everything else in Chicago, and of the wonderful way in which he succeeded in walking off with all the honors, from the day he led the band from the La Salle Station to "copping" the honors at the Reel Fellows midnight luncheon. But I won't mention any of these things for he might go to Mister Laemmle and ask for something which he might not get, and it isn't fair to hold a stick of candy in front of a baby with a sweet tooth without giving it some. So I won't refer to his great work in this story. Then, too, I might refer to the beautiful gold watch which the exchangemen of the Universal presented to M. H. Hoffman one day in the Sherman grill just as he was bending over a voluptuous dish of "cherry stones," via cocktail. If I did that I would have to mention that it was rumored these ginks paid four hundred bucks for it and that George Weeks, the poor, emaciated chap from Detroit, who puts on a couple of pounds while you talk to him, made the presentation speech. I might dwell on the nervousness of the recipient as he stuttered and stammered from the blow of affection. But I won't mention any of these things because they only have the effect of making everybody long for grills, watches, exchange manager's offices and all that sort of thing. Modesty prevents me from mentioning that even such an attractive individual as myself, who has never accomplished much outside of quelling the hunger and quenching the thirst of a lot of Chicago "scribes," was handed a silver mounted pipe for doing something. But, ever since I started using it, I have been wondering why it came to me, and at last I have decided that it was a clever ruse on the part of some shrewd person to arouse more originality in my "copy" which seemed to be lacking in the veteran I had fathered for many months. There it is. See that silver running wild around the top; notice that silver band contortioning around the axle and that word "sterling" stamped all over it. See that amber stem, right from the amber mines of Kiuka. Realizing that this yolk-covered stuff is selling at seventy-five cents an inch, and that there is a quarter of an inch of it on this institution, you can get a semi-idea of the value of the darn thing.

Carl Laemmle (in centre), Joe Brandt, Manny Goldstein, H. H. Van Loan, and the other Universalites at the Universal Ball in the Hotel Sherman.

VAN WRITES NEWS LIKE A CRAB. THERE IS MORE TRUTH IN WHAT HE DENIES THAN WHAT HE SAYS

Now that we cannot mention these things I will have to dwell on other questions of more importance, which will not bear reference in this story; so we will have to omit them and return to soliloquizing on what might have been. I could have said a lot about Manny Goldstein, who is assistant to the General Manager of Exchanges, and how we regretted his not being able to drop in on Chicago, after ten months away from Rector's corner lounge. But he spoiled all that by turning up right at the moment I had all that stuff written. And he brought his tortoise-rimmed glasses with him and a lot of talk about the great success of "Peg O' The Ring" and the great business the Universal is doing in all parts of the country. Just as he was geysering all this stuff Maurice Fleckles, who always means well at heart, interrupted—the mean thing—with the reminder that Goldstein's "swindle sheet" warranted him talking like that, and that here the Allslop's of the film game—I mean Alsop—proved he was a full fledged moving picture man.

I might go on and say that a lot of people inquired about Paul Gulick, especially Julian Johnson who besides being editor of the Photoplay Magazine, lounges beautifully over his soup and includes among his sins a suite at the Sherman. But such frank admissions would only have the effect of leading him to believe that he was popular and this would never do for a young man who dislikes "Edelweiss' and edits such religious tracts as the Moving Picture Weekly.

Then too Lee Ochs might admit that I predicted the day he arrived in Chicago that he would slide right to New York with the presidentship before this town had opened its eyes and called for its "two-minute boiled and coffee." I don't wish to attempt to shoulder any of the credit for his election but it does seem as though such things said at the opportune moment have their effect in due course of time. But it is admitted that after a man is made he never thinks of the hand that passed him the "bottle."

It has been stated that the exposition officials were as free with tickets as that boy wonder "Uncle" Herman Fitchenberg, who spent all his time looking for a place to spend his money, is with taxicabs, but when it is taken into consideration that the only man found with six tickets was a chap who bought them, we will hesitate to further discuss unpleasant things.

Although everybody admitted that the Universal Moving Picture Ball was the greatest affair of its kind ever held in Chicago, and was attended by everybody worth speaking to in filmdom, including such notorious characters as Carl Laemmle, Adolph Zukor, Lewis J. Selznick, C. H. MacGowan, Joe Brandt, M. H. Hoffman, Maurice Fleckles, Claude Plough, Louis Laemmle, P. A. Powers, John Flynn, Edna Mayo, Bryant Washburn, Richard Travers, I. Von Runkle, Frank Flaherty and others, yet it wouldn't do to mention their names for fear of the effect it might have on their domestic routines.

CHICAGO SODAS.

When President Laemmle told the manager of the Bluebird what a beautiful booth he had it hit Von Runkle right on the "cocoa."

Claude McGowan, the Universal's chief auditor, stepped off the Century last Sunday right into a bunch of "figures."

After Joe Brandt left via the Michigan Central it was generally admitted that the convention, exposition and everything else in Chicago was over.

Kansas City Cropper tacked into Chicago with one of those scarlet fever suits with an infantile paralysis atmosphere. He upset everyone's enthusiasm by admitting that he has already done fifty thousand dollars' worth of business with "Peg O' The Ring."

Joe Schnitzer, who is about the liveliest thing that ever wafted in or out of Indianapolis, came into town on Saturday night just so that his brother exchangemen would ask him where he had been during the week. Some rude person interrupted with the reminder that he is an infant bridegroom!

The bunch were pretty dry until Hague dropped his anchor at the Sherman.

Herman Fitchenberg spends just like a sailor on shore leave after two years at sea. He's taking a course in female cosmetics at the College Inn!

We might inform the reader that there is a strong movement on foot to refrain from presenting stars to the public and that the manufacturers declare that such presentation subtracts from the illusion of the picture and interferes more than it benefits. It would do no harm to whisper that this question is going to be seriously considered by the manufacturers before the next show and that if all of them will agree on this point the screen has a good chance of retaining that mysterious secretiveness which accompanied it in the past. But what's the use of stirring up the reader by tipping him off on such things before they have materialized.

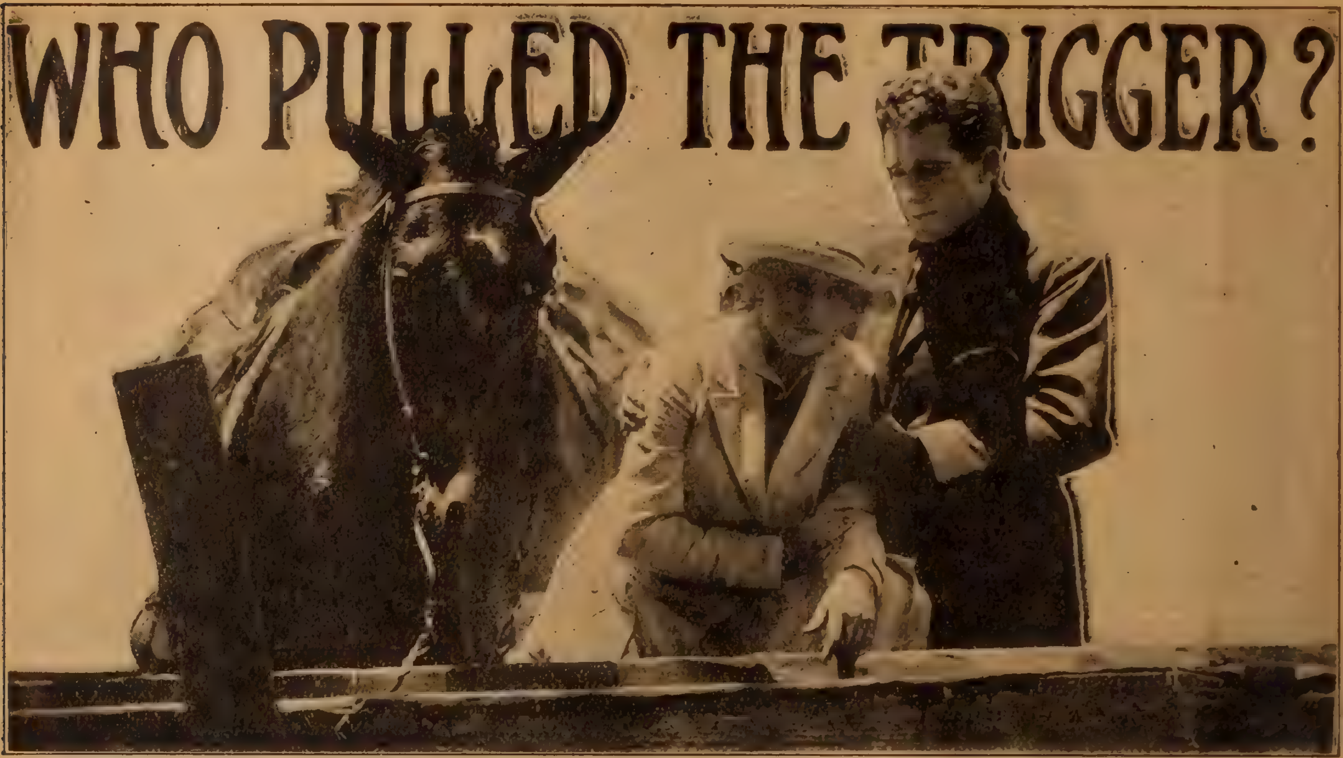
It could be said that the next show and convention will be held in Chicago, and that the manufacturers and exhibitors have agreed there shall be but one show and convention next year, and that it shall be held in Chicago. But, why tell this yet, and get our dear friend New York all worked up over it? If we're going to get people sore we must do it diplomatically.

It is possible to say that the Chicago newspapers have been all worked up over this show and that they have given reams and reams of stories and articles to movie stars and movie men, and that the Universal waded right through more printed lines than any other film company. However, we hesitate about mentioning it because we don't wish to get some of those nice boys like O'Donnell, Masters, Arthur James and Flynn in bad. So, we'll just pass that up.

There are those who will tell stories about the wonderful Winton 46-H.P. car of Claude Plough's, and how easy it rides and the graceful way in which it takes the bumps and jolts of the North and South Beach roads. But these things should not be mentioned because they are liable to convince him that he is generous, and, owing to the fact that he only placed it at the disposal of everyone who could recall a thirty-second cousin who was on speaking terms with his grandmother, we see no reason why we should give him publicity. But "Pop" couldn't be any different from what he is if he tried, and that's why everybody loves him.

We might go on and say that everybody knows the Universal has been in town and that no matter which way you looked all you could see was "Universal;" that we have heard that Alice Brady, Pauline Frederick and Mary Pickford were at the exposition. But I never did place much faith in rumors. So there you are.

WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER?



Douglas' love for Ethel grows.

A VERY clever stunt has been arranged for the Gold Seal three-reel mystery drama entitled "Who Pulled the Trigger?" The first two reels of the picture contain a mystery, the solution of which is in the last reel. The scheme that has ben worked up is just this: The first two reels of the picture will be released on Monday, the first of August, and several days later, on Friday, the last reel will be released. The plan should prove to be a very interesting novelty, as several good advertising stunts have been planned for it.

Should the exhibitor prefer to show the picture as a regular three-reeler, it has ben so arranged that he can do so. The picture itself should prove to be a huge success. There is action galore, with a couple of fights, races, and so on. A feature of the picture is Marie Walcamp's thrilling ride on a motorcycle. She has to overtake an auto which is rushing to the prison to lynch her lover. There is absolutely no fake about the speed with which Marie travels. She rushes by at a mile a minute, disregarding the shots that are fired at her. But then this is to be expected when Marie Walcamp is in a picture, as she is the most intrepid of all the moving picture actresses. Miss Walcamp has often run autos and aeroplanes and locomotives, but this is her first experience on a two-wheeled vehicle.

THREE-REEL Gold Seal Mystery Drama, featuring Marie Walcamp, from story published in Red Book Magazine. Produced by Henry McRae. Lynching of innocent man prevented by girl's daring ride on motorcycle. This feature may be released either as a three-reeler or as a continued story of two reels and a sequel to follow in a few days.

CAST.

Walt Kendall	L. C. Shumway
Edgar Douglas	Lee Hill
Ethel Rodney	Marie Walcamp
Her Father	E. N. Walleck
Her Mother	Helen Wright

Lee Hill plays opposite Miss Walcamp, as in so many of her pictures, and gives his usual sterling performance. But the play is the thing, and this play is a very good one. It appeared as a story in the Red Book Magazine and is a corker.

The Kendall brothers, Luke and Walt, own a cotton plantation; they have leased their swamp pine section to a lumber company.

Edgar Douglas, a northerner, is the local manager and foreman of the saw mill. Douglas objects to the way the Kendalls treat their colored help and offers his protection and a position to any negro who has been abused and wants to quit the Kendall plantation. This causes bad feeling between the northerner and the Kendalls, and when several negroes take advantage of Douglas' offer and leave the plantation during the cotton picking, the hostilities are opened. In the fight that follows, Walt Kendall is beaten.

Ethel Rodney, a young southerner, a neighbor of the Kendalls, arrives in time to witness the fight. She is deeply interested in Douglas. and knowing that serious trouble will follow this outbreak, induces him to come to her home until Walt's anger will have simmered down. Arriving at her home, Ethel leaves Douglas seated on the porch, while she dresses for dinner. A ring at the telephone in the hall summons her.

The message is from her father in town. He wants some memoranda in the desk under the telephone. In getting it, Ethel finds her father's revolver and pushes it well back out of sight; then, supplying her father with the information he desired, she returns to her room. A second ring at the telephone is answered by Douglas.

"UNDER THE LION'S PAW"

Right: Another stroke.

101 BISON two-reel Animal Drama, written by Harry Schenck and produced by Jay Hunt. Wild lion attacks child. Tragedy prevented by intrepid action of girl and her sweetheart.

CAST.

Hamilton	Rex de Rosselli
Grace, his daughter	Golda Colwell
Blanche, little daughter	Clara Horton
George, superintendent	Colin Chase

THE feature of the 101 Bison two-reel animal drama, entitled "Under the Lion's Paw," is the stirring rescue of a child from the attack of a wild beast of the jungle. The action of the play centers about the love of a poor young man for a rich animal importer's daughter. It is indeed a thrilling moment when the wild brute, let loose to attack the young man, attacks instead the man's little girl. Needless to say, the lion is very real, being one of the Universal animal actors from the Universal zoo. It is a beautiful specimen, with a great shaggy mane and powerful paws. Every safeguard was taken so as to avoid any possible accidents.

The story in brief follows:

Hamilton, a victim of paralysis and owner of a menagerie where animals can be bought, sold and exchanged, has a superintendent under his employ who is in love with his elder daughter, Grace. She loves him, too, but unknown to her father.

One day while putting an animal through some stunts the trainer is caught and Hamilton is taken with a stroke at the sight, this being his second attack. He realizes that the next attack will probably mean his end, so he decides to sell his menagerie, and he thinks, too, that by selling he will rid his daughter of the superintendent. He sells the menagerie, but keeps his pet animal, a very wild and vicious lion, which he takes to his private residence and places in a barn.

Some time later his little daughter, Blanche, is playing around the grounds of his home when young George, the superintendent, happens to spy her and asks her to take a note to her sister unknown to her father. Blanche consents, but in trying to deliver the message she is stopped by her father, who takes it from her. The father is very angry. He locks Grace in her room and the mother, going on a visit, takes Blanche with her, leaving her with her aunt, who lives a short distance away. The father then decides that he will have the animal meet George that night, instead of his daughter, thinking that that will keep the superintendent away for good.

He then turns the animal loose and waits for the arrival of George, but in the meantime Blanche runs away from her aunt's and arrives home and is confronted by the animal. Father, seeing this from the window, is attacked with the third stroke of paralysis. George arrives in time to save little Blanche's life. Grace breaks away from her room, helps rescue her little sister, while her mother tends to her father.

Between George and Grace they manage to fight the animal back into the barn. They return to the house and all are reconciled.

NEVA GERBER JOINS THE UNIVERSAL

ONE of the clever young actresses well known in the film world who recently has joined the forces of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company is Neva Gerber, who is playing leads with Director Ben Wilson at the film capital. Miss Gerber for about eighteen months was a leading actress with the Kalem company, and later appeared with Edwin August, only to leave to accept leading roles with the American, where she was also featured in many productions.

Jacques Jaccard is a who is "Taking" Twen

BY PETER

"Yes, putting on a serial is a big job."

"WELL, it's not my fault that I have a French name, is it?" said Jacques Jaccard to the representative of the Weekly, who had come to interview him. "For that matter, every one of us in this country has to have a name of some nationality, English, Scotch, Irish, French, German, Italian, or something—unless he is an Indian. All the ancestors of the 'real Americans' came from somewhere else originality, and mine happened to come from France. When you consider the French record in the present war, you will understand that I am not ashamed of my descent. But that does not mean that I have the slightest French feeling at present. I am American, and nothing but American, first, last and all the time."

And he looks it, too. A young fellow who does things, you would say if your attention were drawn to him casually, and you were asked to "size him up." He is not the sort of person who spends much time in discussing what might be, or what has been; he looks like the kind who is always stripped for action, always ready to carry the message to Garcia while some one else is talking about it. And that is the kind of a man he is, and the reason why there is no more popular director at Universal City, nor one in whose company there is finer co-operation, or esprit de corps. With Jaccard it is never, "Go and do so-and-so;" but always "Come on, boys; let's do so-and-so." He never asks any one of his dare-devil cowboys to take a risk which he is not willing to take himself, and they know it.

They showed their appreciation of his methods after they had finished the Western picture, "A Knight of the Range," in which Harry Carey was the star, and which was the second and one of the best of the Red Feather productions. There was a lot of hard work connected with the making of that photoplay, which depicts typical scenes of the ranges as they really are, but Jaccard handled his troop in a way that made the work fun. When the feature was completed the boys presented their director with a wonderful blue steel Colt, in a hand-carved holster, which hangs from a hand-carved cartridge belt, as a souvenir of the occasion. Jaccard already was the proud possessor of a racing car, of a prize Boston bull, of a splendid library of reference books and fiction, and he had been proud of all of them. But nothing takes quite the same place in his esteem as this present from the "boys," and he has shown it to every one in Universal City.

Jaccard has a long and honorable record with the Universal. He began directing, with Kerrigan as his start, after filling several other positions with the big manufacturing company. He wrote some of the most successful stories which the popular star ever appeared in. Then he left the Universal for a short time to produce a

DEDICATES SONG TO UNIVERSAL SERIAL "LIBERTY"

TED BARRON, author of "If Time Was Money, I'd Be a Millionaire," "Billy," "Georgia Moon," "Lull Me To Sleep," and a dozen other popular song hits in the last decade has dedicated a song to the Universal's new patriotic serial, "Liberty." The song will be played in every theatre where "Liberty" is shown. The author of the song is a member of the famous "Piano Bugs Septette" which holds forth at the Friars' Club and Lights' Club, in New York. The Septette is made up of seven of the most famous song writers in the country.

The name of Mr. Barron's song, most appropriately, is "Liberty," and it has been officially adopted as the song of the World's Statue of Liberty Illumination Fund and as the official anthem of the celebrants of the new national holiday, "American Liberty Day." It has been adopted in public schools in various cities, by many patriotic organizations, including the "Daughters of the American Revolution," "The Daughters of Liberty," fraternal orders, such as the Elks and Forresters and many other civic bodies. It is being sung by others.

big serial feature for one of the other companies. This finished, he returned to the fold, and put on the "Terence O'Rourke" series, which added so much to his reputation and to the popularity of his star. After Otis Turner assumed the direction of Kerrigan, Jaccard was put in charge of the Western company, a class of picture for which he is peculiarly fitted by temperament and experience. He did a lot of fine things with Harry Carey as his leading man, and the two seemed to understand each other perfectly and produced some splendid results together. Carey began to direct himself, and Jaccard then undertook the production of a series of "Little stories of life;" upon which he was engaged when the officials of the company decided that he was the best person in the world to direct the new serial "Liberty," with which it is planned to smash all previous records.

Record-smashing is a past time in which Jacques Jaccard delights. He will have the able co-operation of one of the finest casts which the Universal has ever put together in one company, and his plans are so big that it is impossible to convey them within the limits of a short article. He will not only produce the serial, but he will write it as well, for his day is usually an affair of twenty-four hours or so, and whenever he has a spare second he turns out an episode, or a new story. Just listen to the titles of the first four episodes, and you will see that they give this virile young director a job after his own heart" "Fangs of the Wolf," "Riding With Death," "American Blood" and "Across the Border." Doesn't that sound like something which will keep every member of the audience on the edge of his seat?

Every member of the cast knows what he or she has undertaken. Playing in a serial, of which the episodes must be out on scheduled time, no matter what delays ensue, is never a joke; but playing in a serial directed by a human dynamo like Jaccard, is strenuous enough to suit Theodore Roosevelt himself. He will need all the tact, good-fellowship and power of organization which he has shown himself to possess in the past; but there is not a member of the company who for an instant doubts his ability to "put it over." They know him and his work too well for that. They realize that if they are called upon to work harder, their director will work ten times harder, and that they, and not himself, will be his first consideration whenever the exigencies of the situation allow time for the consideration of anything but getting the story out on time.

Jaccard is writing the serial himself and in view of the timeliness of his subject he is not going to finish the story until he positively has to. At the eighteenth chapter developments will govern.

"But we will put it over with 'Liberty.'"

Los Angeles. The huge affair was seventy inches around and ten deep. It was iced with almond paste and all the curlicues of frosting in which a first-class chef loves to indulge in such occasions. When it was finished and sent out to the studio, many were the longing glances cast upon it by the members of the company. The cake was prominently displayed on a table just outside the set, already for its scene, and whenever one of the company was missing—which was continually—Reynolds was sure to find him or her circling round the monster sweetmeat like the buzzards in his own play around the "secret of the swamp."

The actors eagerly discussed the ultimate destination of the dainty. Some declared that it was ordered merely for show and would be sent back, but most of them were sure that they were in for a treat. But Director Reynolds had so much trouble chasing would-be cake experts from the delicacy that he changed his mind about distributing it and sent the whole thing to a local charitable institution. Reynolds' popularity sustained a rude shock after his decision.

"When the Minstrels Came to Town"

Little brother is enrolled.

Shoe-blackening does the trick.

WHEN the Minstrels Came to Town" is the title of the Victor two-reel juvenile comedy, featuring Baby Early. It would have been all right if the minstrels had come and then left in the ordinary course of affairs, but they left fond memories behind them and so the trouble began.

A show is one of the great events of childhood days. It is a time when the kiddies can put on their elders' last year's clothes (sometimes they are not so particular whether they are last year's or this year's), and act and feel about as dignified as they look foolish. All this is a common occurrence.

But!!! When they turn out an ordinarily perfectly well behaved automobile to meander about the streets, forlorn and unprotected, that is too much. And when they take the sweetest kiddie in the world and make her (or him) look like "Olive, the Coal Heaver's daughter," then it is much too much. Of course, nobody cares, but these little things get annoying. Several people were annoyed, and not the least of them was little Willie when the shoe blacking was forcibly separated from its resting place on his cherubic cheeks.

This was the way it happened:

VICTOR Juvenile two-reel Comedy. Produced by H. C. Matthews. Kids are "inspired" to have a minstrel show. The garage is a fine substitute for an opera house and by backing out the car they have plenty of room. But the car does an elko and spankings follow.

CAST.

Girl	Baby Early
Boy	Frank Butterworth
Father	Seymour Hastings
Mother	Kathryn Griffith

Mother and Father take the children to see the minstrel show. All the usual stunts are performed, much to the disgust of the parents and to the delight of the children. That night they dream of darkies and end-men.

The next day the children decide to have a minstrel of their own. So all the kids in the neighborhood are summoned and told to forage for material. When all the junk is collected they decide that the garage is the logical place for the stage. The car is their only obstacle, so they start it to get it out. But no one knows how to stop it and the auto goes sailing down the street.

The blackening of the faces is at first a puzzle, but shoe blacking and stoveblack solve the problem. Then a baby is needed for a part in the play. So little brother is stolen from the cradle and his face blacked.

In the meanwhile father has been phoned that his car was found meandering through the streets, and when he gets to the police station to see about it Mother phones that baby has ben stolen. He rushes home with the whole police force and the thieves are found in the garage, having the time of their young lives.

The picture ends with a view of little Frankie in the tub getting the world's most thorough scrubbing.

"WHERE IS MY HUSBAND?"

NEW L-KO HOT FROM THE FIRE. DARING FLIRTING GETS DINTY INTO TERRIBLE INTRIGUE. HE GETS OUT BY THE SPEED ROUTE; SOME SPEED, TOO. THEY'RE OFF. SO IS THE TRAIN. BANG!!! THE L-KO SUBLIME.

Dinty	Dan Russell	I. M. Trubble	Bert Roach
His Wife	Katherine Griffith	His Wife	Belle Bennett

DINTY is our idea of the henpecked man ideal. His wife won't even let him have a beer tap in the room. How's that for maltreatment? Do you blame a man for rebelling? But Dinty did not rebel. He hadn't the nerve. He just tried to make wifey jealous.

Well, it all ended in a chase. All reel comedy ends in a chase. But this is a wonderful chase. Over housetops, down fire escapes, out into the street goes Dinty in his nighty. He gets on a street car and would have been safe if his demon pursuer had not boarded the same car. At first the car would not stop. Then it would not go. But the latter situation happened to happen on a railroad crossing.

I. M. Trubble with the Krupps.

Railroad trains are so unobliging. One of the beastly things came along just then and zip! No more street. And, to tell the truth, there was very little left of Dinty.

Dan Russell is a scream as Dinty. In one place where he falls into the bed of a woman on the floor below he is quite the funniest we have ever seen him. But the whole picture is wonderful and it would be a shame to spoil it, by saying too much in advance.

We almost forgot the plot. It follows in very brief form.

Just having a downright weakness for flirting is bad enough, but when one has a wife with a weather eye out for squalls, said flirting is done under difficulties. Anyway, Dinty was hard to discourage in his coquettishness, and he flirted desperately, bold-faced and without the least embarrassment to himself, but every one else. Unfortunately he was unlucky in one of his flirting excursions, as he picked out a lady whose husband had the nastiest temper and was the most unreasonable when he got angry, of any flirt discourager alive. Husband gave Dinty a fair and gentlemanly warning and fate was against him until he discovered that he was unintentionally taking a bath in the wife's bath tub in the near vicinity with two Krupps, and that the means of exit from the bath-room led right past husband. How flirts miraculously escape, how innocent people get mixed up in pursuits that don't want to, and how some people live through terrible experiences was proven here. The result of it all was that Dinty tried to escape on a street car in his kimona. The conductor was willing, the motorman was unwilling and Dinty was unwilling, but husband was close behind with his trusty Krupps, and Dinty just naturally had to keep going or perish from a shot in the excitement. The chase eventually stopped, but it stopped when the street car conductor stopped in the middle of a railroad crossing when a train was due to pass. The only thing that got stopped was Dinty's inclination for flirting. The crash was heard for miles and several policemen lost their dignity trying to escape from the onrushing train. As Dinty went up on a sliver from the cowcatcher he remarked that flirting does not pay.

Wifey objects to Dinty's beer tap.

BIG BEAR AGAIN FAVORED.

UNIVERSAL CITY is said to have an option on Pine Knot Lodge at Big Bear Lake Camp. Every month or so one of the many companies is sent to that place to work hard on a picture or two.

This week Lynn Reynolds and his company of players, headed by Myrtle Gonzalez and Fred Church, will leave for Big Bear Lake for a sojourn of some fifteen days, during which time they will film scenes for "The Girl of Lost Lake," a five-reel feature adaptable to Big Bear scenery.

The Man	William Lowery
The Woman	Agnes Vernon
Sunbeam	Doris Baker
Old Sailor	Frank MacQuarrie
The Father	"Doc" Crane

The child, about eight years of age, whom we will call Sunbeam, is fathered by an old seaman in poor health. The home is the tenement slums of any great city. She sells papers or flowers, runs errands, etc., to help buy food and medicine for the home.

A young and enthusiastic settlement worker meets her and begins to grow fond of the girl.

By chance, she meets a gaudily dressed young woman of the street, and the latter's sweetheart, a fast youth on the downward path. She unconsciously influences this young couple to lead better lives.

The couple, having had a quarrel over jealousy and gambling, have wandered despondently to the river docks, intent upon suicide, each unaware of the other's purpose. They are saved from the attempt by Sunbeam, who suddenly meets them as she comes up the stairway from below the dock. where she has been sent by her foster-father to summon an old sea friend to his bedside.

Sunbeam tells the young couple that her father is very ill, and they follow her to her home, where, after the arrival of the old sea friend, the father dies. The young couple ask the settlement worker if they may care for Sunbeam. The old sea friend is willing, but suddenly wants to know who they are and who will vouch for their respectability.

The young couple hang their heads, as the old sea friend indignantly claims Sunbeam and takes her away to his curious old home under the docks.

The young woman cries, and the youth comforts her; he whispers to her a proposal that they get married. The young settlement worker, understanding their mental distress, marries them and starts them along the straight road of life.

Sunbeam dies some time later and the settlement worker tells the mourners that Sunbeam, perhaps, was sent as a Soul child to lead others to a better life.

Freddy De Peyster	William Garwood
Vera Van Zandt	Irma Dawkins

Vera Van Zandt, a society girl, gives a week-end party. Freddy De Peyster, one of the guests, musters sufficient energy to propose to Vera, who tells him that the man she marries must be a hero.

Freddie accidentally gets hold of a volume of Sherlock Holmes, which he eagerly devours.

The next day Vera receives a valuable necklace from her father as a birthday gift. On leaving the parlor that evening Vera forgets to take her necklace with her. Leonora, one of the guests, suggests that they hide it so that she won't be so careless with diamonds. The guests look around for a hiding place and one of them, in the excitement, slips the necklace into a vase on the center table.

Vera, missing the necklace, returns with her father to look for it. Unable to find, it she questions the guests, while her father, suspecting that the diamonds have ben stolen, phones for the police. At this time Freddy, to make up for the loss of sleep on the previous night, is reposing peacefully in his bed upstairs.

The police learn of the young man with the monocle, and Freddy, under suspicion of being the culprit, is rudely awakened from his slumbers and rushed down into the parlor in scant attire. The police jostle him against the center of the table, causing the vase to fall. Freddy adjusts his monocle and there amidst the debris of shattered glass glisten the elusive diamonds.

"Why here's your necklace!" is Freddy's comment. as he nonchalantly picks up the birthday gift and returns it to Vera.

Thus Freddy has proved himself a veritable Sherlock, and in the final scene we see Vera crowning her hero with the necklace.

CAST.

Tillie Olsen	Cleo Madison
Nels Ormsted	Charles Gunn
Andy Dix	W. V. Mong

Andy Dix, a windmill agent, is on the way West on a fast train. His seatmate seems to be in distress and Andy asks her what the trouble is. The girl, Tillie, answers him in Swedish, which he is unable to understand. Dix makes the acquaintance of Olaf Hanson, who is also on the train. He learns that Olaf is also a Swede and he tells of Tillie. Olaf talks to Tillie, who is happy to meet a countryman, and he learns she is on her way to the middle West, where her father is seriously ill. Olaf asks her about funds and Tillie tells him she is all right and displays a large roll of bills.

Tillie's first night in a sleeping car is very uncomfortable; she cannot sleep, and twice she thinks some one is watching her, but is not sure. Finally she dozes off. When she awakes her money is missing and she hears Dix leaving. She suspects him and follows out. Dix sees he is followed and takes a taxi Tillie follows, he finally eludes her and Tillie misses her train. She wanders about the town until exhausted. At last she finds the Swedish Welfare League, who take care of her.

Her father is, meanwhile, worrying over the non-arrival of Tillie. He had received word that she was on her way, but the train arrived without her. Nels Ormsted cheers the old man up. finally they receive word of Tillie's whereabouts and learn that she is on her way to the farm. Nels is ordered to hurriedly meet the train and sets out in a farm wagon.

Dix is in the country selling windmills and has been doing very well. After securing several orders he sets out for the station.

Nels meets Tillie, who has started to walk to the farm, and the two become acquainted—Tillie tells him of her troubles and how Dix had stolen her money. They meet Dix walking on the road and Nels makes him return the money.

There is a happy meeting between the father and daughter, and the sight of Tillie acts as a tonic on the sick man. Through the days of harvesting Nels and Tillie are together often and their interest in each other grows with the passing days.

"BEER MUST GO DOWN."

Nestor One-Reel Comedy.

Written by Ben Cohn.
Produced by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

CAST.

Reggie Smith	Eddie Lyons
His Father	Hart Gamble
June	Lee Moran

Because Reggie is prone to look upon the liquor when it is red, white and blue, father severely scores him, and his patience reaches a climax when he presented with a bill for damages Reggie has inflicted on a poor, inoffensive restaurant.

Reggie is very much in love with June, his father's ward, and she reciprocates his affection.

Reggie arrives home early one morning—to be exact, at 3 A. M.—and is confronted by his angry father. Father calls him a grafter, and, flaunting the bill of damages before him, tells him to leave the house and not return until he has paid the bill. June intercedes, but father is obdurate and Reggie is thrown out. He spends the night on the lawn, and is awakened next morning by a paper being thrown in his face. Idly looking over it, he sees where a man who knows the elite and club life can get a job, and he decides to try for the place.

The Association of Stevedores are highly wrought up over the advance of beer from five to ten cents a can. There is untold suffering among them, and they secure the services of the redoubtable detective, Potts, to advance their cause. Thus it is that Reggie and Potts meet, for Potts has inserted the advertisement.

Unknown to Reggie, his father is head of the graft trust that advanced the price of beer. The members meet each night to plan new schemes, but Potts and Reggie discover the meeting place and make a raid. The last to come out is Mr. Smith. Recognition follows, and upon being allowed to leave, Smith "makes good" with both Reggie and Potts.

Reggie is enabled to pay off his bills, and as he has proven his father to be the biggest grafter of all, is allowed to return home and bask in the smiles of June.

Baggot in "The Captain of the Typhoon"

☞ Angus thinks of his younger days and his quarrel with Tom—Our own double exposure idea.—[Ed.]

KING BAGGOT in "The Captain of the Typhoon," a two-reel Big U sea drama, written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Henry M. Webster, shows to good advantage in a strong-man part. There is always something stirring and noble about a personality that dominates everyone and everything around it. There is real tragedy in seeing a strong man disappointed in everything that is worth while in life and still go on in the same steadfast manner. Angus does this and lives a lonely life because he gave up the girl he loved when he saw that his brother loved her. But when he finds that his brother has deserted the girl and wronged another his patience gives out and he becomes guilty of the crime of fratricide.

The story in brief follows:

Angus Steele, captain of the Typhoon, is sitting in his cabin in port when he hears a fight on deck. He rushes up to stop it and sees under a tarpaulin a girl shivering from the cold. He carries her into the cabin and is prompted to tell her his story.

BIG U Sea Drama in three-reels, written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Henry M. Webster. Strong character acting in story of unappreciated self-sacrifice on the part of a sea captain for his worthless younger brother.

CAST.

Angus Steele	King Baggot
Tom Steele	Wallis Clarke
Captain Morton	Howard Crampton
Bess, his daughter	Edna Hunter
The Girl	Beatrice Allen

Twenty years before Angus was in love with Bess, the skipper's daughter. One day the old man is brought home dead and Bess turns to Angus for protection though she does not love him.

Then Tom, Angus' brother, returns from a drunken brawl. Bess, who has not seen him for many years, falls in love with him. Tom, seeing that Bess does not love him, agrees to the match and leaves the town forever.

In the years that have passed Tom sank lower and lower. He was supported by Bess, but finally decided that it was not worth while to stay with her. So he leaves and Bess commits suicide.

At last the time comes for the ship to go out and the waif's happiness is over. Then Tom rudely comes on board to ask for money. Angus refuses and as they argue the girl recognizes Tom's voice. She runs to him and says she knew he would return. When he flings her aside Angus gets so angry that he attacks Tom and throws him overboard.

Then the girl turns on Angus and says she loved Tom and that she hates him. And as the ship sails to sea Angus is standing on the bridge looking wistfully at the disappearing lights of the city.

Henley in "My Lady's Millions"

Kate reads of Donald's success.

A letter from the poor fellow's mother.

LAEMMLE Drama in two reels, written by John C. Brownell and produced by Hobart Henley. Girl helps young man in distress and is more than repaid when he threatens to break her father's trust.

CAST.

Stuart Kingsley	Howard Crampton
Kate	Catherine Calvert
Donald Grant	Hobart Henley
Silas Gray	Marcus Moriarity

"MY LADY'S MILLIONS," a Laemmle two-reel drama, written by John C. Brownell and produced by Hobart Henley, is one of the most finished pictures the Universal has ever turned out. It is a picture which speaks for itself. Hobart Henley, in the male lead, is handsome as usual and heroic to the last degree. But Catherine Calvert, a well known stage star, deserves a word of mention all to herself. Miss Calvert, besides being the finished actress which her years of training on the legitimate stage have made her, is without a doubt one of the most beautiful women acting for the screen. Mr. Brownell, the author of the story, is at present finishing a twenty weeks' serial for the highest priced of the stars of the screen, and he has written dozens of the successes in which Matt Moore, Jane Gail, William Garwood and Hobart Henley have appeared. He is one of the cleverest of the younger scenario writers.

The plot in brief follows:

Kate is the only daughter of Stuart Kingsley, head of the Gasoline Trust. Just before riding one morning she asks him for some spending money and he gives her a hundred-dollar bill. Kate tires while riding that morning and decides to rest in a little summer house in the park. On a bench in the little house she sees Donald, fast asleep with a leter from his mother tightly clasped in his hand. She is so touched by the letter that she slips the hundred dollars in his pocket.

Later Donald goes to a cheap restaurant and happens to sit next to an old inventor. The old man tells him that if he had $100 he could perfect his machine for making a substitute for gasoline. Donald is interested, but says that he cannot help him. Imagine his surprise when upon putting his hand in his pocket to pay his check he finds the hundred dollars. Donald agrees to help the old man with his new-found wealth.

When Kate tells her father that she has given away the money he gladly gives her another bill.

Two weeks later the machine is perfected and one of the leading papers publishes an article telling about the invention. Kingsley reads the article, which predicts the downfall of the trust and gets very much excited. He hands the paper to his daughter and she is surprised to read that Donald Grant with a hundred-dollar bill, which he claims the fairies gave him, has bought a half interest in the invention.

A meeting of the trust is called at once. Old Kingsley calls up Donald and tells him to come at once to hear their proposition. When he comes great pressure is brought to bear on him to sell out for a small amount. But he refuses to sell for less than a million dollars.

Meanwhile Kate cannot resist the temptation to go to Donald's office office and offer her congratulations. Donald is not there when she arrives, but the old inventor goes for him. While he is gone she amuses herself by writing some of the sentences in the letter from Donald's mother. Donald comes in and seing the lines realizes that this must be his benefactress. So he says that since she is the one who has made the whole thing possible she must become a partner.

It is not hard to guess that Donald and Kate will become partners for life.

Pelette	Al. MacQuarrie
Martin Langley	Jack Nelson
Gladys	Lucille Young
Her Mother	Mrs. Jay Hunt

Pelette, a guide of the tree country, and Martin Langley, a camp foreman, are both suitors for the hand of Gladys, a mountain girl. Both show her attention and go on many trips together, but in little ways Gladys shows her preference for the foreman. Martin is finally accepted and marries the girl.

Pelette tries to be brave about the matter and when the two leave on a short honeymoon trip with his own hands he builds a house for the two and has it completed when they return.

But daily witnessing the happiness of the two is quite too much for Pelette and after a brave struggle with himself he starts drinking. One day while in an intoxicated condition he chances to be near a stream where Gladys is bathing. The desire for the girl comes over him once more and he approaches her stealthily until she finally hears him. They struggle and he is almost on the point of getting the best of her when Martin arrives and watches spellbound. The girl manages to elude her assailant and rushes to the edge of the cliff, falling over the side into the water. This awakens Pelette and he catches himself just in time to prevent his going after her. The two men seek her out on the shore below and Martin, with the right of possession, wildly pushes the other man aside and carries the unconscious girl home, where later she revives and it is found that she is not seriously injured. She forgives him, but Martin is obdurate. But finally, because of the pleadings of the girl, he too forgives the man who had loved and lost.

DORSEY TRAVEL PICTURES.

Imperial India, Part 4—Rough Riders of India, Powers Educational.

In this picture some of the field sports of India are shown. First there is an elephant race. These animals, though very large and awkward, can travel at a terrific rate. Next sword practice is shown. Horsemen, riding at full speed, cut a sheep in two in one stroke, a feat requiring great skill. Other feats of horsemanship are shown, such as pulling a peg and piercing the heart of a great manikin. A camel race affords much amusement.

Some native troops in a sham battle perform remarkably well. The cavalry in particular give a very spectacular performance. Then some Nautch girls are shown. These are the Geishas of India and command enormous salaries. They are pictured in some of the dances which made them famous.

Sam Newlands	Rex de Rosselli
Irene	Majorie Ellison
Danny	Buddy McQuoid

Sam Newlands, leader of a gang, is a man who needs no one to settle his disputes. His wife, Irene, is just the opposite to him and is timid and shrinking by nature.

Saturday is generally marked by the return of the father from his carousing friends, broke and drunk. At last the heart of Irene rebels when her husband roughly shoves her aside and starts out for one of his weekly celebrations. As she thinks over the indignities she suffers her eye lights on a rifle and she gets an idea.

Sam returns home that night and meets the surprise of his life, for the meek Irene is transformed and when he roughly orders her to do something she covers him with the rifle and orders him to throw up his hands. Irene then lowers the gun and binds him securely to a piece of furniture. She has hidden a whip and now, bringing it forth, she uses it on her drunken husband. When she is exhausted Irene unties Sam and leaves him to wash his cuts and bruises. He determines to seek out his wife and punish her for the punishment she has dealt him. He slips into the next room and finds Irene cuddling her child and singing it to sleep. Sam realizes how meanly he has acted and he good-naturedly says he guesses he deserved his whipping.

The next day is quite different from the usual run, for Sam, instead of hurrying with his friends to the saloon pauses in indecision. While they are pleading Sam hears his wife say "Samuel," and with a mutered excuse Sam hurries home to the wife and child.

JOKER COMPANY MAKES SEA COMEDY.

DIRECTOR ALLEN CURTIS and his Universal Joker company are engaged in filming a one-reel sea comedy, entitled "Soup and Nuts." To get the correct atmosphere, Curtis took his players via ship to San Diego and return. Gale Henry, William Franey, C. Conklin, Milburn Moranti and Lillian Peacock had mal de mer during the trip, which was extraordinarily rough.

Their troubles were only increased when they came back to Universal City and found that they had to make the scenes of the interior of a ship's dining saloon, and this was so constructed that it rocked as badly as the ship. The very thought of it brought on another touch of mal de mer.

NO WONDER THE BUILDING SHOOK.

IT seemed like an earthquake of unusual duration one day this week in the big electric light studio at Universal City, but instead it proved to be a boxing bout between "Kewpie" Morgan — 330 pounds — and "Kid" Sedgwick, who tips the beam at 300.

These "cuties" jabbed each other and jumped around like a couple of baby elephants for about ten minutes and then the big fellows went away for a run down Laemmle Boulevard and followed the sprint with a shower.

"Trying to get into my class," smilingly said Vic (Slim) Potel, as they passed him on the road.

UNIVERSAL HAS NEW CHILD ACTRESS.

ELIZABETH JANES, six years old, known as "the Bimini Seal" and "the California Marvel," is now one of the child actresses at Universal City. Elizabeth is a wonderful swimmer and diver. The little one is a blye-eyed blonde and has surprised the directors she has worked with by her talent, both in comedy and drama.

Elizabeth at present is being featured in "The Little Life Guard," a tale of the sea.

In one of the scenes of this one-reeler "the Bimini Seal" swims with her hands and feet ttied. She is unusually muscular for one of her tender years, and successfully performs the feat without much difficulty.

There was a man in our town,

The Universal Makes a Record Purchase

ANY company which can spend a cool million in cash this year for a handfull of exchanges is in the pink of condition.—Universal acquires the Detroit, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Cleveland, St. Louis and Kansas City exchanges from Laemmle and Powers.

THE most important announcement of the entire moving picture year was the one sent out from Chicago last Sunday that President Carl Laemmle and Treasurer P. A. Powers had sold out their exchanges to that company for the sum of $1,000,000 in cash.

When the Universal was formed several years ago these two men retained their exchanges in the West and Middle West and up until now have operated them independently of the company. The exchanges in Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis were owned by P. A. Powers, and Mr. Laemmle owned exchanges in Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha and the Laemmle Film Service in Chicago.

From time to time there have been rumors to the effect that Laemmle and Powers had sold their private holdings to the Universal, and since the Chicago show opened, it has been stated that Mr. Laemmle had disposed of his Universal stock to John D. Spreckles the California millianaire. But this has been strongly denied by Mr. Laemmle and the other officials of this organization. The stock of the Universal is almost equally divided between Laemmle and Powers and neither have any intentions of disposing of their holdings. Why sell a gold mine?

When the convention started in Chicago many of the film folk were surprised at the large number of exchangemen and other Universalites who came to town. It was evident that something was going to happen when President Laemmle, Joe Brandt, P. A. Powers, M. H. Hoffman, General Manager of Exchanges, and his assistant, Manny Goldstein, Claude H. McGowan, general auditor, and the exchange managers from Detroit, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Cleveland, St. Louis and Kansas City, all came to Chicago together. Immediately upon their arrival they all went into private session at the "Universal Headquarters" at Hotel Sherman and there they remained several hours last Saturday.

After their departure Sunday night the news was given out.

This is a very important move on the part of the Universal and the taking over of these exchanges is going to effectively consolidate conditions in the Universal field. At the same time it proves the solidity of this organization, for it occurs at a time when the majority of the competing companies are endeavoring to cut their expenditures. It also means that this is, unquestionably, the largest financial transaction so far this year, and probably the most important cash deal either of these men have yet realized.

Such a transaction is usually accompanied with certain changes. It was announced that F. C. Cropper, who has been Manager of the Universal Exchange in Kansas City, will be District Manager of the Middle West, and will have the exchanges in Omaha, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Des Moines in his territory. His office will be in Kansas City. George Weeks will have supervision of the Detroit, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo and Indianapolis offices, with headquarters at Detroit. William Oldknow, of Atlanta, Ga., will have the Southern District, which includes Louisville, New Orleans, Memphis, Jacksonville, Nashville, Baltimore and Washington, with his office at Atlanta. M. L. Markowitz, of San Francisco, will have the territory west of Denver, with his main office at Los Angeles. Maurice Fleckles will have the central division, which will include Chicago, Minneapolis and the territory between here and Kansas City. The eastern division will have E. H. Goldstein as District Manager and his jurisdiction will include New York, Philadelphia, Boston and all of New England.

It is the intention of General Manager Hoffman to hold a meeting of District Managers every sixty days in Chicago at which time he will hear reports from all these men.

returning prince. The antics of the would-be star of the ring in the midst of court ceremonial create a lot of amusement. Unbeknown to the court officials the revolution has come to a head and the revolutionaries are preparing to storm the palace that night. Then comes the surprise, which, we are not going to give away, but which is certain to bring a hearty laugh from the most confirmed pessimist.

When the Bluebirds Begin to Fly

Letters from many fortunate Exhibitors who have had the opportunity to prove to themselves that Bluebird Photoplays are the best obtainable at any price.

DUTY TO PRAISE BLUEBIRDS.

Consolidated Film & Supply Co.,
New Orleans, La.

Gentlemen: I feel it my duty as a "Bluebird Photoplay" Exhibitor to use as an outlet for my enthusiasm a letter to you advising my sentiments on thel ast several features I have had the pleasure of showing. They have improved to such an extent that it is beyond me to express myself in a manner that would justify it. It is really remarkable how they are leaping ahead in bounds and if they continue to improve in the next two or three releases as they have recently over all previous features, they will be in a class by thmselves in a very short time.

I am happy to see that "Bluebird" has adapted the policy of Old Man Shakespeare's well-known proverb, "The Play's the Thing, and I attribute the wonderfully high standard of the last several releases to nothing more than the following out of this policy. Here's hoping that this policy will continue. If it does, Bluebird franchises will be at a premium, and the exhibitor who will be fortunate enough to hold the exhibiting rights in his city will have to but announce the fact that it is a Bluebird Photo Play, and his ticket machines and cash registers will peal forth beautiful music.

Assuring you that you have my every wish for a continuance of the splendid productions which you have turned out in the past several weeks, and with kindest personal regards, believe me to be Very sincerely,

STARS SUBSERVIENT TO SCREEN STORIES.

Dallas Texas.

Gentlemen: I have read with a great deal of interest the announcement of your "The Play's the Thing" policy, and wish to extend my heartiest good wishes. Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc., is, I believe, the first to realize the value of the story as applied to the modern screen play, and recent Bluebird releases such as "The Three Godfathers," "Shoes," and "Broken Fetters" are brilliant examples of the results of such a policy.

I note with pleasure that Bluebird Photo Plays is not doing entirely away with the star system, but rather making their stars subservient to the stories in which cthey appear on the screen, and the combination of star and story such as may be found in the three Bluebirds above enumerated is certain to be commended in the strongest terms.

The Bluebird advertising campaign recently inaugurated is of almost inestimable value to exhibitors. I believe if this campaign could be extended to the daily papers, especially in the larger cities of each State, it would add even more to the value of Bluebirds as business pullers.

With best wishes, I am

Yours very truly,
HARRY VAN DEMARK, Mgr.
Fichtenberg Amusement Enterprises,,

PHENOMINAL MONDAYS.

Mr. Nicholas Amos, Mgr.,
Des Moines, Ia.

Dear Sir: Just want to say that Monday was almost my dullest day until the Bluebirds fled this way. Now Monday is as good as Saturday. I tried all sorts of service—including Paramount—to try and build up Monday, but couldn't budge 'em until I started Bluebird service, with Sarah Bernhardt, ten weeks ago. Since that time I have been doing a phenomenal Monday business, both matinees and night. My patrons look forward to Bluebird day with eager anticipation, and I do not hesitate to say that Bluebird is the best service I ever used, both from a money-making and artistic standpoint.

Very truly yours,

Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen: The writer is very much enthused with the new advertising campaign. We are already beginning to feel the results of same in the way of inquiries and business, and I really think that it will be only a short while until most of the so-called exhibitors will be standing with open arms for Bluebirds

With best wishes, we are,

Yours very truly,

DELIGHTED WITH BLUEBIRD.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen: I want to take occasion to compliment the Bluebird people on the picture, "The Gilded Spider." This picture gave excellent satisfaction to a high-class audience on two days in the Columbia, and upon announcing that we would change on Tuesday, making just two days for "The Gilded Spider," we did the biggest day's business on a Monday since the house opened, with regular program.

With the splendid magazine advertising which the Bluebird people are doing, and the consistency with which they are producing high-class pictures, I am thoroughly convinced that the Fall will find the Bluebird one of the most sought programs in this section of the world. Already I have been called on the phone to testify on different occasions to the merits of the Bluebird programs by out-of-town exhibitors, and on two instances I know that they have used the Bluebird by reason of the boosting which we are in position to give it. It is a pleasure to work with people who are putting forth an effort to give the exhibitor a value, not only in his program, but in the exploitation nationally of that program.

I want to say that we are very highly pleased with Bluebird, and some day we are going to show our substantial appreciation.

Very respectfully,
PHOENIX AMUSEMENT CO.,
Phoenix, Ariz.

A GOOD BOOST.

California Film Exchange,
736 S. Olive St.. Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen: After having run the "The Great Problem" with Violet Mersereau as the star, I must say it has raised the standard of the Bluebird Features in my estimation. I make it my business to ask the patrons how they like any particular feature, and every one who attended this play was more than pleased with it.

And on the strength of their recommendation's I now wish to continue the Bluebird service. You can therefore forget about the cancellation.

The East Fifth St. Theatre, with the assistance of the Universal Service, is increasing business right along.

Thanking you for the past favors, I remain,
PHIL S. O'MARA, Mgr.,
E. Fifth St. Theatre.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

KANSAS CITY NEWS.

By GEORGE H. BOWLES.

THE Universal's coming serial, "Liberty," is going to have a great start in the Kansas City territory. The Sapphire Theatre, one of the Kansas City downtown houses, has contracted for the first run in Kansas City, a run of two days. The Sapphire is now running the current Universal serial, "Peg o' the Ring," to big houses, and as a result was anxious to secure first run on "Liberty" before even the bookings were open.

THE record of the Kansas City Bluebird exchange in winning the last two $100 prizes offered by Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc., for the exchange showing the greatest increase in business for a period of four weeks is causing a great deal of comment and worry by other feature film exchanges in Kansas City. With a great many of the former strictly feature theatres returning to the regular program of short pictures, the business of most of the feature companies has taken a big drop in this territory. But the theatres which have cut down to one feature a week have been quick to contract for Bluebirds in order to give their patrons the best feature picture on the market as a banquet after six days of regular program.

THE Bluebird exchange, after credit is given the efficient management of W. B. Emrich, lays a great deal of credit for winning the two prizes to the unusual amount of advertising done by the exchange for the last two months, or in other words, during the hot weather when business takes a drop. Convinced that the advertising and publicity department of the exchange was absolutely right in telling exhibitors that summer months are months to advertise the heaviest, the exchange allowed this department full sway in carrying on a summer campaign for business with a result that the two national prizes were gathered in. Bluebird advertising and publicity burned up the mails almost daily, and with the efforts of the salesmen and Mr. Emrich the contracts have been pouring in.

THE Kansas City Universal Exchange has two members as officers of the Screen Club. R. C. Cropper, manager, is first vice president of the organization and a member of the board of directors, while George H. Bowles, head of the publicity department, is historian and a member of the entertainment committee. M. E. Williams, in charge of the Universal serial department, is also a member of the entertainment committee.

THE Kansas City Bluebird Exchange recently put on a novelty which is proving unusually popular with the exhibitors. This novelty is a small 12-page booklet called "Hunters' Guide," for use by exhibitors hunting excellent features.

The inside of the book is made up of a listing of all the Bluebird releases, the name of the starred player being given as well as a two-line description of the nature of the picture and a newspaper or trade journal criticism. Every exhibitor in the Missouri and Kansas territory is supplied with one of these books.

THE Kansas City Screen Club is busy at work now formulating a plan for its formal bow to the public this fall. The board of directors promises that not only the most novel stunt ever pulled by a screen club will be staged, but that this stunt will be the biggest attraction Kansas City has ever had. These plans will be announced in the near future.

JOE SILVERMAN, who operates the Prospect, Murray and Emerald theatres, three big suburban theatres in Kansas City, also is an early booker on "Liberty." Mr. Silverman never had run a serial in any of his theatres until recently, believing the episode picture would not prove a drawing card. After a great deal of persuasion Mr. Silverman finally booked "Peg o' the Ring" in the Murray, but with many misgivings. For the opening night "Peg" showed to exactly 1,400 paid admissions, and Mr. Silverman each week has been telling the Universal exchange that each "Peg" night shows an increase in attendance. The results were so pleasing that "Peg" is now booked for the Prospect.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, July.—The first prosecution under the Amusement Act was commenced before Col. Denison in the police court today, when Mrs. E. MacDonnell, lessee of the Alexandra Theatre, a "movie" house at the corner of Bloor street and Lansdowne avenue, was charged with an attempt to defraud the Ontario Government out of the war tax on theatre patrons. Mrs. MacDonnell pleaded not guilty. Government Inspector Boyd claimed that at this theatre war tax tickets were resold. The tickets he bought belonged to an entirely different service. The procedure, the inspector claimed, was for the tickets to be placed in a "chopper" and destroyed. There was a "chopper," he said, at this theatre.

An employee of the Fox Film Company, which supplies the rolls of tickets to theatre proprietors, recognized the tickets exhibited as belonging to different rolls supplied to the Alexandria.

COCHRANE, Ont., Can., July, 1916.—The Empire Theatre here has been sending the Canadian Universal Bulletin to the local paper each week. The paper is running a "Movie Fan" column to bring the public into closer touch with the producers and takes extracts from the Bulletin to represent the side of the producer. The idea is so good that the plan is likely to spread and should be very helpful to all concerned.

ST. JOHN, N. B., July, 1916.—The Standard, the leading newspaper of this city, recently published an article on the educational value of moving pictures, written by Professor Keirstead of the University of New Brunswick. Professor Keirstead paid a great compliment to the Universal company when he mentioned them as one of the few concerns that are earnestly trying to co-operate with educational institutions in connection with the movement for better children's pictures.

ST. JOHN, Canada, July, 1916.—The Universal office here has succeeded in booking Bluebird features and their prospects seem very bright.

The first sixty days booking of "Peg O' the Ring" are now filled solidly at this exchange and the demand is growing greater every day.

"WHO PULLED THE TRIGGER?"

Ethel hears him talking excitedly—then runs into the hall. A hasty search of the desk drawer shows the revolver gone. In fear and apprehension she mounts her horse and rides toward the sawmill, hoping to overtake Douglas. Just before rounding a bend in the road she hears two pistol shots. A moment later she comes upon the body of Walt Kendall, her father's revolver beside the body. Douglas is arrested and Ethel is forced to become the "State's witness" against him. He is found guilty, but his lawyer seems confident that he will secure a new trial. Luke Kendall fears a new trial would be granted, so gathers together some of his friends "fixes" the sheriff and prepares for a lynching. First, they burn the sawmill. The illumination attracts the attention of Ethel and she soon discovers the purpose of the "White Caps." Rushing to the house she tries to call up the sheriff in town, but the wires have been cut. Moving the desk in an endeavor to see if the 'phone trouble was in the house wires, she is startled to find on the floor her father's revolver. A break in the back of the desk drawer had allowed it to drop on the floor when she thrust it out of sight. And there it had lain during the trial, the principal piece of evidence that convicted Douglas.

Walt's body is discovered.

With the evidence clasped tightly to her breast, Ethel mounts a motorcycle (the property of their foreman) and starts for town. Her one hope is of beating the lynchers, who started sometime before in automobiles, convincing the sheriff of Douglas' innocence and getting him to protect the prisoner.

She passes the lynchers like a flash, is fired on, wounded, but never slackens her speed.

She arrives in time to place her evidence in the hands of the sheriff, who summons his deputies and prepares for the attack. There is a brisk fight and the lynchers are beaten off.

Later a negro named Sam Daw confesses that he obtained Walt Kendall's pistol during his fight with Douglas and after being beaten by Walt, shoots him.

Ethel and Douglas go North after his acquittal for the wedding.

HERE is an interesting defense sent out by a Universal exhibitor. It is worth reading over very carefully.

"Straight From the Shoulder" From "Ye Old Movie Man"

Question, by the picture patrons: "Mr. Ward, why did you not give "The Garden of Lies" last Saturday night as billed?"

Answer, in plain United States language: "My local opposition, which wants to run the same brand of films, the Universal, that I have given you the past five or six years, and no other kind."

Question: "Mr. Ward, are the Broadway Features from the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.?"

Answer: "Yes, they are—and nothing different than any of their other brands, such as Gold Seal, Imp, Laemmle, 101 Bison, Rex, etc., only this brand of film in question is called Broadway."

Question: "Mr. Ward if you have handled and run for the last five or six years nothing but the Universal Company's different brands of film, why could you not have the Broadway Features?"

Answer: A few years ago the Universal Co. split up its territory, placing two Universal exchanges in Massachusetts, one at Boston and the other in Springfield, to supply Massachusetts Universal exhibitors, of which I was one. At that time, the same as I am now, I was a renter from the Rex Universal Exchange of Albany, N. Y., and the main office of the Universal Co. They gave me my choice of going to the Massachusetts exchanges or staying where I was. I had been with this Rex Co. then some time and our relations always being pleasant, as they are now as far as the Rex end goes, I stayed with them.

Now comes the present difficulty —my local opposition wanted to run Universal Broadway Features and booked in at the Boston Universal Exchange. A few weeks before Feb. 5th, when I was to start in running Universal Broadway Features, I had made arrangements with my Universal Co. to supply these features in question to me. They notified me that "Scandal" would be the first one sent, to be used Feb. 5th. I advertised the same at my shows in "Ye Old Picture Home" as you know. Then I was notified by them the last week in January that I would receive "The Garden of Lies" first for Feb. 5th, and I advertised the same with cloth and paper posters sent me by my exchange, the same as I do any of my Universal features, all in good faith on my part. On Saturday, Feb. 5th, the day I was to show "The Garden of Lies," I received from my exchange a letter stating they would be unable to supply "The Garden of Lies" owing to an argument over territory between their office and Boston.

"The Boston office at the present time is supplying your opposition with Broadway Universal Features (which they had just once, and which he ran on Saturday night, Jan. 29th). Inasmuch as your town lies in Boston's territory they will not allow us to supply you with the Broadway Universal Features. Owing to the fact that there was a splitup in territory some time ago, and if one office had account in another office's territory they would still continue to supply that account (which was my case). I am very sorry that this difficulty came up, but I just came back from New York, and tried to straighten it out there, and have taken the matter further up and expect an answer one way or the other as to whether we can supply you with Universal Broadway Universal Features or not."

This, picture patrons, is why I did not give you "The Garden of Lies" last Saturday night.

Now a word from "Ye Old Movie Man." You, the public, judge who should have the Universal Broadway Features—myself or my opposition. I have not an unkind word to say of my opposition, Mr. Noonan, nor have I ever uttered one since he started up in our small burg, except to say, I wished he had not. Still, as the matter now stands, it would seem to me if he wished to be a "thoroughbred competitor" he wouldn't try to run the same kind of film, namely, the "Universal," which I have run only for so many years, when to-day there are so many other brands on the market.

Finally I ask you, the public, knowing where the "lines of chance" dropped me, and that the Moving Picture Business is my only means of a living for myself and family, I ask you in all kindness to "stand pat" by "Ye Old Picture Home," The Buckland Town Hall—"The House of Happiness," where the best of Universal Photo-Plays are shown; where the music and service combine to make a pleasant evening.

Universally yours,"
C. W. WARD.

A LETTER FROM LINDNER.

Chicago,

Mr. Maurice Fleckles,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Maurice: The inspiration for writing this letter to you came about to-day when I sat through a session of twenty-nine reels of the Universal Program; from "Peg O' The Ring" to the Red Feather feature entitled "Madcap." This long session made necessary by the express driver's strike. Not one of these twenty-nine reels have I marked less than ninety and some above. You know that I have been a booster for the Universal program, having used the program in our little 300-seat Janet for the past seven years and over, and now in the face of Feature Competition (which bills I do not have to pay) the little Janet is still making money week after week with the Universal program (how much money I will not say, as you might raise my service).

The compliments I get from my patrons day after day go to show that they consider the Universal the best of programs.

Yours for Universal peace and better Universal pictures (if they can be made),

(Signed) HARRY LINDNER.

IT SHOWS WHICH WAY THE WIND IS BLOWING

(No. 144. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

Under the heading "Split Reel Notes for Theatre Men," in a recent issue of "Motography," I found the following:

> "A canvass of twenty-one exhibitors to find out whether their patrons preferred the all-feature program, the three-feature-a-week program or the mixed program resulted in a vote of seventeen to four for the mixed program. Four were in favor of the three-feature-a-week entertainment."

According to the most accurate figures obtainable there are almost eighteen thousand exhibitors in the country. While a nation-wide vote on the features vs. regular service question would be illuminating, this canvass, conducted by disinterested parties, is of tremendous importance as a straw that shows which way the wind is blowing.

A year ago the feature craze was so strong that the Universal was literally COMPELLED to release features. In spite of the warnings uttered by the far-sighted men in the industry, the average exhibitor absolutely refused to believe that, so far as he was concerned, feature and failure went hand in hand.

Is the regular service coming back to its own?

You'd have your answer if you could listen to the comments made by the exhibitors who drop in to see me. Yes, and the letters written by the fans—upon whom this business depends for its existence—that find their way to my desk, would also give you your answer.

Both would speedily reveal why those seventeen exhibitors voted in favor of regular service. They would also reveal the reason that caused even the feature exhibitors to vote against running five-reelers more than three times a week.

The trek back to the regular service fold has already started. Each week finds an increasingly large number of exhibitors cancelling features and booking the diversified program that made money for them.

WHEN will you follow suit?

Going to bed is a complicated matter in the city.

try. He is one of the best workers on the Diamond A Ranch, and when it comes time to play he is a leader, too. On the outskirts of the ranch lies the town of Coma. In ordinary times it is merely a sleepy village, and when pay day comes to the outfit it is a real live town, and "Sky High" furnishes the most of the entertainment.

While the boys of the Diamond A are celebrating one of the regular pay days a telegram is brought into the saloon for one Edward G. Landers. "Sky High" finally realizes that he was given that name, but that he had almost forgotten it. "Skeeters" and "Sky" are great friends and the former has been trying to keep on the water wagon, which, of course, "Sky" bitterly resents. The telegram announces that "Sky's" uncle in the East has passed away, leaving him the bulk of a large fortune. A provision of the will states that he must reside in and take personal care of the estate for one year.

"Sky" does not like the idea of going alone and uses all his persuasive powers to persuade "Skeeters" to accompany him. The latter demurs, however, and it is only when "Sky" promises to take the entire bunch that he agrees. The cowboys set out for the effete East to comply with the provisions of the will.

The other heir of the uncle, and who will benefit if "Sky" fails to carry out the provisions of the will, decides to cheat "Sky" out of his rightful inheritance, and in accordance with this scheme enlists the services of Goldie La Croix, an actress. Goldie is to win the heart of the simple Westerner and then throw him over. They hope that the disappointment will cause "Sky" to return to the West without complying with the will.

The boys arrive and are treated to the pleasures of the city. "Sky" meets his cousin, who tells him that he has a dear friend whom he wants to bring over. Goldie is brought in; she makes quite a dent in "Sky's" impressionable heart, and he finds himself falling in love with her. The boys, left to themselves, manage to find enough excitement, and "Sky" is kept busy bailing them out of the police courts.

"You're a fine bunch of short horns," said Sky.

"Sky's" impetuous wooing has quite won Goldie, and when he suggests that they "hitch up," she agrees. The cousin is happy over the way things are going and tells Goldie to keep up the good work. At last the day of the wedding arrives and guests begin to assemble. The boys are rigged out in all the glory of full dress. The cousin gets Goldie to one side and tells her that she has done her part, and that now the time has come to drop "Sky." "Sky" overhears their talk. He leaves, cut to the heart, and fails to hear Goldie tell the cousin that she has played too long and is now in earnest.

Determined to get even with the plotters, "Sky" confronts the cousin and their argument leads to a fight. In the melee Goldie is struck with a flying missile and rendered unconscious. At sight of the wounded girl "Sky" forgets his resentment against her. Goldie revives and finds herself in "Sky's" arms. When he sees that she is conscious, "Sky" remembers her statement to his cousin and tells her that he overheard her plan of "stringing" him," and will try to forget her. Goldie calls him back and tells him that he left too soon and failed to hear the latter part of her statement. The boys are watching how things are progressing and see that it is no place for a crowd. They turn disgustedly away, remarking, "He's ruined!"

FELICITATIONS.

THE editor of the Moving Picture Weekly received this week a felicitous communication from M. Flores Cabrera, director, publisher, proprietor and editor of the Renacimiento, of Santo Domingo, in which he requests an exchange of magazines. The number which accompanied the letter is dated June 15th, 1916, and contains excellent illustrations of timely subjects concerning the difficulty on the Mexican border, and contains a general miscellany of news of interest to Santo Domingans. It is published in Spanish, and the makeup and composition of the magazine are exceedingly artistic and effective. The liberal patronage of advertising argues a remarkably healthy condition, and speaks well for the future of the magazine.

Carter De Haven in "The Sody Clerk"

The First Episode of "Timothy Dobbs--That's Me"

WRITTEN by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery. Our hero first realizes that he is a star—Timothy admits he has talent, consents to place it at disposal of movie magnates. So he deserts the Sody Fountain.

Clarkson	L. M. Wells

Timothy prepares to leave.

A TREMENDOUS amount of publicity has been expended upon the nattily clad person of Carter De Haven. As a dancer and singer in musical comedy and in vaudeville he has been before public for some years and always with increasing popularity, and always with the aforementioned publicity. But it is safe to say that he is embarking in the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me," series on a new era even in his well known career. This series of two-reel features has already been booked in the majority of large picture houses in the larger cities and the smaller places are waiting eagerly for their turn. And this merely on the strong and convincing talk which the advertising and publicity departments have made. The officers of the Universal have a tremendous amount of confidence in this star and in this feature series, and inasmuch as they have already seen eight of the episodes, they feel justified in taking the lid off the publicity valve and letting her "screech her head off."

The general idea of the series is well known by this time and needs no comment here. Carter De Haven is the star of the series and as a soda clerk we introduce him. He does not stay by the fountain long as he has visions which are much more effervescent than any that the one-horse Centreville fountain ever could impound. Timothy Dobbs in the first episode hitches his wagon to a start, but there is too much dead weight. Then there is Jeff, the gigantic and single-minded servitor, who now becomes his valet. The role is played by Robert Milash, whose six and a half feet of towering flesh and bone have kept him absolutely at the top of the theatrical profession for a number of years. He is twice the height of Carter De Haven. The other characters do not appear in every chapter, but they will be introduced here at the beginning. There is Mary Clarkson, the druggist's daughter, a loving and plain-minded miss, who never aspired any higher than a soda clerk. Vola Smith plays Mary. Gwendolen Bates, on the other hand, thinks of nothing else than movie actors and can't see Timothy at all until he invents a moving picture contract. This character is taken by Helen Leslie. L. M. Wells is cast as the druggist. Wallace Beery, who directed the series, plays occasionally in the studio scenes, which will be shown later.

The story opens in a drug store in the small town of Centerville. The elite are there, and Timothy Dobbs, the elegant dispenser, the male Pavlowa, is dispensing drinks to Mildred, the banker's daughter.

The girls all adore him, and the boys despise him accordingly. The place is patronized by all the fair sex, who flock to see Timothy. Mary, the plain daughter of old Clarkson, adores him in secret.

Timothy lives with Jeff in an old farmhouse which his mother left him, with incidentally an income of three hundred a year. Jeff adores him, is his valet, cook and protector.

The boys stand it as long as possible, then frame up to catch Timothy on his way to the dance hall. Mary overhears this and goes to warn him, but he has gone, so Mary tells Jeft. The two rush out and rescue him as the boys toss him into the water. Jeff catches him in his arms so that he does not even get wet. Timothy is more of a hero than ever.

All goes well until Gwendolyn Bates comes to visit Millie. It is Gwendolyn who sows the movie hero-worship seed

Their hero.

GREETING THEIR BASEBALL HERO.

NUMBER Thirty-one of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Christy Mathewson, for sixteen years the star pitcher of the New York Giants, being welcomed by his old pals. "Matty," or "Big Six" as he is familiarly called, was recently traded to the Cincinnati Reds as a manager in exchange for Herzog, who will fill a weak spot in the Giant's infield at third base. Besides being the finest pitcher that baseball has ever known, "Matty" is without doubt the most popular man in the game today. He is the idol of the baseball fans not only in New York, but all over the country as well.

"Matty" is shown receiving a big bouquet of flowers that his ardent admirers sent him. Herzog, who was traded for "Matty," is also shown as well as Hal Chase, formerly manager and first baseman on the "Yanks," who is still considered one of the finest initial sackers in the game. Slim Sallee, another new member of the Giant squad, is also introduced to the fans by the editor of the Animated.

Those who have followed the great Universal program for the last year or two will remember that Christy Mathewson numbers among his many talents a very convincing style of acting. He played in two baseball dramas put on by the Universal.

ALL HANDS SAVED.

THE Animated Weekly for this week shows what is left of the excursion steamer, Keyport, which was sunk recently in New York harbor. It is very fortunate that there were no lives lost, as there were some three hundred women and children on board when the accident occurred. Divers are shown putting hawsers around the bottom of the boat to hoist it.

ENJOYING LIFE IN JAIL.

NEW YORK'S convicts are not far behind their brethren at Sing Sing when it comes to having a good time in prison. Recently they celebrated the first anniversary of the installation of J. J. Murtha as warden, and there were some big doings for the boys in prison. Number thirty-one of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Commissioner Lewis and Parole Commissioner Kate Davis addressing the boys. Then follow sports of different sorts and a ball game between the Murtha Stars and the nine from the Battleship Oklahoma.

BUILDING A CITY OF TENTS.

AN army is forced to carry its own shelter with it, and one of the most interesting sights about a camp is to see the way the tents are put up in a jiffy when the army makes camp. Number thirty-one of the Universal Animated Weekly shows the soldiers on the border erecting one of their magic cities. Of course, the kind of tents that are shown in the picture are permanent and are erected only when the army intends to stay in the vicinity for some time. When on the march little dog or shelter tents are used.

Other views of the soldier boys are shown. The country down on the border is not exactly ideal for walking, but that does not stop the men from taking long and strenuous hikes in the broiling sun. Machine guns practise is also shown. These guns are not of the moving picture variety and the little puffs that are seen spell death for any lusty man who would be so foolish as to get in the way.

ALASKA ALSO PREPARES.

ALASKA refuses to be outdone by any of the states when it comes to patriotism or national spirit. So when all the cities in the states began to have their preparedness parades Juneau refused to be outdone. Number thirty-one of the Universal Animated Weekly shows the great event as it happened up in the wilds of Alaska. Perhaps "Wilds" is not exactly the right term to use, as Juneau is a real city and the parade was a real parade with over fifteen hundred people marching in it. The war veterans were there from both the Civil and Spanish-American wars. Next came the Trail Blazers, the pioneers who helped to build up this wonderland. Nearly all the organizations were there and the parade was brightened by many floats. It was quite the biggest event of its kind that has ever been staged in Juneau.

CUP DEFENDER NOW USED AS FREIGHTER

THE yacht Defiance, built as a cup defender for the famous America Cup, which was donated by Sir Thomas Lipton of international fame, is being cut down for use as a freighter between Norfolk and North Carolina points. Built in 1914 for the challenge race for the famous international trophy, the Defiance never even sailed a race as the European war made the contest impossible. What is left of the once majestic sailing craft is shown in the thirty-first number of the Universal Animated Weekly.

ANIMATED FILMS GREAT CATASTROPHE AT JERSEY CITY

BY quick work on Sunday morning the Universal Animated Weekly cameramen obtained wonderful views of the great catastrophe which laid Jersey City low and bombarded all the surrounding cities with shrapnel bullets, 4-inch shells, causing a loss of life and property damage which can only be estimated at this writing. The two explosions, a little after two o'clock Sunday morning, woke every one within twenty-five miles of the Jersey City Railroad terminal freight yards at Black Tom Island where they occurred, and were the signal for the Animated Weekly cameramen to get on the job as soon as it was light. By dint of influential connections the camera men got excellent views of the terrible devastation which the

"BETTINA LOVED A SOLDIER"

Three scenes from "Bettina Loved a Soldier."

A BLUEBIRD Photoplay. Screen version of famous French novel, "L'Abbe Constantin," by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Rupert Julian with an all-star cast.

CAST.

Abbe Constantin	George Berrill
Mrs. Scott	Francelia Billington
Bella	Zoe Rae
Bettina	Louise Lovely
Paul de Lavardens	Douglas Gerrard
Jean Reynaud	Rupert Julian
Pauline	Elsie Jane Wilson

IF asked to name an example of the French novel, most of us would say "L'Abbe Constantin," for certainly no other book in the French language is so well known outside its own country, as the famous story which opened the portals of the French Academy to its author, Ludovic Halevy. The book has been translated into many other tongues, and has given pleasure to millions of readers. Against all the competition of the new schools of novel-writing ,the realistic, the sensational, and the rest, this simple, sentimental story of two lovely American women in a little French village, holds its own triumphantly in edition after edition.

The charm of the tale is increased rather than diminished in the version which has been prepared for the screen by E. J. Clawson, and produced under the skillful direction of Rupert Julian, who has already placed several Bluebird successes to his credit. One of the cleverest of the younger directors, Julian is also an actor of the first rank, and proves his right to the high place by his portrayal of the role of Jean Reynaud, the nephew of the old priest from whom the novel takes its name. Julian has given his best to this photoplay. He has chosen a cast which the critics pronounce ideal. In filling the two leading roles, he was confronted with the task of finding two leading women of equal charm, one of whom had to be a blonde and the other a brunette. He chose Louise Lovely and Francelia Billington, and that his selection was a happy one is proved by the cut in the center of the next page. Two lovelier girls it would be hard to find, and we sympathize with Jean in his hopeless efforts to decide which is the prettier of the two.

The cast altogether is a very remarkable one, and merits the much abused term, "all star." Besides the two beauties and Julian himself, the other roles are taken by actors who have often been cast for leading roles in other photoplays. There is George Berrill as the Cure, who will be remembered for his convincing work in that other Bluebird Photoplay, "The Three Godfathers." Then there is Elsie Jane Wilson, who has played the lead in so many of Julian's shorter productions, but who, to make this an achievement of super-excellence, here takes the small part of the maid Pauline, and lavishes upon it all the care which she has ever given to a stellar role. Then there is Douglas Gerrard, as the ruined aristocrat, another actor who is accustomed to have the centre of the stage. and who is acknowledged to be one of the most finished players of costume parts on the screen. Last but not least, except in point of size, there is captivating little Zoe Rae, who creeps still further into our hearts by her impersonation of the naughty little sister of the two beautiful American women. Although the Bluebird Photoplay organiaztion has announced in a nation-wide advertising campaign that for them "The Play is the Thing," the list of actors and actresses appearing in "Bettina Loved a Soldier" is a sufficient proof that the important matter of the selection of a company will receive more rather than less attention from them on this account.

The story of the photoplay, which is almost too well known to require telling, is briefly as follows:

This romance of two American girls in France stands almost alone in novel literature. because of the sweetness of its sentiment, the simplicity and honesty of its characters and the convincingness of its plot. It is laid in Longueval in rural France. For more than thirty years the Abbe Constantin had been cure of the lazy little village. The small town is dependent for its existence upon the estate of Longueval and thus when the Abbe and his people learn that the estate has been sold to foreigners, they see all their traditions and even their existence menaced. Mrs. Suzie Scott of New York is the purchaser of the vast estate. She is an American woman with a vast fortune, who has caused a sensation in Paris by her lavish receptions. She has a sister, Bettina, a girl of seventeen, who is as wealthy as her married sister. Within six months, Bettina has had thirty-four offers of marriage, all coming from penniless noblemen. But she is not such a simple girl that she cannot understand perfectly why she is so popular. Foremost among her suitors is Paul de Lavardens, a nobleman who has just completed the delightful task of squandering his inheritance.

It is excusable that the simple peasants of Longueval believe a dire misfortune has befallen them. They not only look upon their new mistresses as only foreigners, but as adventurers and, worst of all, as Protestants. The Abbe is the most sadly affected of all. He has a nephew, Jean Reynaud, a lieutenant in the cavalry, who in all respects, except birth, is a son to the good old man. The tragic day arrives, and the Scotts come to Longueval. Their first duty is to visit the Abbe and, to his infinite delight, he learns that they are not Protestants, but good Catholics. He is almost paralyzed with surprise when they give him two thousand francs for his poor. The good man loses no time in giving the entire amount away to his people. Jean has never met such women before, and, for the life of him, he cannot decide which of the two is more beautiful, or which has the smaller feet, or the more shapely hands. The women are touched with Jean's honest simplicity, and he and the Abbe are frequent visitors at the castle. It is not long, however, before Jean decides that Bettina is the more beautiful. Paul de Lavardens arrives and employs the most approved methods in pressing his suit for Bettina's hand.

One summer's day Jean discovers, to his dismay, that he adores Bettina. Jean is the most honorable man in the world and he looks upon Bettina's money with positive horror. He decides that he will never see her again. Bettina discovers at the same time that she is in love with Jean, but she waits in vain. She invites him to come to the castle, but he excuses himself. When Jean sees his love getting the better of him, he decides to leave Longueval for good; but lover's oaths are very fragile. There is a ball at the castle. Jean decides to leave the following morning at five, but he must see Bettina just once before he departs.

He goes to the ball. The tender-hearted girl presses herself upon the modest lover. but this only increases his discomfiture. Paul asks her for a waltz and she lies to him, saying that she has promised to dance with Jean. She confesses her lie to Jean, but he will not dance with her. He realizes that if he touches her he will be lost; his secret will escape him. His secret!! She reads his heart like an open book. Bettina is forced to dance the waltz with Paul. Jean takes this occasion to leave the castle. However, Bettina leaves the chagrined Paul in the middle of the ballroom and runs after Jean. Paul is torn by chagrin and anger and he follows.

"How handsome he is!" sighed Pauline.

"Which is the prettier?"

Jean says a hurried good-bye to Bettina, but Paul follows him and accosts him. Bettina is watching from a nearby hiding place. Jean refuses to quarrel with Paul and Paul thinks he is afraid. He doubles his insults and even goes as far as to invite Jean to fight him. Jean is firm in his refusal. However, when Paul mentions the names of Bettina and Mrs. Scott and casts an unworthy aspersion upon Jean's motives, Bettina runs from her hiding place and bids Jean fight him. They fight with sabers beside the castle wall, and Paul is defeated.

"You have insulted me!" cried Paul.

Bettina awakens at five the following morning and decides that she will go out to the road and wave good-bye to Jean. She goes out into the dizzling rain and instead of finding Jean, she discovers two braves who have been hired by the vindictive Paul to horsewhip Jean. Bettina hurries to the vicarage and in a pathetic scene she confesses her love for Jean and the Cure commands Jean to marry her. Paul falls into the trap which he had set for Jean. In returning home, he throws his cape over his face to guard himself against the rain. The bravos mistake him for Jean and horsewhip him within an inch of his life.

"MABELLE OF THE PICTURES," COMING DRAMA

A ONE-REEL drama, featuring Peggy Coudray and Director William V. Mong, is being produced by Mr. Mong at Universal City, entitled, "Mabelle of the Pictures."

It is a story of a motion picture actress who is not believed in her home town to be a good girl, because she is required to wear ballet costumes before the camera.

Final "Peg o' the Ring" Chapter

"RETRIBUTION"

Concluding Episode sees Peg come into her own and at the request of Dr. Lund, Jr., she forgives the much-sinning Mrs. Lund. Scenario by Grace Cunard. Directed by Francis Ford.

EPISODE No. 14 left Peg totally exhausted after her fit, with Flip almost strangled and stretched across one of the cases in the tent. Marcus and his assistant found her in this helpless condition and at once seized this opportunity to abduct her. Picking her up bodily, they rush her to the local office of the circus, which is closed because of Dr. Lund's death. Here they leave her, gagged and bound, and then go to report to Mrs. Lund that they have at last succeeded in getting Peg out of the way and to give her the letter that they found in Flip's trunk.

And at that the villains might at last have accomplished their purpose if Dr. Lund, Jr., had not come downstairs just at that moment and overheard them telling where they had put Peg. Rushing to the office, he is chagrinned to find the outer door locked and all the windows on the ground floor boarded up so that entrance is impossible. Realizing that immediate action is necessary, he decides to climb up to the room where Peg is confined. Clinging on to the side of the building by his finger tips he at last succeeds in reaching the third floor. Here Marcus sees him, but as he tries to push the doctor out the latter, clinging to the sill with one hand and grabbing Marcus with the other, pulls him out of the window himself.

As he is untieing Peg, Marcus comes back and tries to shoot him and in the struggle that ensues Marcus hits his head against a table and is knocked unconscious. Then his man attacks the doctor and a terrible fight takes place. Back and forth they sway, first one and then the other on top. At one time Dr. Lund hoists his opponent high above his head and the other to save himself grasps some wires that run across the ceiling. The wires pull loose and there is a short-circuit which ignites some old rubbish that is standing in a corner. But the two men struggle on, unmindful of anything but their fight. Meanwhile the flames mount higher and higher. At last Dr. Lund succeeds in choking his opponent into submission and he then proceeds to untie Peg.

But by this time the flames have mounted and the whole staircase is a mass of fire. No avenue of escape is open but the window, so Peg and the doctor are forced to make their escape that way. They manage to reach the street safely and then he takes Peg to his office, where he performs an operation with an X-ray apparatus to remove the effects of Peg's strange inheritance. They then rush to the doctor's home, where the will is to be read at three o'clock.

At the doctor's house Mrs. Lund is very happy, as she thinks that she has at last succeeded in getting rid of Peg. Imagine her surprise when Flip, her son, and Peg walk into the room. But she does not yet give up hope and produces the letter which was found in Flip's trunk.

"This letter left by Peg's mother shows that she has no claim on my

"Fangs of the Wolf," 1s

New 20-Week Serial, Written and Produced by Jacques Jaccard, Starts Out with All the Life and Vim of a World Beater.

Universal Special Feature

Action pictures of the first episode of "Liberty," which was so strenuous that they had to be made with a Graflex to record the punches which the director is putting into each episode.

"LIBERTY, A DAUGHTER OF THE U. S. A.," is engaging the entire time and attention of Director Jacques Jaccard, who not only is producing the big Universal twenty-weeks serial, featuring Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt, but is also writing each episode himself. In the supporting cast are such well known players as G. Raymond Nye, Maude Emory, Bertram Grassby, Roy Stewart and L. M. Wells. Neal Hart is at the head of the cowboy contingent, and already three episodes are complete and the fourth well on its way.

More than one location in the San Fernando Valley north of Los Angeles has resounded with the cry and shot of battle during the last week while Director Jacques Jaccard has been filming the scenes for the first three episodes of the serial.

Jaccard has made a number of serials during his career as a director, but declares there is a bigger punch, more suspense and thrilling action in this one than any he has heretofore made.

Each episode shows the thrilling rides of the cavalry or Mexicans down the steep slopes of the hills, exciting rescues of the heroine, battles between the opposing forces and innumerable situations with heart interest.

The action in these first three episodes is so fast and furious that no still picture camera could be used to represent it in the ordinary manner in which still pictures of action are taken. For that reason Jaccard procured the fastest Graflex camera which could be obtained, and with it secured some wonderful action stills which are reproduced at the top of this page. In the first one Maude Emory, who plays the role of Theresa, a servant and entertainer, is seen dancing through the doorway of the Horton mansion in Sonora. The next four show scenes at the rodio which was attended by Liberty and her companions, and in which both the Mexican and American cowboys participated. One of the features of this popular event was the escape of a bull, and its capture by Jack Holt. It was in reality a very thrilling moment, and the panic which overtook the spectators was not simulated in any manner. It was entirely real. Jack Holt grabbed the bull by the horns and twisted its neck in such a manner that it was thrown, and he held it until the handlers could secure it. The last paragraph of the strip shows the climax of his victory.

Maud Emory as Theresa.

The three reels of the first episode are crowded with action, and action of the most thrilling and daring sort. But even so, they are more introductory than otherwise, and a promise of what is to come, rather than an actual gauge for the speed of this serial. Jaccard has developed the story up to the eighteenth chapter, and it fairly hums and buzzes with speed, surprise, adventure and climax. The last two chapters he intends to leave as long as possible, and will be guided in them by developments in the Mexican situation. This is the first serial ever written which has capitalized a national or international situation, and it will be watched with great interest by every one who is interested in any way in the United States' interest in Mexico.

Following is the synopsis of the first episode of three reels, which is entitled, "Fangs of the Wolf."

EPISODE NO. 1 (Three Reels).

James Horton, a wealthy landowner in Mexico, dies at his Hacienda in that country, leaving a will which makes Major Richard Winston and Senor Pancho Leon the trustees of Horton's vast estate, and they are created guardians of his daughter and only child, Liberty Horton, aged seventeen years, the will commanding that Anita must not marry before reaching the age of twenty-one, without the written approval of both trustees. The will bequeaths $1,000 to Horton's faithful servant, Pedro, a saddle to Manuel, son of Pancho Leon, and Horton's favorite horse is devised to Capt. Robert Rutledge, of the Texas Rangers.

Liberty spends a year at the Winston home, and then goes to her late father's estate in Mexico, being escorted there by Maj. Winston and Capt. Rutledge, and they are made welcome by Pancho Leon and his son, Manuel, and by Pancho Lopez, major domo of the Rancho and secret insurrecto.

During the fiesta there are many thrilling vaquero stunts performed by the Mexican riders and the Texas Rangers, the latter having come with Liberty from the United States.

Capt. Rutledge is in love with Liberty and she has much affection for him, but Trustee Leon's son, Manuel, becomes Rutledge's rival for Liberty's hand despite Manuel's amour with the jealous Therese.

"Fight for the Screen on the Screen"

PRESIDENT of the Universal says we do not use the screen itself to the best advantage in fighting censorship—Carter De Haven wins a friend.

RECENTLY a representative of the Morning Telegraph interviewed Carl Laemmle on his attitude toward using the screen to fight censorship. This is what he told the reporter:

"In the effort to combat adverse legislation and political censorship," said Mr. Laemmle, "the moving picture world has made little use of the screen. Manufacturers and exhibitors in the main have had recourse to their house organs, trade papers and local newspapers. Sentiment can be moulded, however, and manfacturers can protect themselves from unwarranted attack much more effectively on the screen than they can in the newspaper.

"The average daily newspaper fails to reach the theatre-going public. The moving picture theatres, on the other hand, serve 2,000,000 people each night in all parts of the country and reach precisely the audience the manufacturer wishes to appeal to. Moreover, it is especially fitting that the fight for a free screen should be conducted on the screen just as newspaper publishers of another generation fought for the freedom of the press in their own publications.

"Censorship of motion pictures is a direct violation of the United States Constitution, because it is an abridgement of the freedom of publication. Americans would not stand for censorship of newspapers, or the pulpit, or free speech of the books they read; why should they tolerate the snipping of their moving pictures by National, State, City, Village, Hamlet, Township and county "censorship boards" composed of self-appointed Solomon Grundys, misguided enthusiasts and blackmailing politicians?

"The Universal has in contemplation the production of a photoplay depicting in graphic fashion the dangers of censorship and the reasons why the liquor interests are fighting the moving pictures. This film will trenchantly illustrate why blackmailing politicians, controlled by their own and the liquor interests, are so eager to mulct the manufacturer, the exchange, the exhibitor and, in the last analysis, the public. Already the Universal has prepared and is now issuing the following "trailer" to be appended to each release in the future as a step toward defeating the ends of those politicians who wish to prey upon moving pictures as they have in the past upon the corner saloon and the glambling den:

"A PROTEST AGAINST CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES."

"We believe the best censors in the world are the people, the men and women who come to see our pictures, and the fathers and mothers of the nation. Producers know that their business wouldn't last twenty-four hours if they produced pictures that YOU wouldn't come to see."

UNIVERSAL FILM M'F'G.Co.
Carl Laemmle, President.

The Universal was the first to advocate a concerted fight by all the manufacturers against censorship just as it was the first to assume the fight against the Motion Picture Patents Company in the Latham Loop case which affected every exhibitor in the motion picture business. Again it urges all manufacturers, and exhibitors to fight for the screen ON the screen.

DE HAVEN'S FANCY NOW RUNS TO HATS

Carter De Haven, star of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series, made the back yard of his bungalow in Hollywood the haven for stray cats until the pets affrighted the night with their discordant tones and then he turned the felines loose. He lost sleep, but was not discouraged. From cats De Haven went to the dogs, that is, he was seized with the notion that he would establish the "De Haven Kennels" and in his characteristic way, sent out notices to his friends that contributions of dogs would be thankfully received.

Phillips Smalley, Carter De Haven and Wallace Beery in Carter's pet hat.

As a nucleus for the "De Haven Kennels" the diminutive Carter purchased three Boston bulls. Twenty-four hours after the notices had been disseminated Pat Rooney, another of the bantomweight comedians at Universal City, sent his contribution to the "De Haven Kennels"—it was one of those yellow curs which are not of much use to the world or to themselves. Eddie Polo followed it that night with another of the cur variety and, strange to say, Slim Potel made it triplets the next morning.

It can well be imagined how De Haven, who was ready to "kick those hounds around" felt when three more

Universal Pays $1,200 for Synopsis

RECORD price in picture business—Willard Bradley wrote "The Beloved Imp," which brought this price, one morning before breakfast. Author is the mayor of Greenwich Village.

THE Universal has broken another record. It paid $1,200 to Willard Bradley for an eight-page synopsis under the title, "The Beloved Imp." The previous high record for a synopsis alone is $750, and was paid for a five-reel feature. In that case, however, a working script went with the synopsis. The Universal purchased only the synopsis with "The Beloved Imp." Offers of a thousand dollars have been made on various competitions, and under special arrangements, all of them having certain strings attached to them. The Universal paid $1,200 strictly on the merit of the story, and is in accordance with the new plan of the Universal for buying scenarios.

Some time ago it became apparent that the "per reel" method of buying scenarios was equitable neither to the writer nor to the company purchasing them. Frequently a script purchased as a five-reeler has to be cut to a two, and it frequently happens that a story intended as a two-reeler is worth five reels in the hands of a competent scenario staff. The Universal intends to depend upon its own scenario staff for guidance as to the value of stories in future, and will pay for the story itself, and not for the number of reels in which the story will be produced. If "The Beloved Imp" may be accepted as a criterion, this system is likely to work out very much to the benefit of scenario writers. This story in synopsis form alone so appealed to the Universal that it made the offer based upon the merit of $1,200 for the story. It is intended to put a star in the title role of this drama, which is a story of Scotch domestic life, the scene of which is laid in the mountain regions of Northern Scotland.

Henry McRae directing the first picture in which Edith Johnson appears, "Behind the Scenes."

Willard Bradley, the author. is one of the best known scenario writers in the moving picture field. He sold his first scenario to the Universal in July, 1912, and it was produced with Edwin August and Florence Bennett under the title, "His Madonna," as a Powers single reel, but before this he had written for the Biograph Company and the old Imp, G. Melies and others, and has been a very prolific script writer ever since. His stories are in high demand.

Willard Bradley is best known to the newspaper fraternity as the Mayor of Greenwich Village, and in spite of his youthful appearance he is always deferred to by the residents of one of the most interesting localities in New York whenever there is a celebration or any civic undertaking to be performed. He has endeared himself to the locality and its inhabitants through three years of intimacy as publisher and editor of the Greenwich newspaper, the Saturday Night. He is Father Confessor of many of the budding literary geniuses of the district and has been a great deal of help to the students, artists and professional people who comprise the population of this interesting locality. As a writer Mr. Bradley is well known to the moving picture public through collaborating with D. W. Griffith on a scenario treatise called "The Photo Dramatist," to the fiction public through his short stories, a few of which are "Flossie's Profession," "It Happened on Riverside Drive," "Caroline Makes a Killing," "The Heart o' Harlem," "Dennison of Hudson Park," Muskateers of Pig Alley," and "An Egyptian Cigarette." He wrote and sold his first scenario when he was thirteen years old, and even at that age he conceived and executed his work very rapidly. He says himself that he wrote "The Beloved Imp" one morning before breakfast.

EDITH JOHNSON, NEW BISON STAR, BEGINS WORK AT UNIVERSAL CITY

EDITH JOHNSON, the new leading woman of the Bison company under Henry McRae, has already had her first baptism of fire at Universal City and has acquitted herself with honor and earned the praise of her director. She is seen in the five-reel war drama, "Behind the Lines." Harry Carey is the star of the piece, his company including efficient Assistant - Director Marshall, having been for the time being absorbed by the Bison.

In "Behind the Lines" Miss Johnson plays the role of a nurse and most of the action takes place on the Mexican border. Mary Rider wrote the story and Walter Woods put it into scenario form.

One of the curiosities used in "Behind the Lines" is a cartridge clip belt once owned by Gen. Francisco Villa. The bandit declared it was too heavy and gave it to Ivor McFadden, one of the Universal City actors, who at that time was filming pictures in Mexico. McFadden loaned it to Hanford for use in the film play.

JULIAN GIVES ADVICE.

A FEW days ago Rupert Julian, well known director-actor at Universal City, was leaning against the entrance to the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles. He was thinking about the film play he had under production and did not notice when a beautiful English make of automobile drew up to the curb in front of him. At that moment an extra actor who had worked for Julian stepped up, saying:

"Good afternoon, Mr. Julian. Beautiful car, isn't it? By the way, sir, if you owned that automobile, what would you do with it?"

Julian crossed his arms and a hand went to his chin as he meditated a minute. Then he replied:

"Sell it, my boy; sell it."

"A YOKE OF GOLD," a Red Feather feature production, directed by Lloyd B. Carleton, shows old California in all its romance and splendor. In these days, when San Francisco rears its mighty structural steel towers above the majesty of Golden Gate Bay, people have almost forgotten that back in the days before the precious yellow metal was discovered in that Western land, California was a Spanish domain, ruled by the fiery passions of that proud race. Hot breezes that swept over the sun scorched desert inflamed the quick temper of these Southern people to deeds of unusual violence.

In this picture L. B. Carleton has caught the old spirit of the Spanish Mission, with its peaceful, drowsy quiet, and fused it with the violence of Southern passion. The old mission at Santa Barbara is shown at work, calming the lives of these violent people. The result leaves nothing to be desired in the way of artistic effect. The desert scenes in particular are beautiful as pictures, with sun-bleached sands and cloudless sky, and with the added interest of a man slowly dying from want of water, the product is the highest pinnacle of motion picture art. Lloyd Carleton has succeeded in evolving a real masterpiece in artistic production.

The actors, too, do their part to make the piece a success. The part of a beautiful Spanish maiden is taken by Dorothy Davenport, one of the most finished screen artistes acting before the camera. Miss Davenport, whose name in real life is Mrs. Wallace Reid, is a dark, Southern type exactly fitted for this kind of a role. Her long experience on the legitimate stage, as well as before the screen, combined with an unlimited amount of natural talent, have combined to make Dorothy a success in almost any kind of a part she attempts.

Dorothy Davenport is no upstart in the theatrical field, as both her parents and all of her father's people were connected with the stage. Dorothy herself was in a stock company at the age of three, and for several years before entering the motion picture field was in vaudeville. After several years' experience with the Essanay Company in Chicago, she joined the Universal, where she has been for the last few years.

Opposite Dorothy Davenport in this picture plays Emory Johnson. Emory has only recently been assigned to male leads, formerly playing heavies and character parts. Johnson takes the part of a young Spaniard who is influenced by an older man to take part in a robbery in order to secure funds for a revolution.

The plot of the play moves naturally and swiftly to a beautiful conclusion. It begins on a dead level, and after rising to a supreme height subsides to a level once more, and ends in the calm and quiet of the Santa Barbara Mission. In the story sin and vice come into contact with purity and goodness, and of course the latter prevails. There is one particularly stirring scene where Jose and Luis are racing across the desert to the home of Don Ortega. Hard and fast they ride across the burning sands, their horses quivering and feverish from the heat of the desert. This is the climax of the picture, and after Jose succeeds in warning Ortega of Luis' villainous designs, the action subsides, until in the end the married couple are shown in wedded bliss.

In the days of '49, the aristocracy of old California contrived, by fair means or foul, to gather unto themselves more than their rightful share of the precious yellow metal which abounded throughout that golden land.

There were those among the populace who resented this state of affairs. Luis Lopez was one of these. Smarting under the yoke of the aristocracy, Lopez determined to champion the cause of the people. Accordingly, he set about to enlist the aid of others, and chose Jose Garcia for an ally. Jose, while satisfied to live out his life in the drowsy peace of old San Gabriel, where he lived, was easily influenced by the fiery Lopez, and finally agreed to wage a campaign against the wealthy aristocrats, Don Ortega and Don Mendoza.

He informed his doting mother of his intention to win his place in the world and, with the blessing of Padre Amador, of the Santa Barbara Mission, set out for the home of Don Ortega, whom it was agreed that he should rob. Lopez chose De Mendoza as his prey and started for his victim's home in the "Valley of the Seven Moons." It was agreed between Lopez and Jose that the gold which they hoped to gain would be devoted to the uplift of the oppressed, a worthy mission in the eyes of the gullible Jose.

Jose's destination lay across the burning desert, which it was necessary for him to cross. Over the blistering sands he wended his way. Stopping in the midst of the desert to slake his thirst, he was horrified to find that he had lost his canteen. A tragedy indeed! He found instead a crucifix which the good Padre Amador had secreted in his pack-saddle. Tearing it off, he flung it with anger into the sands and passed on.

It so happened that Senor Arrelanes, another aristocrat, with his daughter Carmen, were traveling in the same direction, intending to visit their cousin, Don Ortega. They found the crucifix and later came upon the prostrated form of Jose, where he had fallen exhausted. Lifting him up, they bore him away to the home of Don Ortega, where Carmen tenderly nursed him back to health.

In the meantime, Lopez had reached the home of De Mendoza and besought lodging. In the stillness of the night he crept stealthily into the living-room and stole the bags of gold which his hosts had deposited in a chest. Surprised in his nefarious work by Mendoza's wife, Lopez set upon her. Mendoza came to the rescue and drove Lopez from his abode.

Jose and Carmen receive the Padre's blessing.

"If you were not my guest——"

Jose had meanwhile fallen a willing victim of the charms of the gay and pretty Carmen, and vowed to himself that he would not be guilty of robbing those who had befriended him. Reluctantly then, he set forth on his return to Santa Barbara to meet Lopez.

Learning from Jose that he had failed to secure the gold of Ortega, Lopez vented his spleen upon him and threatened that he himself would get it.

Surprised indeed was Jose to learn that Lopez had intended to steal all the gold for himself only, instead of for the poor.

During the night Jose stole Mendoza's gold from beneath Lopez's pillow and hastened away to warn Ortega. Discovering Jose's absence, Lopez quickly gave pursuit, vowing to kill the traitorous Jose.

Back through the wood and desert flew the pursued and pursuer, but Jose arrived in time to warn Ortega, so that when Lopez arrived he fell into the trap laid for him. Carmen, devining that some good lay at the bottom of Lopez's stern nature, pleaded with him to turn from the path of evil. With the assistance of Padre Amador, who came in response to her bidding, Carmen at last prevailed upon Lopez to forsake his evil ways. And so when Carmen had yielded to the pleadings of her impetuous lover, Jose, Lopez stood nearby to share their happiness, and later returned to Santa Barbara, there to spend the remainder of his days with the gentle priests at the Mission.

DOROTHY DAVENPORT, BORN TO STAGE, IS UNIVERSAL CITY FAVORITE

ONE of the charming young actresses at Universal City is Dorothy Davenport, born of a race of theatrical people, and following the path of fame trod by her ancestors. To those who know her intimately, she is "Dot." In private life she is Mrs. Wallace Reid, and the actress and her husband have a happy home which they enjoy when the day's work before the camera is over.

A good housekeeper, too, is this little actress, and she frankly admits her home means more to her than the studio.

"Onda of the Orient"

MARIE WALCAMP and Eddie Polo, stars of "Liberty," featured in this Gold Seal Three-Reel Melodrama of the Philippines. Written by Ben Cohn and Walter Woods and produced by Henry McRae. —Filipino heiress, stolen and robbed in childhood, restored to fortune through strange will engraved on a dagger blade.

Insert—Aldo attacks Onda. Onda unmindful of coming tragedy.

"ONDA OF THE ORIENT," a Gold Seal three-reel photoplay, featuring Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo, should be particularly interesting, because these two stars are at present occupied in filming the great war serial, "Liberty." In both the present picture and in the serial they do a host of the stunts that have made them famous. Exciting? That is not the word. These are downright hair-raisers.

And the story is this:

"More radical than ever was the Katipunan—to secure independence by open revolt and began by wholesale assassinations of Spanish officials and friars."—August 25th, 1896.

The leaders were Pedro Bonifacio and Emil Aguinaldo.

Pedro Bonifacio has lived in San Francisco for years. His wealth comes from an extensive plantation in the Philippines, which is managed by a young Spaniard.

Fernando, the son, is a dissolute, fast young man, who squanders his father's money and associates with the fast and criminal class.

Onda, his supposed sister, tries to reform him. He dislikes interference and consequently hates Onda most heartily. He is selfish and cruel toward her, taunting her with the fact that the father has made a will in his favor, and that when he dies she shall be penniless.

Pedro, dying, confesses to his son how in Manila he was the servant of Gen. Lopez De Ayale—how, when the revolution of 1896 broke out he secretly aided the rebels, admitting them to the house, where De Ayale was assassinated—how he stole papers, heirlooms and other means of falsifying his identity, while the rebels looted and burned the house; how he rescued De Ayale's little daughter from the flames and escaped to America; how he forged a will in which the plantation was left to him and the proceeds from the estate had been paid to him ever since; how the real will was engraved on a dagger—he has the dagger, but the key, the scabbard, is in Manila, having been taken by Aldo, De Ayale's servant. Pedro confesses this as his conscience troubles him and he wishes to make amends before he dies.

CAST.

Onda	Marie Walcamp
Colonel Renton	L. C. Shumway
Aldo	Eddie Polo

The son promises to see that Onda is restored to her rights, but it is far from his intentions to be reduced to poverty while the girl inherits wealth.

Onda comes to the bedside of her supposed father to hear him gasp out:

"This dagger contains the secret of your parentage; also the will to your inheritance. The scabbard is in Manila—a Moro named Aldo has it—it is the key—your father's name was——" He falls back dead.

Onda takes the dagger and resolves to go to Manila and try to solve the mystery. Fernando tries to dissuade her, even telling her that the old man was crazy, etc., but Onda is determined.

Then Fernando, with the aid of some criminal companions, resolves to trap her in Chinatown, secure the dagger and kill her. The plan is frustrated by Colonel Renton, who has gone on a slumming trip before his departure for the Philippines.

Another attempt is made on Onda's life as she is about to board the steamer. Failing in this attempt, Fernando and his companions take passage in the boat. On the trip Renton and Onda develop a strong attachment for each other. Fernando, while pretending to have taken the trip in order to protect his "sister," secretly plots her death and endeavors to get the dagger.

On the boat is also Aldo, who has come to America on a mission of revenge. He has seen Pedro die—has followed the son and supposed daughter. Many mysterious events occur on ship board—the dagger is stolen from Onda and is later found buried in the breast of Fernando's female companion. Fernando is thrown overboard and is drowned. Aldo is about to kill Onda when he is discovered and arrested by the ship's officers. He then confesses his attempt to revenge his master—discovers that Onda is the daughter of his old master and restores to her the scabbard. The knife is fitted and the cipher will read. Onda is restored to her rights and marries Renton.

"I give her dowry."

Leah is kind to old Reb.

BEN WILSON in "The Marriage Broker," a Victor drama in two reels, adapted from the story by Bruno Lessing, has accomplished a very fine bit of characterization. If there is one man in America who knows the Jewish mind and customs it is Bruno Lessing. For years his stories of Ghetto life in New York have been eagerly bought by the magazines and read by a sympathetic public.

Much credit is due to Ben Wilson for the excellent way in which he has produced this drama. The charm of Ghetto stories lies in the peculiar character of the Jewish people. Under somewhat crude and humorous exteriors lie hearts as good as gold and as big as the ocean. Under this good natured appearance often lies tragedy of the deepest and most sorrowful kind and it is only when the outside is ripped off that the inner view becomes apparent. The handling of such a plot requires the utmost amount of skill and delicacy, for it is quite possible to go so far as to make a whole situation ridiculous. Wilson has managed to get the maximum of both comedy and tragedy out of his plot and has accomplished this without bordering on the ridiculous.

Dorothy Phillips, in the part of the undowered younger sister, is her own sweet self and her raven black hair stands her in good stead in this Hebraic part.

The plot in brief follows:

Old Reb. Litwak always sits by the kitchen stove, playing doleful tunes on an antiquated guitar. Old ancient Hebrew melodies he plays. Even Leah, who does the housework, asks him to play livelier tunes, but he only smiles.

But he has money. The duty of Leah is to minister to the comforts of Litwak, the tailor, and his daughter Sarah. In short, Leah is the family drudge. Leah is jealous of Sarah's fortune and matrimonial prospects.

A few nights later Leah sits on the front steps talking to the policeman, when the schatchen appears with a handsome young man. They inquire where the residence of Litwak is and Leah directs them.

The policeman asks her who they are and Leah repies: "Oh, that is a husband being brought for my cousin Sarah." At this the policeman makes the promise that, some day, he will bring a nice young fellow up to see her.

In the room upstairs a lively bargaining is going on. Litwak promises a dowry of $2,000 to the man that will marry his Sarah. The young Jew, with thoughts of the prettier girl on the porch in his mind, is slow to grasp his golden opportunity. The schatchen finally drives him into line, when he reminds him that he cannot pay rent with good looks.

But the young man never takes Sarah out, as he prefers to remain in the house and gaze upon Leah. One afternoon he calls when Sarah is out and plunges into an animated conversation with Leah, declaring that if she had a dowry he would prefer to marry her instead of Sarah. He is very much surprised to hear Leah say that the man she marries would get no dowry, that he would have to take her for herself alone.

The night before the betrothal ceremony the family is seated discussing the coming matrimonial event, when a thunderous rap sounds upon the door. Before a word can be spoken, the policeman steps in and surveys them. He inquires for the little girl, and, with a cry, Leah springs toward him and then introduces the family.

The Policeman goes over to the tailor and announces that he wants to marry Leah, that is, if she'll have him. "But," stammers Litwak, "you are a stranger to me." "Sure, I am," admitted the policeman. "But it's me that's goin' to marry her," and the policeman puts his arms about Leah and begins to coax her. But she tells him that she has no dowry. "T'ell with dowry! I don't want money. All I want is you!"

Old Reb then says that he will give all his money to the young couple, and so when the picture ends Leah has a fortune and a husband.

OH PSHAW!

The censor said he'd cut the scene,
Because a wintry breeze,

Cleo Madison in "The Guilty One"

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama. Story by R. E. Bradbury. Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison and Wm. V. Mong. Mystery surrounds stage robbery. Girl saves sweetheart from innocent conviction by becoming her own detective and unravelling the fiendish plot of two unscrupulous highwaymen.

Jane finds stolen goods in Jeff's pocket.

CAST.

Jane	Cleo Madison
Her Father	L. M. Wells
Jeff	Charles Gunn
Lem	William V. Mong
The Sheriff	B. T. Henderson
The Halfbreed	Bertram Grassby

IN "The Guilty One," a 101 Bison two-reel mystery drama, Cleo Madison and Wm. V. Mong have scored another hit. The picture was filmed in the wilds of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and contains wonderful scenery besides an absorbing plot.

The plot is logical from start to finish and worked out accurately in all the minute details, which make for good directing. The motives are clear and natural and the action dovetails so nicely that there are no hitches or breaks in the continuity.

Charles Gunn is very attractive in the male lead, although male leads do not mark the limit of his ability as an actor. Gunn does not belong to the school of motion picture heroes who refuse to appear before the camera without a shave. In a recent picture, "Weapons of Love," he takes a character part successfully and gains the hatred of the audience quite as readily as in this play he secures their sympathy.

Bertram Grassby, who is at present playing one of the villains in the new serial, "Liberty," takes the part of a half-breed and his appearance is a masterpiece in the art of make-up. The story, in outline form, is this:

Jane is just a country girl who lives up in the mountains with her father, the stage driver. Although the country is hardly anything but wilderness, this wild rose has two admirers, Jeff, the deputy sheriff, and Lem, a barber by trade, but a gambler and ruffian as well.

One day Lem is desperate after losing heavily and decides that he must take some radical step to recoup his failing fortune. Crazed with drink, he goes to Jane's cabin and tries to force his attentions on her. As they are struggling Jeff comes along and gives Lem a sound thrashing. And as Lem slinks away, sore in mind and body, he vows to be avenged.

After he has gone Jeff tells Jane of his love and she confesses to be in love with him. Right then and there they become engaged and Jeff promises to return that night to see his sweetheart.

Lem decides to kill two birds with one stone by robbing the stage and making it appear as if Jeff had done the job. So that night he and his pal attack Jeff as he is leaving Jane's house and steal his clothing while he is unconscious. They then rob the stage and drop Jeff's hat where they know it will be found.

The next morning the sheriff starts out to look for Jeff, as every one thinks that he is the guilty man. The stage driver finds him as he is grogily walking up the road and, taking him home, tells Jane to keep him there until he can get the sheriff. Jane, however, believes Jeff when he says he is innocent and lets him go. She has a sneaking suspicion that Lem is the one who committed the crime, so she goes to his cabin to investigate. Through the window she sees the two men hiding the stolen money.

Jane jumps on her horse and gallops as fast as she can down the valley to get the sheriff. But when the sheriff and his men arrive they find nothing but death in the little cabin. The thieves have quarreled over the division of the spoils and both of them lie on the floor mortally wounded.

Jane then goes to where Jeff is waiting for her and the two are happily united. Jeff's name is cleared of all blame in connection with the crime, so that they "marry and live happily ever afterward."

MR. HAMMOND'S SUPERSTITION.

NEXT to the sailors of the seas, there is no profession that treasures their old-time beliefs as do the actors of the legitimate.

How many of the 40,000 who passed 'neath the great Roman arched entrance to the amphitheatre of Julius Caesar took notice of a rusty old horseshoe nailed over the arch?

During the great rush and excitement just preceding the performance, Miss Clara Turner, of Universal City, who had the distinction of being the first woman to play the "Fourth Citizen," was seen running wildly about with the horseshoe. She bumped into Gilmore Hammond, Universal's "heavy man," and tearfully entreated him to "save the show."

A big ladder was at once secured, and up ran Hammond and nailed the shoe fast.

After the performance, about 12:30, when Director General Wells was congratulating his assistant on the success of the world's greatest Shakespearean production, Miss Turner chimed in with, "No, Mr. Wells, our direction did not save the show. It was my horseshoe over the arch."

Margery Trumbull	Marcia Moore

"THE SPEED KING," an Imp two-reel modern melodrama contains enough thrills to make the heart of any racing enthusiast come into his throat. The picture, which was produced by Richard Stanton, is built around the fatal race at Corona, California, in which Bob Burman, the speed demon, was killed. The speed with which the cars thunder around the track is not simulated or increased by the cameraman, as the racing shots were taken in the actual course of the race. Close-ups are shown of Bob Burman, Barney Oldfield, Joe Dawson and other famous drivers.

Every one who saw the great Universal serial, "Graft," knows the punch which Stanton is in the habit of putting into his pictures. But with the racetrack as his background the result is vim and dash seldom approached in the movie field.

The story runs like this:

Ross conducts a little auto repair shop and is building himself a racing car, which is entered in the Corona race.

Trumbull reads a description of "Speed King" in the papers, likes his chances and wagers a large sum with Short that this unknown will "show in the money."

Short proposes to Margery and is rejected.

Margery's car refuses to start and Ross is phoned for to come and repair it. He meets Margery and while fixing her car they become quite friendly. He tells her of his racing ambition and of his despair because he has not money to complete his wonderful car. His visit makes quite an impression on Margery. She longs for another chat, so she unscrews an important part of her machine and tosses it away. Ross is again called to repair it. Again their conversation is most entertaining, so much so that Trumbull feels it his duty to cut it short, so he calls Margery to the house, where Short, who has been observing, is consumed with jealousy. Ross is loth to leave, but as an excuse to return he "forgets" his tools.

Margery asks her father to lend the young man money to complete his car. Trumbull refuses. Margery tells him that the man has a chance in the race if he can complete his car—that his name is "Speed King." Trumbull is stumped. If he doesn't lend the money he will lose the bet to Short.

Short solves the problem by telling Trumbull to lend the money conditionally and to have Ross sign a paper agreeing that if he cannot repay the amount after the race he will agree never to speak to Margery again.

Trumbull takes the plan, as he has seen Ross return for his tools, and the very evident interest of his daughter for the young man. He broaches the subject to Ross—appeals to his "sporting" side, and Ross agrees. He accepts the loan and signs the paper.

On the day of the race Short bribes the mechanician to cripple Ross' car at about the middle of the race. Margery overhears the plot and informs Ross. The latter changes mechanicians. Ross wins the race and incidentally the love of Margery.

COUDRAY'S LOCKS ATTRACT.

IN the filming of "Maybelle of the Pictures," which is being directed by William V. Mong, and in which he also plays a leading role, Peggy Coudray, also playing a lead, wears her bright red hair down her back in curls.

A few days ago a young German was standing near watching the scenes being made, and even went so far as to follow the company on location.

Finally he mustered up courage enough to get close to the dainty leading lady and succeeded in getting hold of her locks.

Then he stepped back, and, assuming an attitude of ecstacy, exclaimed:

"Vat hair! Ach, Gott im Himmel!"

The actress was thoroughly frightened at first, but the man seemed harmless.

DIRECTOR RICE MAKING MOUNTAIN DRAMAS.

A. W. RICE, Universal director, is at present in the wilds of Bear Valley, where he is producing a number of outdoor one-reel dramas, so much in demand on the Big "U" program just now.

One of these, entitled "The Water Hole," is a mountain timber-claim story by Harry Carr, a newspaper man and war correspondent. The screen version was prepared by Earl R. Hewitt, of the Western scenario staff. The leads will be taken by George C. Pearce and Jane Bernoudy, who emerges from the character of Sally Sloppus to play dramatic roles.

"UNHAND ME, VILLAIN," L-KO Burlesque

UNHAND Me, Villain," a three-reel L-Ko burlesque comedy sublime, introduces Alice Howell in the part of a poor misguided newsgirl. It is one of the best L-Ko comedies which has yet appeared. When an L-Ko is of the Alice Howell brand words are useless to describe the fun. When one almost rolls off the seat it is beyond human power to tell about it. In this picture are all the elements that have made the L-Kos famous the world over for their side-splitting qualities. There is a race, a water jambouree, a burlesque melodrama and Alice Howell. Que voulez vous encore?

The opening night.

Alice, a poor and muchly maltreated little newsgirl, is at her wits' end to know what to do. The big brute on the corner, who is her only competitor, will not let the girl sell any papers, and Alice is almost in tears when Ham Actor, the leading man in the local stock company, comes to her rescue and bravely protects her. What could a young girl do but fall in love with her brave hero? She does.

Some time later Alice is again wronged, so she takes refuge in the dressing room of Ham Actor, her hero. The villain is foiled and all is well when—sh, sh, O'Sullivans are heard approaching. Alice quickly hides herself in a trunk that has been left there for that purpose. Enter Ham and the leading lady, Lena Genstyou, and from their conversation it is not hard to gather that they are in love with each other, as well as as with the manager's bank roll. This really annoys Alice, as she has planned to elope with Ham herself and use the roll as ballast. So she decides to warn Fuller Bull of his danger, but before she can accomplish the deed her right of way behind the footlights is questioned and Alice is royally "bounced" from the theatre.

Alice, however, perseveres and in making Fuller Bull, the manager, "full-er" gratitude as she saves the coin for him. Bull is so happy that he promises to do anything for her that her little heart might desire. So Alice reveals to Mr. Bull that she has always had a suppressed wish to be a leading "loidy" on "de stoige." At this Fuller almost faints, but he agrees to make good and rehearsals are at once begun for the new show.

The night of the opening does not begin very well. The audience is not in a kindly mood and there are one or two hitches in the production. But at that they might have made it a go had it not been for the snow. As the stage was being papered with snowflakes some one lit a match. And then the wonderful sight of burning snow was seen for the first time on the stage. The audience strangely decided to leave, and they did it to a man—the only one who had not paid to get in. He insisted on his money's worth. The police arrive and in the mix-up Alice decides that she wants to "get" Fuller Bull, and the picture ends in chaos.

L-KO Burlesque Comedy Sublime in three reels, featuring Alice Howell and Fatty Voss. Burlesque Beatificque Alice goes on the "stoige" to act the hero-ine and a hot time follows. Firemen called to squelch persistent starring venture started through gratitude of manager and defection of the leading lady.

SON OF DIRECTOR PATON DIES—ENTIRE UNIVERSAL SYMPATHIES.

THE sympathy of all the people employed at Universal City and all those at the Eastern studio and executive offices went out last Sunday to Director and Mrs. Stuart Paton over the death of their youngest son, George, age one year and two weeks, who died at the Clara Barton Hospital in Los Angeles the night before.

The child, who was born just two weeks after Paton began work on the big picture, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," had not been strong for some time and took a sudden change for the worse on Saturday afternoon. A consultation of physicians was called, and it was announced that an operation must be porformed at once. Mrs. Paton sent word to her husband, who was at work at Universal City and he directed that the operation proceed, despite the fact that little hope was held for recovery.

The director had nearly 1,000 people working on the set, and while he was torn with emotion, he found it impossible to leave until the afternoon's work was over.

CAST.

Winner	Eddie Lyons
Loser	Lee Moran
Grace	Priscilla Dean
Helen	Marcia Moore

Eddie and Lee have a bet up over Arizona going prohibition—the winner to demand any duty to be performed by the loser. Lee loses and Eddie is pondering what he shall have him do.

At this moment Grace, Eddie's wife, phones that their maid has left, and that he will have to get another, so he decides that Lee will have to play maid.

Later we see him installed as the new maid, Mary, and poor Lee is almost overwhelmed as he sees the big bunch of dishes and the dirty condition of the kitchen. Eddie is having a lot of fun at his expense. Lee phones his sweetheart, Helen, that he is called to Mexico for a month.

But Grace is very kind to the new maid—too kind, so Eddie soon begins to think and he is willing to call the bet off, but Lee is quite happy and wants to stay, for he knows that he is making Eddie jealous.

Helen comes to call one afternoon and Mary is asked to bring in the tea. Lee did not know that Helen was coming, and so great is his astonishment and embarrassment that he drops the tea things and is soundly berated by Eddie. Lee absolutely refuses to return to the other room. Eddie tries to insist upon his returning, but when Lee tells him that if he does he will tell the whole thing, Eddie is willing to let him go. Later Lee, dressed in Eddie's clothes, rings the doorbell and there is much joy for one little girl—his sweetheart.

CAST.

Tommie	Vola Smith
John Anson, her father	Marc Robbins
"Granny" Anson	Mrs. Emmons
Bub Anson	Chas. Gunn
Bill Murrel	G. Raymond Nye

This story was originally published in the Red Book magazine under the title of "The Weapons of Bill Murrel."

For many years there existed a feud between the Anson and Murrel clans. Bill Murrel who lives alone with his father is deeply religious, and often thinks of some way to end the feud.

When a child Tommie and young Bill Murrel would frequently meet at a secret hiding place and play some childish game, but since they have grown up, it is but a memory. One day while Tommie is playing, she is joined by Bill Murrel, who has been wandering through the woods. Tommie's brother sees the two and tries to kill Bill, but his shot is wild, and Tommie quickly shoves Bill back into the woods, and tells him to return across the line. "Bub," angry with his sister, starts handling her roughly, and Bill returns to her assistance. The two engage in a fist fight as Tommie has broken "Bub's" gun, and Bill is noted for not going armed. Her father comes on the scene, and the old feud is revived. Anson warns Bill that he will gather his clan, and that Bill had better prepare.

Tommie becomes stricken with the dread mountain fever and is very ill. Bill learns of this, and one day while out with his followers, enters an open place, and falling on his knees, prays for the recovery of the girl. While he is unarmed and praying, "Bub" comes on with his party and tries to shoot Bill. The sight of his enemy praying for the life of his own child comes home to Anson, and he angrily knocks the gun from his son's hand. The clans are reconciled and Bill and Tommie are brought together, soon to be married.

"All Bets Off"

"Ashamed of the Old Folks"

As he is and she isn't. As they really are. As she is and he isn't.

"ASHAMED OF THE OLD FOLKS," a Victor comedy-drama in two reels, is one of the cleverest little pictures that Matt Moore has turned out. And to Matt belongs nearly all the credit, because he wrote as well as produced the piece. Jane Gail, however, who ably helps to make it a success, deserves great credit. The merit of the play can't really be appreciated without knowing what it is all about, so here goes.

Matt Morton is an ambitious young country lad who is dissatisfied with his lot. The only remedy for such a condition is the city, so Matt bids his mother a fond farewell and starts out to make his fortune. At the same time Jane Russell is not content with her present outlook in a country town and she also decides to try her luck in the big city.

When next we see our two young people they seem to have prospered. Matt is a prominent young lawyer and Jane has made a big success as a musician. They meet at a musicale at which Jane is the performer and a lively interest in each other is awakened. In a moving picture there can be but one end to such a romance, and when next the two are seen they are happily joined in the bonds of matrimony and are living in elegant style.

And the two are really happy until one fatal day when their pasts threaten them. The very same morning's mail brings each a letter from the mother and father in the country, saying that they are coming to visit in the city that very day. Both are nonplussed, as neither has told the other of the old folks in the country.

Matt meets his mother at the station and decides not to take her home, so he puts her up at a hotel. Meanwhile Jane has met her father and also decides not to take him home. She also puts him up, as fate would have it, at the same hotel. The two meet as they are coming out and get angry at each other because neither will say why they are in that particular hotel and not at home.

At the hotel things begin to happen. The two old folks meet and take a liking to each other. When the bellboy objects to their visiting in their rooms they decide to leave the hotel. After wandering about the city they get better acquainted and decide to get married. And not caring a fig for the conventions of the city they immediately go to the parson and get the knot tied. After the ceremony they leave for Mr. Russell's home in the country.

When Matt and Jane go to look for their parents at the hotel they are calmly informed that they have left. Meeting again they are frightened into telling each other the true purpose of their visits and then they start out on a hunt for the lost father and mother. Imagine their surprise when they reach the home of Jane's father and see the two living there in conjugal bliss.

AND THEN comes the big surprise of the evening, for instead of the audience laughing at the play the players begin to laugh at the audience. The two old people remove their make-up and prove to be none other than Matt and Jane themselves.

All of which goes to prove that there is no such phrase as "it can't be done" in the moving picture game.

VICTOR Comedy in two reels. Written and produced by Matt Moore. Young married couple, each of whom is ashamed of the old folks, take every precaution to hide lowly parentage. And then—the end is surprising.

Little Joe	Gordon Griffith	Her Mother	Betty Schade

Old Rufe	Harry Griffith

A SON of Neptune," a three-reel Gold Seal drama of the sea, written and produced by William V. Mong, contains real pathos that will make even the most calloused of moving picture fans take out his handkerchief and remark that the picture plays make his eyes water. One of the saddest things in the world is to see a child separated from its parents by death or any other cause, but when a helpless waif is maltreated by strangers there is something in human nature that yearns to right the wrong. "A Son of Neptune" is an actual portrayal of real misfortune, and for that reason as well as for the careful direction, sterling acting and interesting story will have a universal appeal.

This is the story:

Little Joe and his only companion, his old fisherman father, live alone in their little cabin on the sea coast. The old man has given Joe a tin flagelot and has taught him to play. Every night when he returns in his little fishing boat Joe, with his flageolet, meets him at the little wharf. There is a storm at sea, we see the old man in his little boat tossed by the angry waves. Evening comes, Joe goes to the wharf to welcome his father with the music from the flageolet. He holds his vigil, thinking his father may be near shore and needs a beacon to guide him home, unmindful of the storm and the waves as they break around him, he holds the vigil till well into the night. Nature asserts itself and Joe falls asleep on the rocks. The next morning Old Rufe and his wife, who are combing the beach for wreckage, see the fisherman's battered boat, and upon searching further, find Joe still asleep on the rocks. They take him home and adopt him. He is compelled to do the work of a man. One day, tired of his labors, he rests a moment to play his flagoelet. Old Rufe returns home with his empty nets, and, becoming angry at the boy indulging in his innocent amusement, tears the flagoelet from Joe's hands. It is Joe's dearest treasure; he measures the man with his eyes and, jerking the instrument from Rufe's hand, bounds away over the rocks to the cliffs at the sea. Rufe gives chase, but is no match for the agile boy, who escapes to one of his old haunts in the rocks.

On the opposite side of the bay little Polly and her mother are visiting little Jack Lewis and his parents. Polly and Jack are playing in the boat which is tied up to their private wharf. They think it good fun to push the boat to the end of its line. At last the boat is loose. With Polly in it, it drifts out with the tide. Jack cannot understand why Polly does not come back, and after awhile he summons their parents, but Polly and the boat have drifted out to sea. An alarm is sent out

POOR little Billie Ritchie! In every picture they abuse and maltreat him so that at last he rebels and runs wild. With the aid of a big black brute of an engine he literally breaks up his happy home to be revenged on mother. He was revenged, BUT—. It all happened this way:

Billie's life certainly was not a happy one for the simple reason his mother-in-law interfered with the general run of his well-ordered day. This particular morning Billie desired to sleep a little longer than usual, but try as he might his slumber was constantly being disturbed by his lovely wife's parent calling him continually. Billie's mother-in-law tried to get Lucille to leave him, but she had hopes of reforming her dear Billie, who she knew cared for her, and thinking perhaps some day he would get a job and work, she suffered in silence. Ma lacked this patience, and after giving Billie a good deal of punishment, such a lathering of soap, a talcum bath, a bouncing up and down in the bathtub and a lot of other things equally as pleasant, she threw him out of the house.

Billie, being quite a bright fellow, knew it was impossible for him to get the best of ma, but thought if he got somebody else for her to abuse she would probably allow him to live his life as he chose to live it. After considerable trouble he succeeded in baiting a man and finally got her married to him, but still all was not well. In addition to ma to pick on him she had an ally who could help her. When she absolutely refused him admittance to the house this was the last straw for Billie. Life meant nothing to him without Lucille by his side. He would die, thought Billie, but not without satisfaction first. He hired a gang of thugs to do their worst with ma and pa, but little do we suspect the diabolical way they planned to do this. Gaining entrance to the house through the window, they tied the happy bride and groom to their beds and then pulled the house down the road to the railroad tracks. There was a method in their pulling the house to the tracks. Billie in the meantime had succeeded in overcoming an engineer on an engine and, running the thing at the rate of ninety miles an hour, proceeded on his way. On came the police, but dauntless Billie could not allow this to interfere with his well thought out plans, and in order to save themselves they had to make a wild jump from the top of the house where they had climbed, thinking this would be the best place for a rescue. Down the track came the engine, increasing in speed every foot it went, and Billie, so full of happiness, could hardly believe things were running so smoothly. When the crash came, happiness is an inadequate word to explain Billie's feeling as he looked back and saw the cause of all his troubles underneath a pile of wreckage. Billie in his glee started to climb to the top of the engine, and not thinking sat on the steam pipe, which blew him sky-high. An eagle seeking prey picked him up and flew, we know not where, with him.

Pat and Grouch arrive on the stage at Medicine Sap, a frontier town. He unfolds an invalid chair to the astonishment of the natives. When the Indian princess passes with her father, Pat asks the clerk who she is. The clerk tells him it is Chief "Rain-in-the-Face" and his daughter. Pat is lost in admiration, but has to wheel Grouch to the hotel barroom. In the room Pat thinks of the princess. In the camp the princess thinks of Pat. In the meantime the Grouch is going crazy. Pat comes in and gives him some medicine, but it only gets Grouch on edge. He is sure he is going to die and sends Pat out to get a doctor. The clerk tells Pat that the only doctor in the country is "Heap Much Dope," the Indian medicine man. Pat beats it to the Indian camp, gets the medicine man, sends him to the hotel and remains to flirt with the princess.

In the meantime the medicine man calls on the Grouch, and the latter promptly kicks him out of the room. So the medicine man declares war.

The town people learn that the Indians are coming and wonder what to do. Princess promises to save them and she and Pat set out. Pat gets frightened when he sees the Indians and climbs a telegraph pole. The Indians try to smoke him off, but Pat throws down a high tension wire and puts the Indians out of commission.

Hamanda	Gale Henry
Lillie	Lillian Peacock
Frank	Milburn Morante
Capt. Salt	Wm. Franey
Heine	Chas. Conklin

Lillie, the daughter of Hamanda, is beloved by Frank but Hamanda strongly discourages this attachment. Capt. Salt loves Hamanda and is coming to call upon her when Frank, endeavoring to escape the wrath of Hamanda bumps into him. Capt. Salt suggests that Hamanda and Lillie take a trip upon his ship and so avoid the nuisance—and, likewise, give him an opportunity of pressing his own suit. Hamanda agrees and the sulky Lillie is dragged away.

But their departure is seen by Frank, who hides on the back of the machine until they arrive at the wharf and, having no money, uses a boat which he finds to take him out to the ship. As he attempts climbing up on the deck, he sees Heine, the mate, and falls into the water in trying to escape him. He finally hides in a boat covered with sail.

The crew headed by Heine, plot against Captain Salt; and just as that worthy is assisting the idol of his heart at the rail, they tie the two; Lillie sees this and with the aid of Frank rescues the pair—thus winning the good will of the discomforted couple and also Hamanda's consent to their marriage—and poor Heine and the crew are made to walk the gangplank, which in "land" language means a dip in the ocean.

COWBOYS ELECT GRASSBY MEMBER

When the company arrived at the location in San Fernando Valley, the cowboys discovered Grassby's lack of education along this line and picked out a "bad horse" for him to ride. Grassby decided that while in Rome he would be a Roman and rode the horse down a steep embankment, where the animal had to slide down the entire distance on its haunches. Grassby stuck. This delighted the cowboys of the company beyond measure and Grassby was voted a regular at once.

"The Highway of Fate" Laemmle Drama

"THE HIGHWAY OF FATE," a two-reel society drama written by Harry Ditmar and produced by Robert F. Hill, is all that its name suggests. About fate there has been from the earliest records the greatest speculation, as it is the one element in life that has never been controlled or even influenced by human action. Since the beginning of time people have noticed that things do not happen as they are planned. There is a factor over which man can impose no rule. Some call it luck; others call it chance; others call it fate and some call it Providence. But under whatever name it is always the same, the unknown factor. And on this mystery of the unknowable every religion is built. There is no such thing as order in nature. All nature is strange, weird, yes, and sometimes unnatural.

Roxanne sees the reconciliation over the doctor's body.

Director Bob Hill has succeeded in giving the whole play a mysterious atmosphere. Gypsies, for instance, have a certain mystery about them anyway, but Bob has increased this mystery and produced from it an excellent drama, though it may not conform to the usual rules.

The cast includes Sydney Bracy, Sydell Dowling and Paul Panzer, all of whom have striven hard to add characterization and atmosphere to the production.

The plot in brief follows:

Roxanne is a Gypsy girl who has been wronged by a man of ruthless character. When he tired of her he cast his plaything aside and forgot. The girl did not forget. She cared for her child and brooded over her grievance.

Jack Underwood is in the last stages of consumption and the doctor tells him that he has two months to live. His wife, he sees, is hampered by his presence, so he decides to clear out. He meets Roxanne and they tell each other their stories. The Gypsy girl induces Jack to join the band, telling him that the open air will cure his heartache.

A couple of years later the band of wanderers comes again to the same region. Jack and Roxanne have come to care for each other. But one day Jack reads that his wife has married the doctor. At first he is angry, but finally he realizes that it is the best way out.

In the meanwhile Roxanne's rancor is reawakened by being in the vicinity where she met with her misfortune. At last she can stand it no longer and decides to have vengeance. The man who had deserted her was none other than the doctor. She seeks him out and plunges a dagger in his back.

Jack has decided that he wants to see his wife once more. He finds her and they are reconciled as the picture fades out.

Bill Bones, the village undertaker, sheriff, judge and a holder of a few minor offices, is the sworn, avowed lover of Exeter, who has the writing fever. His suit has met with little success, owing to her interest in her new profession and Bill is stumpped.

Romeo Ham, from the legit' stage—and a long ways from it at that—has had a streak of hard luck and arrives in the village. His capital amounts to the sum of one "jitney" and he calls on the village merchant to buy some refreshment.

Romeo learns that Exeter is writing a play and at once his professional instincts are aroused. He introduces himself and he and Exeter at once find a common interest. Romeo suggests that she produce the play and act the leading part in it. He agrees to look after the production. This just suits Exeter and plans are put under way for the effort. Ham has learned that Exeter has a large bank account and his zeal is influenced mostly by the sight of her ample bank book.

The rehearsal proves quite a task and time after time Romeo is on the verge of quitting, but each time the vision of the bank roll comes to bolster up his courage. At last the play is produced and proves a "frost." The audience start out in disgust and then Exeter discovers that her manager has eloped with the cash, so she marries Bill and leaves the stage.

"THE HENANPUP."

Powers Juvenile Comedy

It was a strange coincidence that Frank's dog and Mabel's rooster should have died at the same time. But it happened that way, and so the two were given a common funeral and buried in the same coffin.

A few months later Prof. I. M. Wise notices in the paper that there was a new bone exposition at the museum, and, being much in love with the widow, the mother of the two children, he decided to take her to the exhibit. Seeing the bones at the exhibit, suggests to the children that their pets must be bones by that time, so they tell the professor that they know where some old bones are. The professor is delighted with the bones, as he thinks that he has discovered the remains of an animal that was the cross between a hen and a dog. From the bones he draws a picture of the way the creature must have looked and calls it the "Henanpup." He publishes his discovery in the paper and thinks that he will be famous. At last he finds that the bones are nothing more than the remains of an ordinary dog and chicken and is, to say the least, chagrined.

The children sell the bones for two cents and with the proceeds invest in a stock of candy. And so ended the famous "Henanpup."

George Maitland, a widower,	Harry Benham
Delta Maitland, his daughter,	Edith Roberts

Delta, the only daughter of George Maitland, a widower, goes off to a boarding school. Her father bids her good-bye at the railroad station, and, chancing to meet a widow at the station, he takes her home in his automobile. In the course of time they become very much attracted to each other, and after a brief wooing decide to get married.

At the end of the session Delta returns from the boarding school, and considers her stepmother in the light of an intruder, stubbornly resisting all attempts on the part of her stepmother to win her affection.

Shortly afterwards Maitland is called to town to attend a board meeting. After his departure, Delta sees her stepmother kissing a photograph, and draws the conclusion that she has a secret lover. Thereupon, she goes to her bedroom and writes a letter to her father, in which she asserts that he

Jim Corey	Hobart Henley
Dr. Randall	Sydney Bracey
Myra, his wife	Sydell Dowling
Norton Craig	Anthony Merlo

Dr. Randall and his wife, Myra, leave for a reception with Norton Craig, a friend. At the party the doctor is called away on an important case to the hospital. But before he goes he asks Norton to take Myra home.

In the meanwhile Jim Corey, who has been a failure in life, is desperate that night. He decides to steal to keep alive and happens to select the Randall home for the job. He enters the house and makes his way about the upper stories looking for valuables. By accident he gets into the nursery and seeing the Randalls' little child sleeping, says to himself that he would be a dog to take the child's trinkets.

As Jim is about to leave Myra and Norton come home. The thief hastily hides and the sight he sees makes his blood boil within him. Norton tries to force his attentions upon Myra and at last Jim can restrain himself no longer. Just as he is downing Norton the doctor comes in. When Myra tells him how she has been saved by Jim the doctor offers to reward him, but Jim says that he is more than paid by the incentive he received to go straight.

The picture ends as Jim Corey is striding out into the night.

"BEN, THE SAILOR."

Powers Manikin Comedy.

Story by Olga Printzlau.
Produced by R. F. Taylor and W. W. Wheatley.

Old Captain Jonah's stories of the sea make such an impression on Little Ben that he wants to be a sailor. He dreams that Captain Jonah is in command of a battleship, and that the captain accepts him as one of the crew. Ben is taken aboard and fitted out with a uniform. The ship puts out to sea and—things commence to happen to Ben.

The rocking motion of the ship makes it hard for Ben to walk on the deck and he even becomes sea sick, but he is compelled to scrub the deck with the other sailors. He falls over with his bucket of water. The water runs down through an open skylight on the deck and falls on the captain, who is reading in his cabin below. The captain rushes up on deck to find the careless sailor who has splashed him and slips on the wet deck, falling at Ben's feet. Ben apologizes and is excused.

The captain shows him an "enemy" ship through his telescope about to launch a "bomb" at their vessel. Ben climbs down over the side of the ship and, hanging by a rope, awaits the approach of the missile. And when the bomb is about to blow up Ben's ship he hits it with a capstan bar used as a billiard cue and it returns to the "enemy" ship, which is destroyed by its own explosive.

He goes to bed, but again falls out of his hammock and finds himself—on the floor of his own room, having tumbled out of bed in his troubled dream.

Prof. Alonzo Bozzle	Victor Potel
This Missing Link, A Wise Oran-Outang	Joe Martin

Prof. Alonzo Bozzle, an eccentric zoologist, has taken up the study of evolution as promulgated by Darwin and is pondering especially on the idea that there is a "missing link." One night he dreams that he is an explorer, and that he has just landed upon a foreign shore; he secures the aid of a mahout and an elephant to move his tent and belongings to the jungle, where he will take up the study of trying to find the "missing link." He builds his tent and establishes himself as comfortably as may be, and then with his trusty rifle starts out to explore the jungle.

Then it is that he encounters the wise orang-outang, Joe Martin; the two are attracted mutually and the professor takes Joe to his tent and there commences his education along the lines of table etiquette.

That night while the two are in bed a couple of lions come prowling about the tent. This startles the two and Bozzle takes his gun and with the help of Joe fires upon the lions.

At this juncture Bozzle awakens to find the papers on his desk burning and in extinguishing the flames his own clothing starts burning, so that he is compelled to rush from the house and immerse his bady in a barrel of water and ruefully he gazes upon his uncomfortable self.

Homer Wormwood	Billy Garwood
Bully	Ed. Bradey
Jennie	Lois Wilson
Yet Wong	Frank Tokunaga

Homer Wormwood--dubbed "Worm" from his studious propensities, is the butt of all the jokes. At the boarding house, he is always studying, and he leads a sorry life of it, especially after the boys discover that he has written a book about the new Chinese Republic.

They hire a Chinese laundryman to dress up in swell Chinese robes and present Homer with a scroll setting forth the appreciation of the Chinese people for the new book. Jennie, who secretly is very fond of Homer, suspects the boys are playing a joke on him but fails to convince Homer to this effect.

She, however, follows the Chinaman home and discovers that he works in the laundry and so on the pretense of an errand, takes Homer and shows him the Chinaman. Homer vows revenge and decides to take up physical culture.

At last the professor at the class tells Homer that he has completed his course. Accordingly, Homer visits the Chinaman and prevails upon him to accompany him. He locks all the students into a room and commences to use some of his acquired muscle, specially upon the bully who was the instigator of the plotting against him. The boys are astounded. Then he brings forth the Chinaman and has him present a scroll to the bully. Jennie is overjoyed at the turn events have taken and is quite proud of Homer, who shows that he likes her.

Doctor	Wilfred Rogers
Husband	Gilmore Hammond
Wife	Kathleen Aamold

A blind girl is playing on the organ and waiting for a doctor, who is treating her eyes. The doctor, a semi-religious character, on his way to visit the blind girl, passes an art dealer's window, where hangs a suggestive picture. He sorrowfully notes the evil impression the picture creates upon the passersby. Arriving at the home of the blind girl, he meets her mother, the scrub-woman, who, observing the doctor looking at the Madonna, imagines that he desires it, and out of gratitude gives him the picture. He, returning to his office with the picture, stops at the art dealer's store and persuades the dealer to replace the salacious picture with the Madonna. This is done, just as a tough youth enters to buy the nude picture. The dealer sells the Madonna to the youth, and he then hurries off to a slum saloon and dance hall, where he calls all the inmates to see his naughty picture. When he opens the package the Madona is disclosed.

It has a sobering effect upon the tough crowd of men and women. A fight starts; police enter and all leave. But the Madonna lying on a table, under an electric shade, remains uninjured.

The barkeeper brings the scrub-woman into the dance hall to clean it up. She sees the Madonna, and when her work is done takes it away with her to her home and replaces it over the organ.

The mother grows happy over the improved condition of her child; the blind girl returning to the organ, looks at the Madonna and gives indication that her sight is restored. The scrub-woman hurries to her, thankful for the power of beautiful pictures.

Senorita Tamale	Priscilla Dean
General Siesta	Lee Moran

Lem Forby, reporter on the "Bugle," is a correspondence school pupil in reporting. One day the editor gives him an assignment to cover the Mexican war and Lem leaves for the border.

Arrived at the border, Lem bravely crosses the line and proceeds to take pictures. General Siesta is much enamored of the pretty Senorita Tamale and she returns his love. Lem gets a picture of her—and immediately she loses her heart to the "Bugle" reporter.

Lem notices that a messenger arrives with a letter for the General and, according to his correspondence lessons, that is one important thing—to obtain all important documents. With the Senorita he plans to get them.

The General with his guitar starts out to call upon the Senorita; she tries to obtain the papers and gets the General to show them to her; then Lem, who has hidden in the room, takes the papers and runs, closely pursued by the General and his army.

Lem and the Senorita are nearly captured, when the Senorita offers to change clothes with Lem; this is done and the General with his army, catching a glimpse of them, decides that he will follow the girl and leave the army to capture Lem. He nearly captures what he supposes is the girl, but Lem manages to elude him and escapes across the border where the guards will not allow the General to come. The army appear with the girl and her identity is learned. Lem grows jealous but is not allowed to cross the border. Lem recalls the document and shows it to the guard, who disgustedly translates the message which Lem had thought so important as a message stating that they had found a new recipe for chile con carne.

Tom Horn	Harry Carey
Sunny Baker	Olive Fuller Golden
Her Father	Doc Crane
Buzzard	Joe Rickson

Tom Horn is known throughout the cow country as a hard worker and a hard player, who demands respect by the notches in his gun, but believes in giving the ladies their due. Tom is the leader of a gang who profit by the misfortunes of others. The Buzzard, so called from his practice of snooping about and finding things that will interest the gang, stumbles across oil indications on a homestead occupied by an old man and his daughter. He hurries to the town and tells the crowd the good news. Tom agrees that it will be a good scheme to jump the claim, and the party sets out with all haste for the location.

Upon arrival, Tom sends Buzzard to the nearest town to file their location, while he and the party go to the homestead to eject the old man from his land.

Sunny is away from the house when they arrive. Tom tells the old man that the claim is theirs and orders him off. An argument ensues, in which the gang starts to clean up the house. Sunny arrives in the midst of the excitement. As soon as Tom sees her he regrets trying to cheat the old man out of his claim, and orders his boys to hustle away. He mounts a fresh horse and endeavors to catch Buzzard and prevent him from filing on the claim. By taking a short cut and riding hard, the Buzzard is overtaken. Tom orders him to return, but the latter objects, and in the argument the Buzzard is shot.

Cannibal Queen	Dorothy Clark

Because he is bad, little Billy is sent to his room without supper. Billy decides this is too much for a hungry youngster, and, slipping into the pantry, fills his pockets with all kinds of eatables, and slipping out into the yard, starts to gorge himself. It is soon evident that his ample meal makes him drowsy and he dozes off. The mother and father miss him and begin searching for him.

The heavy food Billy has eaten causes him to have an awful dream. He is surrounded by cannibals, who take him to their chief. Billy admires the beautiful queen, but the guards roughly throw him into the pot and the chief orders him to be cooked brown. While the cannibals are dancing around, Billy jumps out and escapes. There is a wild chase, Billy runs from cannibals to wild animals, falls into the river and at last arrives at the swimming hole. The cannibals have blackened him, and the other boys flee in terror. He enters the water to wash off the black, but seeing his pursuers, Billy flees, dressed only in a barrel. He runs into the living room at home, and finds all the girls of his acquaintance dressed as old maids, and with scared faces they drive him out of the house. Here the cannibals catch him, and while they are pricking him with their spears, Billy awakens to find himself fighting the imaginary cannibals, and his father and mother standing nearby, laughing at him.

"Ben Wilson in "Beyond the Trail"

Wonderful "snow stuff" for the edification of hot August audiences.

BEYOND THE TRAIL," a Bison two-reel drama, written by Catherine Carr, is the latest production of Ben Wilson. Wilson is one of the many actors who deserted the legitimate stage to go into the motion picture field a few years ago. Born in Corning, Iowa, he left home when hardly more than a lad to join a cheap road company and has been ornamenting the stage for fourteen years. He had one of the leading roles in "Seven Days" and was leading man in the New York Fifth Avenue Stock Company.

The plot of "Beyond the Trail" leaves nothing to be desired in the way of heart interest or action. From start to finish it is gripping.

John Blakely is a handsome young widower, father of a little girl of five, and working in Morgan's office. Mrs. Morgan falls in love with him, and when he refuses to call she vows vengeance.

BISON Drama in two reels, written by Catherine Carr and produced by Ben Wilson. Tense drama of the Canadian wilds — tale of innocent man, punished by long exile, vindicated at last. Strong love interest.

CAST.

John Blakely	Ben Wilson
Little Dorothy	Lois Alexander
Dorothy Blakely, grown up,	Dorothy Phillips
Richard Thornton	Chas. Ogle
Franklyn Morgan	Wm. Welsh
Paul Morgan, his son	Hal August

Mrs. Morgan manages to have John appear guilty of theft, and Morgan, because of John's child, tells him to clear out. Shortly after Mrs. Morgan dies and confesses what she has done. But Morgan can then find no trace of John.

John has gone to live in the Canadian wilds with his daughter, Dorothy. Years later Morgan's son, Paul, goes out there with a prospecting party. The two young people of course fall in love, and all would have been plain sailing if John had not found out Paul's identity from a letter he receives. He then overhears the two lovers arranging a meeting for that night, and so decides to go and kill Paul.

When he arrives he finds Dorothy in the arms of a man and so shoots him. The man is Dick Thornton, John's best friend, to whom Dorothy has come for advice.

Then Paul and his father arrive. The mistake is all explained away so that Paul and Dorothy marry.

As the picture fades out Dick and John are shown sitting alone in their little cabin, as John has refused to leave God's country for the sake of a life of ease in the city.

"THE L-KO"—A SONG.

(Tune of Tipperary.)

As up the street I went one day to a picture show,
On the sign there was written, "This is the L-KO;"
As all the people crowded there to see that picture show,
And as I started walking by, some one said, "Stop in here."

CHORUS.

There's a pretty place they call the
L-KO,
It's a pretty place to go;
There's a pretty place they call the
L-KO,
Where the prettiest pictures show,
So good-bye to my studios,
For I'm going there.
For there's a pretty, pretty place they call the L-KO,
And you'll find me there.

SECOND VERSE.

As to that picture show I went to see
"The Broken Coin"
Which featured Francis Ford, and Grace Cunard.
And all the people crowded there to see that picture, too,
And also King Mitchel and Mr.
Rouleaux.

CHORUS.

There's a pretty place they call the
L-KO,
It's a pretty place to go,
There's a pretty place they call the
L-KO,
Where "The Broken Coin" was on the go.
So good-bye to my studios,
For I'm going there.
For there's a pretty, pretty place they
call the L-KO,
And you'll find me there.

Alice Howell of L-Ko Makes a Tackle

Alice Howell makes a tackle which breaks up the game. And don't overlook the fact that this is some photograph.

WHAT IS IT? Ty Cobb sliding to base by his famous hook slide; or is it Tom Shevlin making a tackle behind the line? No, neither. You're all wrong. It's a woman, and such a woman! The vision sailing through the air is none other than the one and only, original and incomparable Alice Howell. Alice of the L-Ko.

This snap was not taken for a moving picture. It is printed only to show the admiring public that Miss Howell's art is not of the make-believe kind. It is genuine, every bit of it, as one can plainly see by looking at the accompanying picture. This shows Miss Howell in a game of baseball in which she recently engaged at Los Angeles. And it was baseball until Alice's instinct for comedy overcome her better self and then the game degenerated into something quite new and original. It can't be called football, because in football one at least has the common decency (often enforced by the referee) to wait until one's opponent has time to arise and brace himself for the attack from his foe.

But whatever it was, the whole affair had dire consequences. The game was being watched by many Universalites out at Universal City and the tackle broke up the whole game. The innocent victim of Miss Howell's ferocity said that he refused to continue the game, as his nerves were badly shaken, and besides he wasn't used to such rough treatment.

Moral: Don't try to L-Ko outside of the picture or people will think you are rough.

storm of shot and shell and the fire which followed and released more of the deadly merchandise intended for the use of the Allies in Europe. Lower New York, the islands in the bay, including Liberty Island, the shores of New Jersey adjacent, and the towns further back from the Harbor, all got a taste of what war would be like. The sky rained deadly projectiles for three hours driven upward by tons on tons of lyddite, dynamite and Dunnite, the most powerful explosive known to military science. The escapes of individuals from this aimless bombardment read like the least tamed of the older variety of moving picture dramas, and have Old Man Coincidence and Mrs. Improbability on the bottom rope gasping for breath. A loss of thousands of lives under the circumstance would not have been surprising. The latest news confines the death loss within a hundred. Property damage is estimated anywhere from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000. The loss in plate glass windows in Jersey City and lower Manhattan is estimated at a million alone—so colossal was the concussion from the two principal explosions.

None of the authorities seem to think there is any tincture of blame to be placed at the door of bomb experts or enemies of the allies. The explosion was caused by a fire which started on a barge loaded with explosives which was tied up along the National Storage Co.'s Pier. The catastrophe was a pure accident. The barge should not have been where it was, and some one will have to answer for its presence.

SWORD FISH NEWEST TERROR.

THE bathers on the New Jersey coast have a new danger to look out for. It is on this coast that recently five bathers were killed by a school of sharks that has infested the waters about New York. But now there is an added danger because a four hundred pound sword fish was caught. Up to now the bathers have felt safe until the dorsal fin of a shark hove in sight, but now this guarantee no longer holds good. This new monster is even more dangerous than the shark, as there is no avenue of escape open once it attacks.

A Little More About The Exchanges --

THE last of the Chicago Convention delegates has returned to New York City, with a gold watch presented to him by two bodies of men, over whom he exercises general managership. The last delegate is M. H. Hoffman, and the reason for his late appearance is the fact that he has been engaged in taking over the Laemmle and Powers exchanges for the Universal. The beautiful watch which was presented to him is a combination of Universal and Bluebird appreciation, inasmuch as it was presented jointly by the exchange managers of the Universal who met in Chicago, and the Bluebird exchanges represented there. On the back is a combination of the two emblems, an orange enamel U, and a blue enamel Bluebird flying through it. On the inside is this inscription:

> "Presented to our general manager, M. H. Hoffman, by the Universal and Bluebird exchanges, Chicago, July 14th."

The watch itself is one especially made, called by the Waltham people the Premier Maximus. It has twenty-three jewels, and is the finest watch which they have ever turned out in their factory.

Mr. Hoffman had a few corrections of the story which was carried in the Weekly about the purchase of the exchanges. Mr. E. H. Goldstein, who was announced as the manager of the Eastern division, will retain his office as assistant general manager of the Universal exchanges as heretofore. Art Schmidt, of the Victor Film Service of Buffalo, will be district manager of the Eastern division, with principal offices at Buffalo, Albany, Syracuse, Rochester, Pittsburg, Cleveland and Wheeling, W. Va. His headquarters will be at Buffalo. Mr. M. L. Markowitz has charge of all the exchanges west of Denver. Mr. R. C. Cropper, district manager of the Intermountain Division, has his principal offices at Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Fort Smith, Omaha, St. Louis and Cairo, while George W. Weeks, district manager of the Central Division, has his chain of offices at Detroit, Grand Rapids, Toledo, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Cleveland and Louisville. The South will be under the management of William Oldknow, whose principal offices are located at Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Memphis, Jacksonville, San Antonio and El Paso. Maurice Fleckles has the important territory lying directly about Chicago, with his principal distributing centres located in Chicago, Minneapolis, Des Moines, and their several branch offices. Several exchanges which were not included in the previous announcement are the Laemmle office in Chicago; the Rex Exchange of Albany; Central Film Service, Louisville, Ky.; Victor Film Service, Rochester, N. Y.; Victor Film Service, Syracuse, N. Y.; Colonial Film Exchange, Sioux City, Ia.; Laemmle Film Service, Davenport, Ia.; Cincinnati Buckey Film Co., Charleston, W. A SMALL ONE

O. K. MASON, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company of Wichita, Kansas, sends word of the smallest theatre he has on his books, and in our opinion is entitled to a record on this one performance:

MR. M. H. HOFFMAN:

Dear Sir.—In the past few years a great many small theatres have been opened in the State of Kansas; in fact, it has come to a point where practically every town of from 400 to 500 people operates a moving picture theatre at least once a week. Until this week the writer was of the opinion that they would at least have to have a population of from 200 to 300 to a theatre, but we have just taken on an account which proves that our opinion was far from correct.

Beginning with this week, we have arranged to ship three reels of film to Messrs. Button & Howard, who are operating a one-night stand sixteen miles in the country. They state that this is in no way an inland town, but has simply a small grocery store, with a church and school room on the second floor of the building. They have gone to the expense of installing an electric generator and moving picture machine; in fact, a very serviceable equipment for moving picture projection.

Mr. Button drives 16 miles across country to get the film, and then is compelled to drive back to deliver each shipment to the express company. Mr. Button has now been operating this proposition some three or four weeks, and states that so far he has been fairly well repaid for his time and trouble.

There no doubt are theatres operating in very secluded locations, but this is surely the smallest one that has been called to the attention of

Yours very truly,

H. J. BREILEIN, manager and proprietor of the Faust, Verdi and Victoria theatres, St. Paul, is lined up for Universal service in all of his three houses. This proves conclusively the superiority of Universal above all other programs, insomuch as Mr. Breilein heretofore tried out a great many other services and found them entirely unsatisfactory.

In connection with the taking over of the Laemmle Film Service in Minneapolis and Fargo by the Universal, M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges; E. H. Goldstein, his assistant; Mr. MacGowan, general auditor and E. O. Gurney, traveling auditor, visited Minneapolis to get things in shape.

The Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, and Starland Theatre, St. Paul, the Twin Cities' foremost picture theatres, signed contracts for the exclusive showing of the Dorsey Expedition Pictures.

The Aster Theatre, Minneapolis' newest and most elaborate down-town theatre, has arranged for the exclusive showing of the Animated Weekly each and every week. Another Universal scoop.

The hot weather has greatly affected Northwest business in general. A great many of the theatres have closed up entirely, others cut down to one and two days a week. The Universal exchange here has done everything in its power to furnish the best possible service at special summer rates and exhibitors are taking advantage of this by the score.

Newton Davis has been appointed assistant manager of the Universal office of Minneapolis, succeeding H. L. Muir, who has been promoted to the management of the Bluebird office. J. H. Margoles, former Bluebird manager, has taken charge of the Sales Department of the Universal office.

Despite the hot weather a total canvas proved that over 58 per cent. of all Twin City theatres are using Universal service. "Peg o' the Ring" continues to draw them everywhere.

E. O. Gurney, traveling auditor of the Universal, went on record in claiming that Minneapolis is one of the most wonderful cities he has ever visited. Having covered considerable territory, Mr. Gurney ought to know.

UNIQUE BALLOT RESULT IN CALIFORNIA

M. L. MARKOWITZ, manager of the California Film Exchange, has been testing the sentiment in California for the mixed program. He gave out a ballot in the Garrett Theatre of San Francisco, one of the smaller theatres, and out of the 132 who answered them, 70 prefer the short subject, as against 62 for the long subject.

late husband's fortune," she says triumphantly.

"I had that letter made to mislead you," says Flip. "This is the real letter and it proves that Peg is the first and only child of your late husband and rightful heir to his entire fortune."

Mrs. Lund is crushed and retires to the garden. Then Dr. Lund asks Peg to forgive his mother for all the wrong she has done her, and Peg willingly agrees to do this. She goes to Mrs. Lund and, kissing her, says that she bears her no grudge. Then she returns and accepts the doctor's proposal of marriage.

Soon after all the circus people arrive to congratulate the couple on their new-found happiness. The picture fades out as the two lovers embrace fondly. And as the story books say, they lived happily ever afterward. Thus ends "Peg o' the Ring."

DOROTHY DAVENPORT IS A UNIVERSAL CITY FAVORITE

But if Dorothy Davenport were to threaten to leave Universal City, it is a certainty a large majority of her fellow players would go in a body to petition her to remain. She is a favorite—a Universal favorite—a clever actress, a good friend, and always on the lookout to see where a kind word will do some good.

This charming little titian-haired actress is a daughter of Harry Davenport, a well-known player, and her mother on the stage was known first as Alice Shepard, and later as Alice Davenport. Her father's two sisters were Fanny, famous in Sardou plays, and Blanche, an operatic singer, while her grandfather, E. L. Davenport, was a well-known actor in his day, and her grandmother a danseuse. So it is no wonder that "Dot" takes naturally to acting, for she has seen it or been a part of it nearly all of her young life.

"I believe I prefer the picture to the stage," said Miss Davenport, "for many reasons, one of which, and the principal one I think is, that I can have a home. My home to me is everything, and my husband takes just as much interest in my pedigree dogs and cats as I do, and I know he enjoys it whenever I prepare a meal for him.

"And then, too, in the pictures we work out of doors so much that we enjoy good health. We begin early in the morning, which means early to bed at night, and in the evenings we can motor over the California roads.

"Yes, I think that I will remain in the pictures as long as I am an actress, and when I retire it will be to a cozy little California home, where I can see my friends, even if they cannot see me on the screen."

and the bay is patrolled by anxious searchers. On the other side of the bay, among the rocky cliffs, Joe has found a supper of berries. Night comes on and he finds a bed among the rocks. He defies the darkness with a tune on his flageolet. Little Polly is beached within sound of the music. She scampers out of the boat and toddles over to Joe's haven. At once they become friends. Joe gives her a supper of berries, tells her of the Good Fairy and plays her to sleep. He, too, sleeps and dreams that he is the prince and she the princess—they are transported into fairyland, where they are made man and wife. They are in the Land of the Golden Harp, where the shrill notes of the flageolet are unknown. After much pleasure and happiness, and against the admonition of the Good Fairy, who tells him that the music from his flageolet will awaken the old Fury of the Forest, Joe forgets and starts a tune on his favorite instrument. Immediately the Old Fury appears and all Fairyland disappears. Joe and his little companion are found bv the searchers. He is rescued from the cruelty of Old Rufe, and sails away across the bay to be little Polly's prince forever after.

against his employers by conspiring with evil Mexicans to abduct Liberty to the mountains and hold her for ransom, the prospective money to be used to finance a revolution against the Mexican Government. The plan succeeds and Lopez and his vaqueros seize Liberty late at night and carry her away to a hiding place, where she is held captive.

Padro escapes from his captivity with the Lopez band and hurries back to the Horton estate hacienda, where he tells Captain Rutledge and Major Winston of the abduction of Liberty, and they summon their crew of Texas Rangers to go to the rescue of Liberty. Manuel tries to dissuade the rangers from setting out on the rescue mission, claiming the quest too hazardous; but Rutledge spurns his advice, and the latter finally concludes to accompany the expedition. The Lopez gang succeeds in carrying Liberty to a high mountain fastness, and throw a mammoth rock down to block the trail. Rutledge and his band are stopped by the huge rock and he sends a ranger back to the hacienda for dynamite to blast out the rock. The man returns and while the explosive is being placed a message is found demanding $10,000 as ransom to release Liberty. Rutledge shouts up the mountain side that if Liberty is harmed all the Lopez gang will be punished by death when caught. Lopez, from his mountain lair, sends words to an insurrecto chief, Alvira, to prepare for an attack on an American town near the border. Pedro, the servant, manages to creep into the Lopez camp, finds Liberty and aids her to escape from the gang, Pedro hurling some sticks of dynamite into the Lopez encampment and causing them to seek cover. Alvira and his insurrectos meanwhile are marching to attack the American town. Captain Rutledge and Manuel Leon quarrel, and agree to fight a duel.

dogs arrived—this time, a pair of mangy creatures and an unusually lengthy dachshund. Carter's sympathies are not with the Germans, and consequently he would not think of having the latter dog around, and as for the two former, they were two too many for the aristocratic De Haven tastes. He remained up half the night disposing of the De Haven Kennel. Carter, however, is never discouraged by failure and may always be counted on the bob up bright and smiling. He is a great favorite and has been the cause of more friendships among the more tempermental of the directors and actors at Universal City than any other one agency. He makes friends as fast as he makes jokes, and as soon as he makes one he has his picture taken with the new friend. Phillips Smalley is a case in point. Though each man knew of the other and had met formally on several occasions, they had had no occasion to become intimate until Carter stopped Smalley in the midst of a scene to introduce his pet hat, "Sancho," the largest he could buy in Los Angeles. Carter himself looks like a very much wasted Mexican Major General in it and Smalley would not take a chance. So Wallace Beery was induced to wear the hat in the picture. Carter has changed his fancy from dogs and cats to hats. He already has a fine collection, and he thinks they will be useful to him in his picture work.

"Brennon o' the Moor"

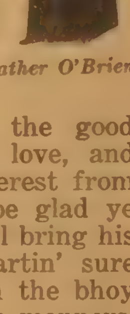
A GREAT SPECIAL FEATURE RELEASED AUG. 23

Willie Brennon and Molly Bawn

RELEASED WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE TO EXHIBITORS BOOKING THE ENTIRE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

AN UNUSUAL HEART INTEREST PHOTO DRAMA—WITH EVERY ELEMENT OF POPULARITY—A GREAT BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION

IF there is anny unnaturalized citizen that don't know what a "broth of a bhoy" is he had bether see Francis Ford as "Brennon o' the Moor." He's a wild lad an' the best wrassler in the village of Cashel. Shure, it's no wondher that Molly Bawn (Grace Cunard), loved him, and when he licks the mayor's son she's as proud of his as if she owned him. Molly's father was a bit behind in the rint, d'ye moind, an' when the mayor, his landlord, got uppy about it, it was Molly hersilf that trun him out of the cabin. Willie got into trouble over it, and tuk to the moor, wid a brace of ould pistols. He robbed a pack peddler as nate as you plaise, an' thin, such was the contrariness of the lad, he made him a pairtner. Now, the mayor's son was a fellah wid a foine hairt, benaith his fine clothes, an' he liked Willie for the foightin' blood in him, though it cost him a lickin' to become acquainted wid the same. So when the mayor, be abuse and threats, made Molly give him her last shillins for the rint, Willie pints his gun at him and gets back the money. The mayor is woild, an' wid blood in his eye, calls in the King's red-coats, an' it looks as if Willie was bound fer the gaol. But Molly steals the flints from their muskets an' when the command to "Foire" is given, there's nawthin' doin', at all, at all. Ye may be well shure that Willie tuk advantage of the chance, and got safe away. Thin, wan night he called at his father's cabin and told him an' the ould mother that it was Ameriky he was bound' fer, an', thanks be, it's sweet Molly Bawn, herself, that's goin' wid him. Wid Father O'Brien's blessin', it's off they are, to the land of the free and the home of the Universal Program. If there's ary a son or a daughter of Ould Erin in your town, it's crazy they'll be about this foine pitcher, an' thim as ain't so fortunate as to be Irish born will loike it just the same, fer the good fightin' an' the true love, and the war-rm heart-interest from first to last. Ye'll be glad ye showed it. Dinny will bring his girl and Maggie'll sartin' sure fall dead in live with the bhoy Brennan wid his foine manners.



Father O'Brien

The Mayor of Cashel

Remember this great feature is released on the regular Universal Program without extra charge to all Exhibitors who use the entire Program. To those who use part only a slight additional charge will be made to cover cost of individual bookings.

A REAL CIRCUS PARADE.

ON this page is reproduced a photograph of the Majestic Theatre of Ponca City, Okla., with Charles H. Barron in the foreground. The cut also shows his automobile and a bully parade which he organized for the purpose of advertising the first episode of "Peg o' the Ring" on the opening day of that serial in his theatre.

Mr. Barron wrote L. L. Hensley, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company, Oklahoma City, from which he receives his service, a letter, and the major portion of it is reproduced herewith:

"I will give you an idea of how I opened 'Peg o' the Ring.' I had a circus parade just before the matinee. I offered three prizes to the boys who had the best circus wagons in this parade. There were a number of entries, all of which I permitted to march in the parade. A regular circus clown from the 101 Ranch was also hired and he brought with him two trick donkeys to perform while the parade was being pulled off.

"In order to give the parade the true 'Peg' character, a young lady on a sorrel horse, dressed as nearly as possible to represent 'Peg,' rode at the head of the procession. In order that this young lady should not be recognized she wore a mask over her eyes. Four boys carried banners with the words 'Peg o' the Ring' at sufficient intervals in the parade so that the four words covered its entire extent.

"At the end came my car with a banner draped over its entire surface. Inside was my piano player performing on a unafon, which represented the well-known calliope. The parade made a hit and brought an excellent crowd to my theatre.

UNIVERSAL

Dear Sir—

I AM "LIBERTY!"

I am the Universal serial that enables the exhibitor to take advantage of the tremendous interest aroused by the Mexican situation.

While our soldier boys are watchfully waiting for the word that shall send them hurtling over the line—

While a hundred million people are breathlessly awaiting the news announcing our determination to end, once and for all, the Mexican menace—

I, as the result of the tremendous expenditure on the part of my creator, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will bring to the people of the United States a first-hand knowledge of conditions along the border.

Through the medium of my intensely exciting twenty weekly two-act episodes, I will unfold a story that will reveal the nature of the people our men must contend with—their treachery and ferocity.

Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt, Eddie Polo, will enact the central roles, while hundreds of soldiers, cowboys and Mexicans will take part in the most terrific battles ever screened.

Book me and let me free you from all fear and worry of the Tyrant of bad business for twenty weeks.

Book me NOW!

Yours for success, "LIBERTY!"

The above is a circular and teaser idea which was originated by the Universal Exchange of New York. They have no patent on it and would feel highly complimented if any exhibitor outside their territory should see fit to copy it. There is one cut missing, to keep you guessing until the next Weekly comes out. Also on page fifty-four there will be found a number of suggestions which will help you to "put over" the next Universal serial.

We are fighting the Tyrant that takes the bread out of our mouths.
Are you with us? Do you want to share the fruits of Victory?
Then shout for LIBERTY!!

SETTING CARRICK STRAIGHT.

THE editor of the Moving Picture Weekly is in receipt of a nice crisp note from Mr. V. R. Carrick. president and general manager of the Interstate Films Company (Inc.), informing him, and through him the world in general, that the sweeping announcement made in the last number of the Weekly in regard to the million dollar exchange purchase did not affect him in any way. We hasten to comply with Mr. Carrick's request and announce that the exchanges in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia, which are handling the Universal Program, are not included either in Mr. Oldknow's or Mr. Goldstein's territory. Mr. Carrick, who manages these exchanges, is the district manager of the middle eastern group, whose district comprises eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and West Virginia. The announcement which was made in the previous issue was not intended to affect Mr. Carrick, and the editor of the Weekly is sincerely sorry that the story could have been construed in such a manner.

STRIKE IN FRONT OF STRIKERS.

IN the filming of "Broke, but Ambitious," a comedy written by Harry Lyons for Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, one of the scenes made at San Pedro harbor, near Los Angeles, required the principals to battle with strikers aboard a ship.

It so happened at the same time striking stevedores and the Los Angeles policemen were having considerable difficulty at the harbor.

The captain of the ship would only permit the scenes to be made in absolute silence in order that no false impression might be gained by the strikers on the shore.

Therefore, the comedians and the members of the company working with them were required to pantomime every scene while on board the vessel.

Universal Regular Service and Red Feather Features will put any theatre on Easy Street.

THE NEWSPAPER SYNDICATE.

IT may not be out of place to call your attention to the effective Newspaper Syndicate which is published weekly by the Motion Picture Newspaper Publishing Company. The sheet with all the stories of the week written in excellent newspaper style, so that any newspaper will be only too happy to take them from you and run them as they are, will be mailed to any exhibitor who wants it and who has a chance to get the stories in the newspaper of his town.

The mats that come with it and the cuts may be obtained at the prices listed at the bottom of the sheet. That is, the full set of two double and four single column mats will be sent prepaid for twenty cents and a full set of cuts of the same illustrations will be sent for a dollar. Go to see the editor of the paper on which you rely to advertise your show. Find out first if he will use the publicity stories which you can give him. If he will, find out whether he can use mats, or if he will have to have cuts. The cuts supplied are of a composition which will not permit of taking a stereo from them and so cannot be used except on a flat bed press. Having ascertained these matters, write direct to the Motion Picture Newspaper Publishing Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City.

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

This Week: Special Advertising Stunt for the Universal Serial Glorious, "LIBERTY"

IF there is a company of the National Guard of your state in your town, send to their commanding officer an invitation for the entire company to attend your theatre on the opening night of the serial, "LIBERTY." Dress a girl as Liberty and have her sing patriotic songs before the opening of the episode, and at the end let her come out waving a big American flag and sing "The Star Spangled Banner," asking the audience to join in the singing. Dress your house front up with red, white and blue and American flags for the occasion. Advertise the performance as a big attraction and you will pack them in and start the first episode with a whirlwind of enthusiasm.

. . . .

On the day you show each episode of "LIBERTY" have a bugler in regulation U. S. Army Uniform stand in front of your theatre giving bugle calls at intervals. Always dress up your lobby with American flags and red, white and blue drapery. You will find it more economical to pay a trifle more and get a fair quality of fast color bunting, than to buy the cheap stuff, which looks bad and cheap after it has been up for a day, and which will not stand rain at all. With the better quality you can always make a swell front every day you show an episode of this patriotic serial, "LIBERTY."

. . . .

You can attract a lot of attention by having a good looking, well built chap dressed in regular army khaki do sentry duty in front of your theatre on each "LIBERTY" episode day. Get a small army dog tent; stack army rifles in front of it; swing some canteens from them; make a campfire just as you would out camping and put an electric light bulb under some chunks of red glass beneath the sticks. The effect will look like a regular fire and attract a lot of attention. Get a man for your sentry who has had military training, if possible. Nothing is more ridiculous than a man of poor physique, round-shouldered and careless of carriage, in military unform. He is simply a laughing stock for passersby, whereas nothing is more attractive than a smart, military looking figure. Get one.

. . . .

There is no doubt a Boy Scout Camp in your neighborhood. If so, there are many ways that you can use the boys to boost for "LIBERTY." Give the boys free admissions and they will do anything you want them to. If there is a stage in your house let the boys give some sort of an exhibition, such as first aid treatment, wig-wagging, etc. Use them to distribute your heralds, throwaways, programs, etc. Have them go around in pairs, one of the boys carrying a flag, the other the printed matter. If there is one of the youngsters who blows a bugle, so much the better. You can also have the boys parade and attend the first episode in a body. You will find them loyal little boosters and they all have plenty of friends and relatives to spread the news and to pay admissions. If there is a Girl Scout camp in the town use the girls the same as the boys.

Decorate an automobile with red, white and blue; if you can get red, white and blue flowers the effect will be greater. Make a float of the car, that is, have it completely hidden by the decorations. Arrange a throne seat at the back and have a beautiful young woman dressed as "LIBERTY" sitting on the throne. At either side of her have two little boys, one dressed as a sailor and one as a soldier. Each should have an American flag and an Uncle Sam on the seat with the driver could distribute printed matter. Have banners announcing the first episode of "LIBERTY." With your theatre name and date, mention stars and number of episodes.

. . . .

Get the prettiest girl in your town that can ride a horse; dress her in a regulation cavalryman's costume. Give her a flag with a staff long enough to rest the lower end in the stirrup. Have her ride through the streets, and if possible have a cavalry bugleman follow her, blowing bugle calls at intervals. Have the saddle blanket a dark blue with a red and white border, and an announcement of "LIBERTY" in bold letters. Properly done this can be made extraordinarily attractive.

. . . .

Offer prizes to school children for the best essay on "LIBERTY." Give a free admission to every child who sends in an essay, whether they are entitled to one of the special prizes or not. Take this up with your newspaper editor. Have him appoint the judges and make the announcements. Have him publish the prize winning essays in his paper. It is a good circulation scheme for him, and he should give you close and hearty co-operation. Announce the contest on slides in your theatre, and advertise it in the newspaper, as well as having the same announced by the editor in the news columns.

Red Feather Photoplay of Four Weeks from This Week

J. WARREN KERRIGAN, in "The Beckoning Trail." A Romantic Drama of the East and West. Thirtieth Red Feather Production. Directed by Jack Conway. In the case of J. Warren in this big play the loss of his fortune was "good for what ailed him." And that he lost it by the "wine, woman and song" route only emphasized the fact that any change in J. Warren's glad young ways would be for the better. He thinks he is in love with Maude George, but in reality he is simply dazzled by the bright lights of the greatest little street in the world. After a particularly hilarious and expensive evening he gets a letter from his lawyer and learns that his tangible assets consist of some ancient mining stock in an undeveloped mine, youth, health and pluck. He goes West and finds that a squatter with a lovely daughter, Lois, is on his claim, and that Harry Carter, the big boss of the district, is trying to jump the claim and throw the old man and his daughter out. Warren helps the squatter work and defend the mine, but does not disclose his ownership. In the meantime Maude has been trying to lure Warren back to Broadway. Finally she comes West to try personal persuasion. Lois is in love with him and when Maude arrives she believes her love is in vain. Warren is lured by the "beckoning trail" and returns to New York. But it doesn't seem to be the same, and he finds his thoughts turning to another "beckoning trail," with Lois at the end of it. He returns to the mine and finds Carter has driven the old man away. He goes to Carter's office, where a gang of Carter's toughs are laying for him. Then and there is one of the greatest fights in moving pictures. If you don't think J. Warren Kerrigan can put up a good scrap, see this one. He licks six men single handed and wrecks the whole place. One of the best Red Feathers that ever floated from the home nest.

Advance Notices

Every Exhibitor should read every word-every week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"THE CASTLE OF DESPAIR." With Neva Gerber and Malcolm Blevins. Three-Reel Gold Seal Emotional Drama. Directed by Ben Wilson. Released August 22. If you are a real dyed in the wool, blown in the bottle, stamped on the selvage, 99 44-100%, honest to goodness Universal fan, you follow the dope as close as a pony hound does the racing sheets. So. If this and that is the case, you are no doubt wise to the fact that Universal Pictures are now made exclusively at Universal City, the capital of the film world. Yep, all the old standbys of the East Coast studios hiked to sunny California, and among the first to pack his make-up box and megaphone was actor-director Ben Wilson, one of the most thorough, thoughtful and painstaking directors on the Universal staff. And here is Ben's first Universal City picture, and it is a corker. You know. or don't you, that the wise-guy literary fellers say that there are only seven plots known to mankind. That all stories and plays are variations of these seven plots. The same general stories with a twist. The director or writer who can give a new twist to a plot is the man who gets credit for being original. And he is entitled to it. Ben has given us in this big three-reeler a new twist on the eternal triangle plot—this time it is two men and one woman. The woman's husband is engrossed in business; his wife is lonely; his friend is obliging. Then the story begins to differ from the original triangular plot, because Ben Wilson used his head. The climax is great; the sets are magnificent. The production will please your audiences, and that ought to be sufficient, but if more need be said—it is a three-reeler on the Universal Program. And that is a lot.

"YOU WANT SOMETHING." With Gale Henry, William Franey, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Morante. Two-Reel Victor Comedy Drama. Released August 24. The writer of this review has nothing whatever to do with bookings, exchanges, rentals or the like. If he had he would certainly suggest to the powers that be that "You Want Something" be released at so low a price that every exhibitor in the country would simply be compelled to book it so that he could learn the lesson it teaches. If you think you can't learn a lesson from a comedy drama, that's another lesson for you. There are hundreds of exhibitors who have not yet learned from their own experience that "it pays to advertise." They know that other exhibitors get away with it, but they think that their own case is different, and they are bumping along "somehow" kidding themselves into believing that all the money they do not spend is that much velvet. Gale was in love with Tom Hustle of the Hustle Advertising Agency. Her papa didn't like Tom, because Tom wanted him to advertise, and old man Fogie didn't believe in advertising. The old man made good shoes which did not sell. When his traveling man came in from the road the old man started out himself. Gail and Tom take possession of the factory and shortly after wherever the old man goes he finds signs reading, "You Need Something—It's Anti-Skid Shoes." He finds the slogan on the hotel register, pen and blotter; on the bell boy's cap and the maid's apron; on the towels; on every billboard and dead wall. He couldn't sell a shoe, because all people would buy were the "Anti-Skid Shoes." He comes home in disgust to learn that Tom has put one over. There is a laugh in every scene and the plot is full of merry action. You ought to book this for the laughs it will give your patrons. And please don't forget that good old anti-skid program—the Universal. If your business is rotten, "you want something—the Universal Program."

MARY FULLER, in "The Trail of Chance." With Joe Girard and a notable cast. Two-Reel 101-Bison Detective Drama of the Big Woods. Directed by Lucius Henderson. Released August 28. "Mary, Mary, quite contrary," was the original garden girl, if my Mother Goose memory is working correctly, and while far be it from me to even hint that "Our Mary" can or could be contrary, she can do the most widely opposite things for the screen fans of any one I can recall at the present moment. See Mary in a society drama and she has "400" stamped all over her. In a lot of those high-brow plays of hers she has Marie Farrar and Genevieve Garden looking like a noovoo reesh. And here she puts all the boys' hearts a-flutter in a play where costume doesn't count; where she simply has to let her emotions emote and depend upon her wonderful personality to put it over without the aid of dressmaker. hairdresser or beauty shop. She is the daughter of a forester. He is called away from home. Mary is loved by big Joe Girard, and she is left in his care. A young stranger comes to the woods camp, and because a letter announcing his coming has not arrived he is looked upon with suspicion. Mary likes him and shows it. Joe is jealous. A circular offering a reward for the apprehension of Richard Stanley, wanted for murder, is received and the young stranger's initials are R. S., his name being Richard Stanton. Joe incites the boys to take the law into their own hands. Richard overhears the plot and takes refuge in Mary's cabin. There he is found in a most thrilling climax which will bring your audiences to the edge of their seats before the arrival of Mary's father brings an unexpected turn to the situation. There is a big capable company supporting Mary Fuller in this big and thrilling picture. Your patrons will find every moment and scene to be perfect moving picture entertainment.

“THE BECKONING TRAIL”

J. WARREN KERRIGAN, Star in Superb Red Feather Production Which Sets High-water Mark of Merit. Antidote to Broadway's Lure Found by Pleasure-loving Youth in a Mountain Girl's Deep Eyes. Here also He Finds His Fortune after a Hard Fight.

THIS is the first Red Feather production in which J. Warren Kerrigan has ever appeared, and it is also one of the best pictures he has ever played. It is unusual for the "Jack of Hearts" to take the role of a fighting hero, but as "Carter Raymond," he lays aside all kid-glove methods and indulges in a hand-to-hand conflict which will bring the fans to the edge of their chairs. Harry Carey himself would not be ashamed of the scrap which Kerrigan puts up against the heaviest kind of odds. Things became rather serious at one time during the filming of this incident, and Kerrigan received a very real gash on the head, which had to be sewn up after the encounter was over. He was fighting Harry Carter, who is a great many pounds heavier and quite a bit taller. Kerrigan told him to go as far as he liked, and Carter took him at his word. The result on the screen makes a thrilling encounter, and there is a delightful love story, a good plot, and wonderful natural scenery in the picture as well.

A cordial welcome to the stranger.

Here is a synopsis of the story:

Carter Raymond is a young New Yorker who has been left an enormous estate by his father, which he is burning up on the trail of the great white way. To cap the climax he has fallen in love with an actress, Georgette Fallon, and is about to marry her when he is informed by his lawyer that his whole estate is squandered and there is nothing left but a mine in Hell's Canyon, Desert, California. Carter decides to make the best of it, so he sets out for Desert to make his fortune.

The town of Desert is run by a boss, "Placer," Murray, who, with the aid of a gang of bullies, rules the place. The mine which Carter owns is being worked by Helton, although he has no legal claim to the property, and a short while before Carter arrives Murray tries to take possession of the mine by force. In this he is not successful, as Helton and his daughter drive him away at the point of a gun. Upon Carter's arrival Helton takes him for one of Murray's men and a terrific struggle ensues. When matters are straightened out Helton offers Carter a position and Carter decides to stay without revealing his identity as owner of the mine just yet.

Work on the mine progresses and as time goes on Carter falls in love with Mary. But all this while Murray has the mine watched and when he finds that they are about to strike it rich, he has the mine blown up so that the partners have to begin all over again. The two are very much discouraged, but they stick it out and begin the work anew.

At this time Raymond receives a telegram from Georgette saying that she is coming visit him on her vacation and asking him to meet her at the station.

Raymond, fighting for his life, knocks out Murray.

The day of her arrival finally dawns and Carter and Helton go down to the station to meet Georgette. Murray, seeing the two in town, thinks that it is an ideal time to settle his score once for all. So he calls the partners into his office and there begins a battle royal. The odds are by no means even, as they are two to seven, but in the end Carter and old Helton succeed in fighting their way out.

By this time Georgette has arrived and they all ride to the claim, where Mary is introduced to her rival. The days now pass very swiftly and work rapidly proceeds on the new shaft.

At last the time comes for Georgette to leave and she begs Carter to go with her. He says that he cannot go, as he has no money. Then she tells him that his lawyer has found a part of the estate that was hitherto unknown, and that he is wealthy once more. At last he succumbs to the call of the white lights and agrees to go.

But Broadway seems tame to Carter after living in the open, and he soon finds himself on his way back to the West. Reaching Desert, he is told that Murray now has possession of the claim which he has bought from Helton for a song.. The latter is broken in mind and body and is living in a little hut, attended by Mary.

Carter now decides that it is time to act, so he goes to the sheriff and presents his deed to the mine and then goes up to the claim to settle his private score with Murray. But he has not counted upon the latter's gunmen and when he gets there he is attacked by the whole crowd and forced to take shelter behind some rocks and fight for his life.

In the meanwhile Mary has found out what is happening and has the presence of mind to telephone the authorities in the next county, as the sheriff in that county is being held up by Murray's men. After doing this she goes to Carter's aid with ammunition. She arrives just in time to save him and the two of them fight off the attacks of their opponents until aid arrives.

As the story ends, Raymond makes Mary a partner in the mine, although it is really not necessary, as she is shortly to become his partner for life.

RUTH ANN BALDWIN WILL BECOME A BIG U DIRECTOR.

RUTH ANN BALDWIN, who has been affiliated with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for three years, shortly will join the ranks of women directors.

Before coming to the Universal Company, Miss Baldwin was associated with the newspapers of San Diego, and for two years was connected with the scenario department of the Big U organization. Miss Baldwin was sent to London by President Laemmle to collaborate with E. Phillips Oppenheim in the preparation of "The Black Box" serial for the screen, and spent more than six months there.

In honor of Wyndham Gettens, the new Screen Editor of the Universal Company, Miss Baldwin, who served in that capacity for the past year, gave a luncheon at the Universal City cafe last week, at which the members of the film department with which she has been closely associated in her work were guests.

Those present were: Gilmore Walker, Earl Turner, Ralph Dickson, W. B. Pearson, Louis Ostrow, Del Andrews, Phillip White and Eugene B. Lewis, head of the scenario department. During the luncheon Miss Baldwin was presented by her colleagues with a beautiful silver mounted fountain pen.

GIRLS FOLLOW KERRIGAN.

IT is getting to be quite a fad with the fair visitors at Universal City to bring cameras and wait for the handsome figure of J. Warren Kerrigan to appear.

One day this week he was seen dodging between the scenery on the stage on his way to the dressing-room. When asked if he had lost something, replied:

"Yes, I lost my goat."

In the aisle were sixteen pretty girls standing in line with their cameras ready, waiting for him.

Jack says one or two do not matter, but when it comes to an army, he escapes.

JOKE (?)

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran wanted a young Steve Brodie to make a rather dangerous fall in one act of their comedy, "The Bugle's Reporter." Eugene Walsh of the Universtol Stock Company, poked his head into their office and said:

"I hear you fellows want a Niagara."

"Want a what?" echoed Lyons.

"I hear you want an actor to make a fall."

The next scene witnessed books, paperweights and fists going in the direction of the open door.

All About the Prettiest Nestorette Yet

Miss Priscilla Dean

An appreciation obtained through Screen Acquaintance and a talk with her chum. By Mlle Chic

WHEN the Nestor comedy, "All Bets Off," was run for the first time in the New York projection room of the Universal Film Company every one asked simultaneously and concurrently, also persistently and continuously, "Who is the girl?" Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were their familiar and well-beloved selves, Marcia Moore was easily recognized by her charm and her mass of brown curls. But who was the mysterious beauty who played the part of "Grace?" Priscilla Dean, we were told, and then we knew just as much as before. But fate was kind for once. Right in the New York office was discovered a young lady who was a schoolmate of the newest Universal beauty, and she was prevailed upon to divulge all the dark secrets of her past, that is, Priscilla's, of course.

Priscilla is her real name, and she is twenty years old. "Dean" is just a reel name, for her own is too long and too Irish for the films, she says.

"Not that I want to go back on the Emerald Isle," she is reported to have said. "I am proud of my ancestry. But for pictures I thought I had better have something a little more cosmopolitan."

Miss Priscilla is an only child and was born in New York City, where her father still lives. In that self-sacrificing way of American fathers, he puts the career of his daughter before his own wishes and reluctantly allows her to go off to the other side of the continent to make a name for herself in her chosen profession, and, what is still more heroic, to take her mother with her. He agrees with his better half that his daughter is much too young and far too pretty to be there by herself.

Priscilla has always been determined to go on the stage and she accomplished her desire at the age of four years. She made her first appearance with no less a personage than the late and still lamented Joseph Jefferson in the classic, "Rip Van Winkle," with which he delighted so many millions of playgoers, and which no one who saw it has ever forgotten. Perhaps Priscilla will have an opportunity to exchange reminiscences of the great actor with his son, Thomas, who is a featured player for the Universal at the Pacific Coast studios. Priscilla had to pick up most of her education while she was on the wing. Fortunately her mother could help her here. She played as a child actress with Ben Greet's Shakespearean companies and loved her work.

For a time she went to school in a convent, and while there she always took a leading role in all the entertainments. She confided to her particular chums that she intended to return to the stage as soon as she could, for she was determined to be an actress, and nothing but an actress. She was a lively little thing, very popular and simply devoted to dancing. She was, at that time, sweet-looking rather than pretty, and it was a surprise to her friends when she grew into the beauty which is hers in superlative degree today. There is an old Scotch proverb which says, "Ugly in the cradle, pretty at the table," which, being interpreted, means that the prettiest children do not always get their pictures into the Sunday supplements when they grow up. Priscilla is an instance of the truth of the old saying.

At fourteen she decided that she had learned enough from books, and that it was time to set about the career. Father and mother, who could refuse her nothing in reason, gave their consent, and she returned to the stage in the company of James A. Hearne in his play, "Hearts of Oak." She had not time for much stage experience, however, before she heard and obeyed, like a wise little girl, the call of the camera. She followed it to California in 1911, and mother went, too, to act as efficient dragon to the rest of the world, and as guide, philosopher and friend to her pretty daughter. Priscilla appeared successively in the Biograph, Pathe, World and Vogue films. Some of the better know pictures in which she had a part were the Richard Carle comedy series, "Mother" and "He's In Again," for Vogue. She came to the Universal from the Kalem studio and was assigned to general stock. Then came the new co-directors of the Nestor comedies, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, and Louis Chaudet, looking busily through the big Universal lot for the prettiest girl available to play opposite them. Just one glance in Priscilla's direction was enough. They looked no further, and she became a Nestorette on the spot.

Priscilla is a brunette beauty. She is five feet five in height, one hundred and thirty pounds in weight, has brown hair, eyes to match and a dark complexion. But all that does not tell you anything much. See her for one second on the screen and you will have a better impression of her charm than pages of description from the pen of a poet could give you. And Priscilla would serve as inspiration for the most exigent poet. But she can do a good deal more than look pretty. She is a fine sportswoman, a good swimmer and a super-motorist. She drives a Buick car, and she drives it well.

MAKING UP TIME CAUSES TEXAS WRECK.

THE Universal Animated Weekly number thirty-three shows what was left of the Texas Special after it was derailed about ten miles south of Dallas, while trying to make up lost time. The train was rounding a curve at a speed of forty miles an hour when it was thrown off the tracks. The engine was the first to leave the tracks and was the most damaged. Both the engineer and fireman were killed as was one of the passengers. Many views of the wreck are shown and some are very peculiar. The running gear of the tender was thrown squarely on top of the engine. The baggage-smoker, third in position in the train, hurled the tender and landed on its side in advance of the locomotive. Rails twisted in every possible shape were cast high and dry into a corn patch and the coal in the tender was swept clean out and deposited in a neat heap in front of the engine. In short, it was a very remarkable wreck and the wonder is that more people were not killed.

SHARKS FOILED.

A NEW method has been invented to foil the big man-eaters that have been making life miserable for the ambitious swimmers all along the Atlantic coast this summer. The contrivance, which is shown in the thirty-third number of the Universal Animated Weekly, is a huge net made of the heaviest chain. It protrudes several feet above the high water level, and at the base are chains that sink into the bottom and conform to the changing surface by the weight of the chains. Besides being a safeguard against sharks the net keeps swimmers from being swept out to sea by the tide.

HUGHES ON TOUR IN WEST.

NUMBER thirty-three of the Universal Animated Weekly shows Charles Hughes, the Republican nominee for the presidency on his tour of the country. The present stopping place is in Detroit, where he received a hearty reception. The reception given in his honor at the Hotel Pontchartrain was a big success and the Judge and Mrs. Hughes seem to be enjoying it immensely on the picture. In the afternoon they attended a ball game between the Tigers and the Athletics and here again Hughes received the ovations of an admiring multitude. And finally he is shown making a speech to some 15,000 employees of the Dodge Brothers Motor Car Plant.

Of course this is just the reception that Mr. Hughes received in one town, but all through the west on this tour he has been cheered so vociferously that the coming campaign should be at any rate interesting.

IS THE BREMEN COMING?

IN New London there is being built a giant shed to store the cargo of the next submarine merchantman that is to arrive from Germany. The Animated Weekly shows the shed in the process of construction, and this should set all doubts as to whether or not the ship will arrive, at rest. Some of the more sceptical among the public think that the boat will arrive, but that the building of the shed at New London is only a ruse to make the British cruisers watch the wrong port. Watchful waiting and the Animated cameraman will reveal the answer.

VOLLMER MEETS HIS PEER AT LAST.

THE mighty Vollmer, who has so far taken the measure of about all the splash artists in the east and has even vanquished "Duke" Kahanamoku, has at last met a better man in Ludy Langer, who hails from California. This is practically the first race that Vollmer has ever been beaten, but it was no disgrace, as he gave a very creditable performance and Langer was not more than a yard ahead at any time. Number thirty-three of the Universal Animated Weekly shows both the victor and the vanquished.

DRY LAND SWIMMING.

IT is no longer necessary to go to the seashore to learn the art of swimming. Number thirty-three of the Universal Animated Weekly shows how the fair co-eds at the summer session of the University of California are taught to plough the briny deep without getting their hair wet. The girls are all lined up in classes and the intricacies of the arm motion and the kick are fully demonstrated and practiced. Then after the technique has been fully mastered out of the water the pupil can dive in and swim like a veteran—maybe.

SHORT MEASURE CHEATER TRAPPED.

THE officials in New York are always on the lookout for frauds in the shape of short measures. Number thirty-three of the Universal Ainmated Weekly shows the way one of these frauds is detected. The inspector was attracted by the sign advertising gasoline at 23 cents a gallon, a price way below that which other dealers were getting. Upon investigation it was found that the man was giving his customers a pint less than full measure. He was promptly put on the black list. The way of the transgressor is hard.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS.

By FRED S. MEYER.

THE Strand, St. Paul's largest and most exclusive photoplay theatre, booked the Bluebird feature SHOES for a period of four days. The engagement proved so successful that SHOES was retained for the entire week, and Mgr. Friedman informs us that the business was bigger on the last than on the first day. This is a wonderful record, considering the fact that the Twin Cities at the present time are experiencing the hottest period in entire history, 102 in shade.

Violet MacMillan, who appeared in a number of Universal Juvenile Comedies, is headliner at the New Grand this week, in a skit entitled "In and Out of the Movies." She uses four different parts of some of her Universal releases and talks about Universal City, and why she prefers to appear in Universal pictures. In conjunction with her appearance she commands a one-page ad of Universal reading matter.

Julius Bernheim. Asst. Mgr. of the local Universal office is suffering from accute indigestion and had to be removed to a hospital. As we go to press, his condition is materially improved and Mr. Bernheim is entirely out of danger. Julius has promised to be more careful about his diet in the future.

The best argument in favor of regular service against feature was submitted here a few days ago by H. W. Sarvis of Ortonville, Minn. He compares the third reel of a feature to the seventh inning of a baseball game. You stay to see the finish; you see your home team beaten, but as you have not seen the start, you sit through the first six innings. Get the drift? Very good logic.

Northwestern exhibitors will hereafter receive regular calls from Universal representatives. Mgr. Meyer, of the Minneapolis and Fargo offices, has the livest wires of the Northwest on his staff, and expects to completely revolutionize the Northwest with Universal service.

“The Girl OF Lost Lake”

WITH MYRTLE
GONZALEZ

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, contains strong drama in the north woods, with cast of well-balanced excellence.

WHEN Wainwright McAndrews tired of the struggle for ever-increasing wealth he would take his young son, Vaughan, and slip off to the mountains. High up in the Sierras lies Lost Lake. It is away from the hustle and bustle of cigilization, and here he would find peace and quiet. Left to himself, Vaughan found a playmate in the person of “Jude,” the daughter of Abner Clark, one of the early settlers of the country. Peace fled before the two children and they became inseparable companions. Abner and Wainwright, often together fishing and hunting, became the best of friends.

“I'll stand on my own feet,” said Vaughan.

Twelve years pass. McAndrews is so busy fighting to hold his fortune that the trip to Lost Lake has become only a memory. Vaughan is now a young man, and, upon the death of McAndrews decides to visit Lost Lake again to forget the shock of his father's sudden death. It has been his father's earnest desire that Vaughan and Victoria Harlowe, one of the buds of society, should marry, and they have accordingly become engaged. Vaughan wears the girl's picture in his watch, but when he calls to bid her good-by she views his departure with her usual calm. Emeline, Vaughan's aunt, wishes him godspeed and tells him to forget everything but his outing.

At Lost Lake time shows little outward change. Abner Clark is known as the grand old man of the region and makes a prosperous living trapping and guiding. His entire thoughts are wrapped up in Jude, now grown to a beautiful young girl, wild as the region surrounding her. Her father has often expressed his desire for her marriage to Dave Bean, as he is well off.

Jude's chief interest in him, however, lies in the fact that he can lick any man at the lake. “Judge” West has tramped and prospected the hills for twenty years, and in spite of friendly ridicule, still vainly hopes to strike a rich vein of the elusive metal. He and old Abner are close friends and he looks upon Jude almost as a daughter.

Vaughan arrives at the lake and finds the hotel full. The proprietor tells him that they can feed him, but have no room. Before arriving at the lake the stage has been boarded by Jude, who is intensely interested in a serial running in one of the weekly papers. She and the stage driver are old friends and he allows her to read the paper before they get to the lake. Vaughan is amused at her ways and laughs at her disappointment because the story is continued. She becomes very angry at the newcomer's laugh and thinks it is in ridicule. While Vaughan and the hotel keeper are talking, Abner Clark, on his way for provisions, stops to chat and hears the newcomer called Mr. McAndrews. He recalls his old friend of other days and asks if he is the son of Wainwright McAndrews. Their acquaintance is renewed and Abner will have it that Vaughan must come and stay with him. The latter gladly agrees.

Wallace Harrison, an artist from the city, is also staying in the mountains to paint and his camp is located overlooking the beautiful lake. Jude, still angry at the newcomer, wanders to his camp and watches him paint in wild-eyed surprise. He is amazed at the wonderful pose she is holding and asks her to pose for him. He offers her fifty dollars, and she finally agrees. Harrison treats her like a child and they soon become friends. Jude returns home to find Vaughan installed in her room. She does not like him and is very angry at the idea of the newcomer, "who laffed at her," adding to his sins by taking her room. Abner finally makes the two known to each other and they recall the friendship of their youth. Vaughan then tells her how sorry he is that he laughed at her and the reserve between them melts. Jude has been accustomed to take life easy. Her father does all the cooking, and naturally the house is in an untidy condition. Jude sees how Vaughan looks at things and decides to take charge of the house herself. Happy days follow. Dave presses Jude to set the day for their wedding, but she puts him off. The picture is almost finished and Jude thinks with pleasure of the money she is to have. One day the "Judge" returns to the lake with some samples of ore and he and Dave get into an argument. Dave is about to hit the old man when Vaughan enters and jumps on Dave. They fight, but old Abner comes in and separates them. He makes Dave shake hands with Vaughan, but the former leaves with anger in his heart and vowing vengeance against the man that knocked him down.

"Eat your dinner nicely," said Jude to the owl.

The "Judge" sees Jude's growing interest in Vaughan and one day he tells him frankly that he is trying to break up a happy home. Vaughan realizes to what end her interest in him may lead and manages to show her the picture of Victoria as his fiancee. The blow is a hard one for Jude and she seeks the solitude for comfort. At last the painting is finished and Jude sees it for the first time. It shows her posing on the rocks and her body is partly undraped. In an angry rage she sees that the artist has drawn on his imagination for the undraped figure, and she smashes the canvas. Harrison mends the torn canvas and sends it to the city. One day Jude has a sudden spurt of energy and cleans the house from top to bottom. She also takes charge of the kitchen and becomes a housekeeper in truth. Vaughan makes the acquaintance of Harrison, and the latter invites him to come over and bunk with him any time he wants a change. In spite of his effort to kill Jude's interest in him Vaughan begins to realize that he thinks more of her than he ought, as the fiance of Victoria. To avoid Jude, he calls on Harrison. On the way Dave attacks him, intending to kill him, but Vaughan beats him and takes his gun from him. Dave goes, vowing to kill Vaughan if he doesn't leave. Vaughan goes to Harrison's camp and is shown the picture of Jude. He asks if she posed for it and the artist tells him yes. He can hardly believe it and as he starts to go Jude rushes in. She has come to warn the artist that Dave will kill him. Vaughan angrily shows her the picture and asks if she posed for it. Her love tells her that she must get Vaughan away, and she says she posed for the picture, knowing that Vaughan will go and thus avoid Dave. He leaves in anger, telling Jude it is because of the posing and not of the threats of Dave.

Upon his return Vaughan finds that the bulk of his father's fortune went to pay his numerous debts and there is very little left. His aunt offers to settle an income upon him, but he refuses this, as he has long wished to strike out for himself. He throws himself into the work to try to forget Jude. Upon learning of his loss of fortune, he offers to release Victoria from their engagement and she agrees that it will be best.

Abner rises from his sick bed to take charge of the affair.

Abner falls sick, and Jude goes to Harrison's camp to ask for the fifty dollars she previously refused, in order to take her father to the hospital. Dave goes to the cabin and sees Jude receive the money. He thinks the worst of her, and when her father succumbs to his illness she is left alone. The "Judge" takes charge of her, and they strike gold. Vaughan prospers in the city, and learns from the stage driver that he has misjudged Jude. He writes to her, offering to go to Lost Lake if she will forgive him. She answers, begging him to come, but the "Judge" puts the letter in his pocket and forgets it. The course of true love, however, runs smooth at last, and Jude and Vaughan are brought together by the machinations of the "Judge."

The picture fades out on Jude's favorite seat at Lost Lake with the two in fond embrace.

King Baggot in "The Chance Market"

Marmaduke kills the thief.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Society Drama. Written and directed by King Baggot. After attempt on his life by a man who closely resembles him, wealthy bachelor masquerades as crook. Attends own funeral in new character and falls in love with his assailant's lady friend.

"THE CHANCE MARKET," a three-reel Gold Seal society drama written and produced by King Baggot, gives this actor a great opportunity in a dual role. Dual roles are always hard to play well, but this is a particularly hard one because of the close contact required by the two characters. The step from a wealthy bachelor to a tough crook is a difficult one to take. In both parts Mr. Baggot is convincing. And the double exposure work is wonderful and from a new angle.

The plot leaves nothing to be desired in the way of action or heart interest. From start to finish it holds the attention as it is carefully unraveled. It is all based on a striking resemblance between John Marmaduke and a thief, a resemblance so close that the thief's "lady friend" is not able to detect any difference when John takes the crook's place. And herein lies the tale.

But there is no use telling the story ahead of time. King Baggot is so well known that he needs no comment, and the rest of the cast do very well; Irene Hunt in the part of Mary Cullen, and Jack Ridgeway in the part of her father.

Mary Cullen, a handsome working girl, is engaged to be married to Jim Fowler, a crook. One night Jim's pals come to get him to go on a big job and Jim goes in spite of the protests of Mary.

The house that the crooks have picked out to rob is that of John Marmaduke, a wealthy bachelor. Jim is picked as the one to go inside to do the work and he stealthily creeps in the window. But John is still up and hears the man enter. A terrific struggle ensues and it ends as John kills Jim. The butler comes in and they notice that there is a striking resemblance between John and the burglar. So the wealthy bachelor decides to take the crook's place and leave the body there to make it appear as if he had committed suicide. The faithful butler swears secrecy so John puts on the other man's clothes and sallies forth.

Jim's pals have scampered as soon as they heard the shot but linger just outside the grounds. When John comes out they attack him to get the swag. Mary finds him bleeding and sore and leads him to her home.

The next day Marmaduke goes to his own funeral and notices that his erstwhile fiancee is not at all grieved at his death. So he resolves to keep his character as a crook.

That evening at supper Mary is surprised at Jim's new and improved table manners but does not suspect anything until the next day when the butler comes to see his master. Mary rushes to him and denounces Marmaduke for the deceit he has played.

In the meanwhile Jim's pals have found out that he is at Mary's house and they come to thrash him. Mary finds this out and comes to warn him but he says that he will not leave without her. But they have taken so long to argue that the thieves come and trap John. John succeeds in getting the best of one of the crooks but is having a hard time with the other one when Buxton, the butler, whom John has sent for a real meal, arrives in time to save his master. Mary is rushed into a waiting auto and as the picture fades out the two are seen in the tonneau in a fond embrace.

"Riding With Death"

Second Two-reel Episode of "Liberty" Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard with an all star cast of players

Actual snapshots of the reproduction of the raid on Columbus, N. M.

Villa and his bandits infesting the city.

WHILE Liberty is attempting to make her escape Pedro, the faithful servant, is hurling dynamite at Lopez and his men and in so doing blows up a part of the hut. This so frightens Lopez's men that he has a hard time rallying them.

Manuel and Rutledge are fighting on the top of the cliff with knives, but Manuel is disarmed, and Rutledge, wishing to play fair, throws away his knife and the two fight bare-handed. Manuel gets the best of him and forces him over the edge of the cliff, but Rutledge manages to retain a hold by hanging in midair. This is seen by Liberty and Pedro and they start to the aid of Rutledge, but before they arrive Rutledge has managed to regain his foothold. Just as they arrive he is on the point of hurling Manuel over the cliff, when Liberty calls and he throws him to the ground instead.

Boys in khaki to the rescue.

When they arrive at the camp of the Major, she tells him of the attack. The Major thinks that by riding hard they will be able to warn Colonel Dalton. This is heard by one of Lopez's men and he leaves to warn Lopez. Just as the Major and his men are mounting they are attacked by Lopez and forced to seek shelter. Liberty, realizing the seriousness of the situation, offers to ride to the Colonel's quarters and warn him, and so she and Pedro leave, but not, however, without being observed by Lopez, who orders three of his men to capture her.

Manuel has not entered the fight, but is watching from behind a rock. Just as Rutledge is loading his gun Manuel fires at him and the bullet tears the gun from his hand. As he starts to fire a second time the Major walks up behind him and knocks him down, warning him to stop. The fighting continues.

Liberty is rushing along the trail closely followed by the Mexicans. She decides to play a ruse on them and strings a rope across the trail just at a bend. It is effective, and two Mexicans are knocked from their horses. Just as she reaches the camp the Mexicans, who have regained their horses and pursued her, fire. Some men from the camp come out to rescue her, as she has collapsed from sheer exhaustion and is hanging limply with one foot caught in her saddle.

BOY ACTOR SCORES IN THREE-REELER.

GORDON GRIFFITH, the Universal City actor who celebrated his ninth birthday July 4, has made another distinct hit by his clever work in a three-reel drama entitled, "Little Joe," written and directed by William V. Mong.

This boy has been appearing before the camera for the past four years and is considered one of the best, if not the best, boy actor in motion pictures. Many of the scenes were photographed at Laguna, on the coast of southern California.

The boy's father, Harry Griffith, plays the role of a brutal fisherman, who abuses the boy. Others in the cast are little Georgia French, Betty Schade and William Carlock.

"Liberty" Third Episode

THE fourth episode of the current Universal serial, "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," featuring Marie Walcamp, contains an actual reproduction of the Mexican raid on Columbus, N. M. The filming of this picture was one of the most spectacular sights ever witnessed in a motion picture studio, as it was realistic to the most minute detail. Beverly Griffith, who was correspondent for the Animated Weekly at the border at the time of the raid, took snap shots of the town before and after the Mexicans arrived. From these the town was actually reproduced and the film is an exact duplicate of this battle which made history between the United States and Mexico.

The filming of the scene was quite a task in itself and great credit is due to Jacques Jaccard for the excellent way in which the whole thing was managed. In the early morning the Mexicans crept up upon the town and entered the sleeping village. Then began the scenes of carnage and looting. Hundreds of women and children were used in the picture and every one threw their personal safety to the wind and acted with an abandon which was necessary to make the film a success. The pictures on the opposite page give some idea of the great scale on which the scene was produced.

Liberty Horton, the American heiress, having escaped from her abductors who are led by Lopez, rides toward the town of Discovery, to warn the Americans there of the plot of the insurrectos to attack the place. Lopez sends out several rebels who shoot and wound her, but the coming of some American soldiers from the camp frighten them away. She is placed in a hospital tent and when she recovers consciousness tells the American soldiers that the rebel chieftain, Alvira, has 1,000 insurrectos under his command and intends to attack the town of Discovery at once. A band of Texas rangers give battle to the Lopez band and rout them.

The military camp officers then try to send a telegram of warning to the operator at Discovery, but he fails to receive the message. Alzira and his army attack Discovery and many thrilling scenes of carnage ensue, marked by the burning of houses of Americans, the wounding and slaying of many of the people there; but while the battle between the rebels and the citizens is raging, the timely arrival of a large detachment of American soldiers results in the routing of the insurrectos; they flee pell mell for their lives.

"The Desert Rat"

Two-Reel Bison Drama—Hermit prospector takes a partner and with him strikes gold—The partner proves to be his son.

"THE DESERT RAT," a Bison drama in two reels, written by Gertrude Mason and produced by Romaine Fielding, has a heart-interest which cannot fail to hold the attention of any audience. The contrast between happiness and sorrow is always one which gains one's sympathy because it is so human. That is why, when Pete leaves his home because of an unfaithful wife, to live on the desert in lonely estate, it evokes real pathos. And at the end for the sake of his son, whom he has just found after years of hermitage, he goes out into the wilds of the desert, once more alone, leaving his boy a fortune in the shape of a productive gold mine. A sacrifice supreme, that is the theme of the picture in a nutshell.

Pete is a wanderer of the desert who has been looking for gold for many years but who has never been successful in discovering any of the precious metal. One day as he is shuffling along the sands he sees a man dying of thirst. He gives the crazed fellow some water and takes him to his camp. Here they agree to go partners on the claim.

Years before Pete had been the proud possessor of a home and family and a friend. But the friend had stolen into the home like a thief in the night and had taken what was more precious than gold, his wife's love. So Pete had left, after seeing the two in each other's arms and had gone to live on the desert.

It so happened that the young man Pete rescued was his son, as he discovered by a picture of his mother that the lad had in his pocket. But Pete does not reveal his identity.

At the edge of the desert lives Tom and his daughter Helen, who make a living by selling supplies to the passersby. One day Roy comes to buy some bread just as the girl is being attacked by a half-breed. He saves the girl and after this a love interest grows between them.

A few nights later the half-breed comes to wreak his vengeance on Roy. Pete sees him, but does not shoot quite quick enough and the half-breed succeeds in knifing Roy.

The boy is taken to the hut of Tom and there he hovers between life and death for weeks. Continually he calls for his mother and at last Pete realizes that the only way to save the boy is to send for the mother.

When the mother arrives Pete cannot stand the pain of a meeting, so he departs to the desert to live out his life in wandering penance and solitude.

"JAPAN'S GATEWAY TO THE TEMPLE OF THE GODS AS SEEN BY DR. DORSEY."

Powers Educational in One Reel.

First some of the artistic Japanese temples are shown. The Japanese people are the most artistic in the world and they make everything as beautiful as they know how. The scenery harmonizes with graceful architecture.

Some of the mountain villages are built on such rough ground that the streets are nothing more than a series of stair-cases.

Worshippers at a Shinto temple are shown. They ring a bell to warn the god of their presence. Once a year the temple relics are carried through the city and this is the occasion of great rejoicing.

Some of the rare dwarfed trees are also thrown on the screen. These trees are tended for hundreds of years by one family and are trained into artistic shapes and forms.

MOSTLY ABOUT OURSELVES

NIECE OF JEWISH MARK TWAIN WOOED AND WON IN AN HOUR.

Julius Lewis Pops Question to Miss Rabinowitz at 11:50 A. M.; Married at 12:45:

MISS ANNA RABINOWITZ, whose uncle is still mourned as "The Jewish Mark Twain," was the heroine yesterday of a get-married-quick adventure which would have delighted his readers.

At 11:40 a. m. she was not even engaged. One minute later the action of the comedy-drama began. From start to finish it rattled on like this:

He popped the question	11:50
She said, "Sure, Julius"	11:50½
Both quit work for lunch	12:00
Obtained marriage license	12:20
Married	12:45
Back at work	1 p. m.

The expeditious bridegroom, Julius Lewis, is manager of the supply department of the Universal Film Company, No. 1600 Broadway, where Miss Rabinowitz worked as a stenographer.

It was while dictating a letter to her just before the lunch hour that Lewis plucked up courage to declare himself. That Anna did not take long to make up her mind may be seen by a glance at the time-table.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Lewis in "Love's Lariat."

Joseph Brandt, general manager of the company, accompanied them in a taxicab to the City Hall for the license and then to the Rev. A. Sol Baum's house, No. 227 East Seventy-second street, where the knot was tied.

At 1 o'clock the bride was back at her desk and took dictation from the bridegroom. After their honeymoon at Asbury Park it may be settled which of the two will take dictation from the other.

This story is taken bodily from the New York American and therefore it must be so. Anyhow, Julius was satisfied and showed no disposition to sue that or any other paper which carried this story, as most of them did. The major facts are correct.

Among those present at the Murray dinner, besides Mr. and Mrs. Julius Lewis, were President Carl Laemmle of the Universal, with his two brothers, Joseph and Louis; Joe Brandt, George E. Kann, Nat. G. Rothstein.

Mr. Lewis, the bridegroom, is one of the oldest men in the film game in point of service. He started in umpteen years ago with Miles Bros., pioneers in the game, at their offices in Sixth Avenue; then "joined out" with the old Motion Picture Sales Co. and finally came to the Universal.

At the Murray dinner Br'er Joe Brandt presented Mr. Lewis with an envelope. Julius didn't know what was inside the envelope and feared to open it at first in view of the number of ladies present, but when he did so he was plum flabbergasted. The envelope contained a hundred case note from his Universal friends.

The occasion was a motor trip to College Point, where the attraction was a monster clam-bake. The boast was: "I have never run into anyone; I have never been run into; never had a puncture or a blowout; never been passed on the road or stuck on a hill; have never been warned, summoned or pinched for speeding." Pride goeth before a fall. General Manager Joe Brandt was the passenger on the trip, and served as mechanician and errand boy on the occasion of each of the four blowouts accumulated between Broadway and Long Beach.

Burton was chastened but untamed. He wouldn't cross his fingers or knock on wood. Two days later he was speeding merrily homeward to his Riverside Drive apartment; the Mercer's purring motor was music to his ears. Blind to all but the harmony of the night, the poetry of the car's swallow-like flight, he was rudely awakened when a motor cycle cop, who crept up beside Burton unheard and unseen, said: "Sorry, sir, but you are exceeding the speed limit. I'll have to ask you to explain to the judge in the morning."

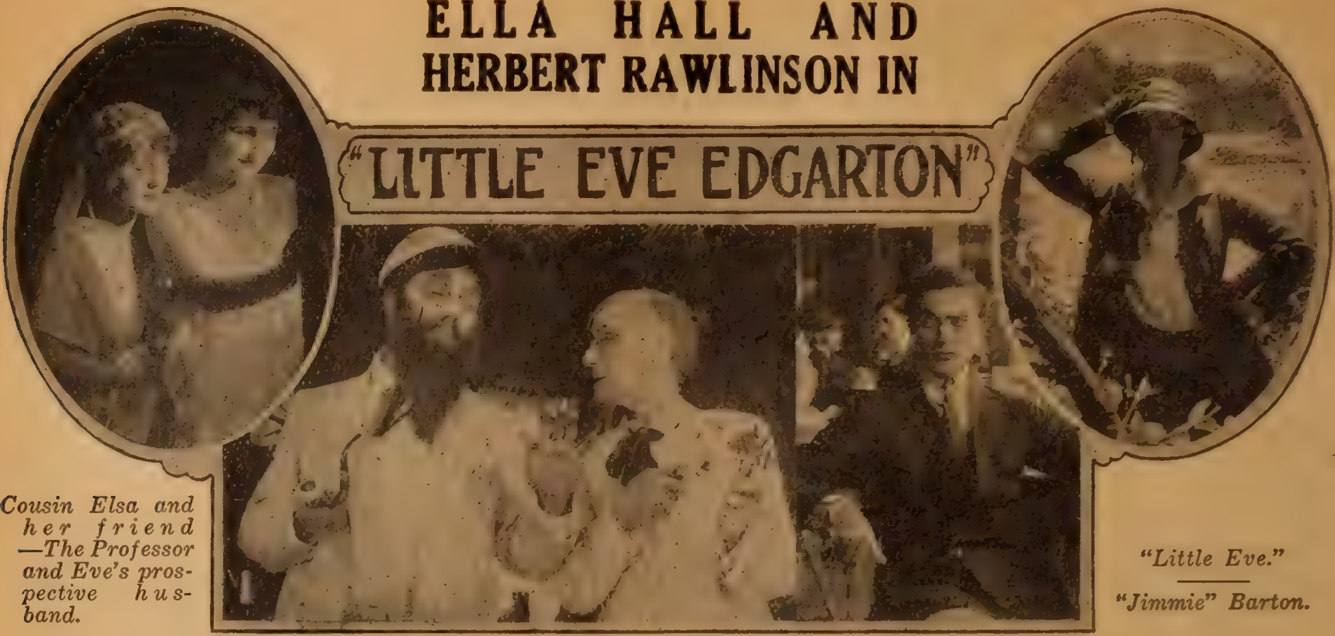
Why prolong a sad tale. Burton waited on his honor's pleasure four hours. The judge said: "The usual fine is $25. You were endangering life and limb on Fifth Avenue. Kindly hand the clerk thirty bones as you pass out. Next case," or words to that effect.

Hence the picture, cleverly executed by Harry Graf, the Red Feather artist, which, with the connivance of the Weekly editor, is now telling Burton's sorrow to a waiting world.

P. S.—Burton says he is now a member of the "N. N. T. Club." (No Next Time.)

ELLA HALL AND HERBERT RAWLINSON IN

"LITTLE EVE EDGARTON"



Cousin Elsa and her friend —The Professor and Eve's prospective husband.

"Little Eve."

"Jimmie" Barton.

"LITTLE EVE EDGARTON" is a screen version of the magazine story of the same name, which was written by Eleanor H. Abbott, and ran with much success in Everybody's Magazine. The scenario is the work of Robert Leonard, who already has several Bluebird successes to his credit, "The Crippled Hand" and "The Love Girl." Both of these photoplays, which achieved a large measure of popular favor, featured Ella Hall, the little star who is rapidly forcing her way by sheer good work to the very head of the list of photoplayers.

In "Little Eve Edgarton" she appears in a role somewhat more mature than those which have made her reputation, but the character of the strange little girl scientist who has never known the life of creatures of her age and has been reared in the musty atmosphere of learned tomes, suits the peculiar talents of the dainty star, and gives her a chance for another of those appealing studies, which make it impossible for us to forget her. In this play, she appears for the first time in the company of Herbert Rawlinson, who is perfectly fitted with the part of a giddy social butterfly, who finds the little scientist something new even in his varied experience of women. The duel between them furnishes some comedy of an unusual and very satisfactory kind, and deeper emotion comes into the story just where it is needed.

Scenically the picture is remarkable. One of the most famous hotels in California, the land of hotels, was used as a background for part of the story. The guests took the keenest interest in the picture-players, and will probably talk about the making of this picture for the rest of their lives. The thunderstorm is more thrilling than any which we remember to have seen on the screen, and the lightning is positively scary.

The story runs as follows:

Barton is stopping at a resort hotel in the mountains where he meets a rather crusty old fellow. Their conversation turns to women, and Barton deprecates the modern sort, the vapid butterflies of the social set. The old man tells him that jewels often lie at his feet undiscovered. They speak of one little plain girl at the hotel, and Barton is astonished to learn that the old man is her father. Upon this, she appears in her boyish riding suit, and informs her father that she is going for a ride. Her father suggests that Barton accompany her; he is not pleased, but cannot refuse; and, though the girl does not appear to be particularly gratified, they depart. A third horse is led by Eve, with a ladies' side-saddle, and Eve tells Barton that it is meant for the spirit of her dead mother to ride—that she never goes unaccompanied by the remembrance of her dead mother, whom she never knew.

"A curious deviation from the species," said Eve.

A plan came to her mind.

Barton finds himself in an awkward position, and discerns that Eve must have some object in view. He learns that she has been the constant companion of her father, a scientific man, and has travelled the world over in his company. Her scientific education is brilliant, but she has never found anyone who was in sympathy with her or who would allow her to be like ordinary people; she has never known anyone who has liked her for herself.

She leads Barton a merry chase over the hills, and he is almost aghast at her hoydenish manners. Finally she requests Barton to leave her and go back to the hotel. She insists, and he is forced to turn about, while she rides on with her own and the other riderless horse. A sudden thunderstorm breaks, and a sheet of lightning envelopes the scene.

When Barton comes to, he finds himself in an odd little cave, stripped to the waist and apparently paralyzed. Little Eve is arranging the pages of a wet magazine, which she had with her when they left the hotel. Seeing that Barton is conscious, she gives him a thorough massage, after the approved manner of treatment for lightning shock. He is more than interested in this little strange creature, so unconventional, so misunderstood. When the moon comes out that night, as the storm has subsided, she puts him upon the only horse left, the mother's horse, and take him back to the hotel, where his condition rapidly improves.

"Is it really you?" said Jimmie.

The next morning he goes up to pay his respects, but finds Eve and her father have gone to the mountain on a tramp after specimens. Later on, he hears several of the guests making jokes about Eve and her father, as they return from their tramp, commenting upon their "seedy" appearance. Unconsciously he feels the necessity of defending them against these creatures of convention.

That night a formal dance is given at the hotel, Barton is very popular with the fashionable ladies. Eve is strictly out of it, and remains in the seclusion of her room. The taunting sound of music and of dancing feet comes to her, and she feels a call to that which she has never known. She slips out upon the piazza and looks in through the window. She intimates to a young fellow, who comes up behind her, that she knows how to dance; but he, fearing to be embarrassed by her rather dowdy appearance, lies and tells her he wishes he could dance, too. A few minutes later she sees him pass the window, with one of the society ladies in his arms, dancing with the best of them.

An intermission is called, and a tenor sings a touching folk song. The wildness of the melody appeals to Eve, and almost unconsciously she finds herself climbing through the window to the ballroom, where she executes a weird dance. All are spellbound, and the singer breaks down; Eve rushes out, anywhere to get away. She knocks over a flowerpot which hits her on the head, and Barton and the others rush out to find her unconscious and bleeding. Barton claims the privilege of carrying her to her room, where she is cared for. He is forbidden to see her for five days, but finally he takes the matter into his own hands, and forces a call upon her.

They gradually come to an understanding of each other, as he assists her with a series of geological notes, composed principally of unpronounceable words, which Barton has never seen before.

Barton sees he is not very much in the favor of the old man, who has intended that his daughter marry a certain British Consul, interested in geology and living upon an island in the Indian Ocean.

At last a sympathetic chord is struck, and we are left to surmise that all will end happily for the couple.

OH PSHAW!

The censor he'd cut the scene,
Because a wintry breeze,
As it went whistling down the vale,
Shook limbs of naked trees.

Exhausted they fell asleep in each other's arms.

"Brennon o' the Moor"

Molly hides her lover in the loft.

BRENNON O'THE MOOR," a Universal Special Feature Drama in two reels, written and produced by the stars of "Peg O' the Ring," Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, has all the charm characteristic of the Irish people. Stories of Ireland are always delightful from the very fact of their subject matter, but when the story is one of unusual sincerity and trueness to life, as is this one, the result is worthy of special featuring on its merits.

Irish country folk are simple and straightforward, with none of the affectations of civilization about them. They are prone to judge actions right or wrong, irrespective of the decision of the law. So Willy Brennon is not branded a thief; nor is his name tainted with the stigma usually attached to highwaymen. He is just a handsome Irish lad, who is righting the wrongs that greedy landlords have done the people; and incidentally he manages to eke out a living for himself. To the stiff-necked Puritan the morality of this may seem a bit strained, but even the magistrate of a night court could not help liking and forgiving Willy Brennon if for nothing more than his whole-souled devotion to Molly Bawn.

In the early days of Irish history Willy Brennon was known as a daring adventurer and highwayman. His chief prey were the rich landlords, and he had often been known to share his booty with the poor tenants and widows in distress.

UNIVERSAL Special Feature, Two - Reel Irish Drama. Written by Grace Cunard and produced by Francis Ford. Irish "gentleman of the road," betrayed by tell-tale drops of blood, surrenders to save sweetheart.

Molly Bawn, an Irish lass, had fallen in love with the dashing highwayman and at every opportunity he would sneak into the town in which she lived and spend a pleasant hour Molly and her father lived in a house belonging to the Mayor, whose son was very much taken with Molly's ways and had often tried to win her.

One day Willy is paying a visit to the townspeople when he sees the Mayor's son coming with Molly and at once becomes jealous. He warns Jack to stay away from the Bawn house and their words lead to a fight, but afterwards they become great friends.

The Mayor bitterly hates Willy and sets the soldiers on Willy's trail so that he is forced to flee.

But Willy cannot remain away from Molly long and pays her another visit. The Mayor has seen Willy hanging about and suggests that the soldiers watch Molly's house.

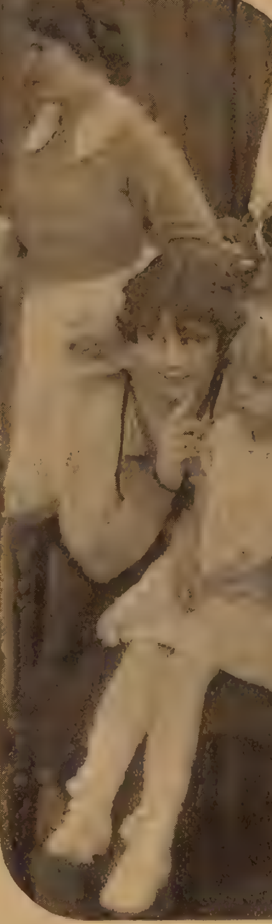
The soldiers surround the house, but Molly hides Willy so successfully they are unable to locate him.

The Mayor promises Molly that if she will give him up, she and her father will not be molested for the long overdue rent. Willy decides to sacrifice himself and surrenders himself to the soldiers. Molly manages to steal the flints from their muskets. A short time later Willy makes a break for liberty. The soldiers fire, but a dull click is the only report that is heard.

Willy finds Jack waiting for him with a saddle horse and gets away safely, and at last, through the untiring efforts of Jack, the loving couple are united and sail to America and to happiness.

"The Castle of Despair"

Alden is too busy to notice the portrait.



Neva herself.

NEVA GERBER, who is featured in "The Castle of Despair," a three-reel Gold Seal society drama produced by Ben Wilson, is one of the latest recruits in the ranks of the Universal players. But Neva is by no means a novice, as she has been acting in the movies for a long time (long for one so young). Miss Gerber has played with the American Company, with the Famous Players, Kalem, Balboa, and with one or two other companies. At present she is under the direction of Ben Wilson, who has given up acting, temporarily, in order to devote all his time to the producing end of the game. Neva is very attractive and a finished actress, as her abundant experience evidences, and she has already proved her worth to the Universal staff.

The story in very brief out line follows:

John Alden, a keen, shrewd business man, is so engrossed with the making of money and winning success that he neglects his wife, Ruth, and their small daughter, Margery. Neglects not as to worldly goods and comforts, for they have a beautiful home and many servants, but neglects as to the bigger things of life—love, and sympathy, and understanding.

His wife, Ruth, is an artist and takes great delight in her work, as well as caring for her small daughter. Comes Mortimer Morrison, a friend of the husband's—as they usually are. He is attracted to Ruth, admires and covets. She accepts his attentions, but not in the spirit in which they are offered, being loyal to her husband.

But more and more the husband neglects her—forgets his appointments with her.

Mortimer is becoming more devoted in his attentions, ever doing the thoughtful little things that the husband is too busy to think of. Ruth conscientiously tries to ignore John's neglect of her, even refusing to see Mortimer, but he, sure of himself, sensing her growing dissatisfaction with her husband's treatment of her, bides his time.

One night Ruth gives a big dinner party—it is their wedding anniversary—and Alden is so busy that he forgets all about it. But the climax is reached when he brings along Mortimer to take her to the opera after he has kept her waiting for over an hour. She consents to elope with Mortimer, and that night finds her leaving with Margery. Once aboard the train, however, she regrets what she is doing and gets off.

When Alden returns home, after completing a big deal, which places him in the class of the big men of Wall Street, he finds his home empty. For a time he is cold, hard, and cynical. But when he sees a painting done by his wife his memory will give him no peace until he has put forth every effort to find her and the baby. The detectives locate her humble dwelling and while she has gone to the art dealer's he comes and kidnaps Margery. Returning home, Ruth is frantic, but at police headquarters she is told that a lost child was taken to a certain hotel and Alden's detective offers his assistance. Alden hides, while Ruth goes to the sleeping Margery. She sees her husband and the family is again united.

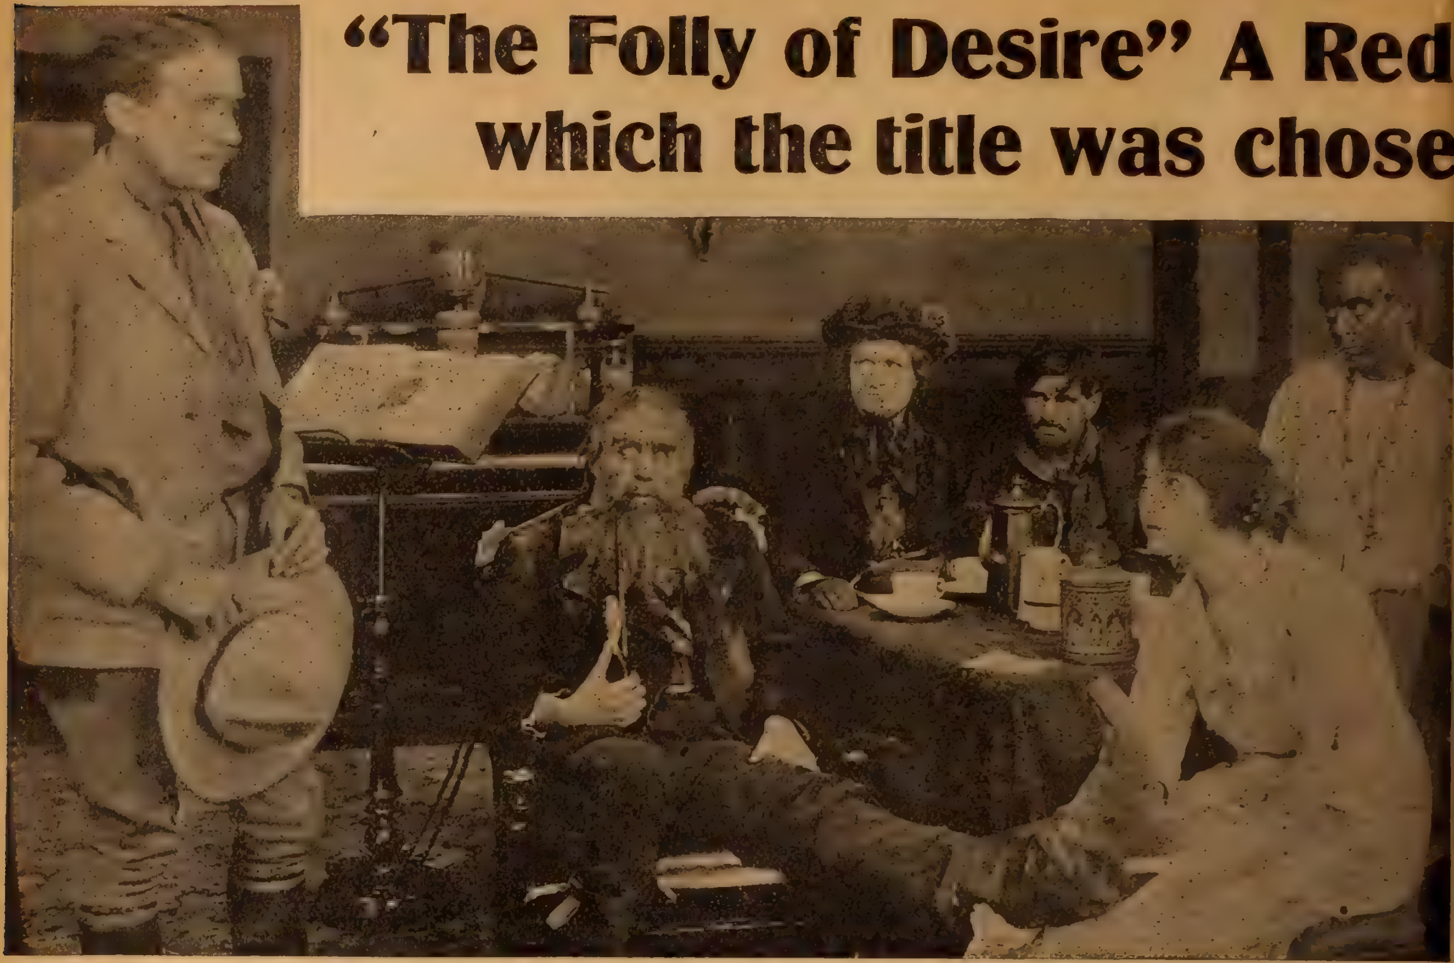
“The Folly of Desire” A Red which the title was chose



The new overseer is unaccustomed to Boer manners. Screen version of the famous play, “The Schulamite.”

MANY names, famous in the literary and theatrical world, are associated with the production of the photoplay which appears as a Red Feather under the title of “The Folly of Desire.” And the way in which it came to receive that title is the most interesting part of the story.

To begin with, the original book, called “The Shulamite,” in allusion to the beautiful woman of the Bible, whose lips were “as a thread of scarlet,” was written by the well known authors, Claude and Alice Askew. The novel was so dramatic that it could not escape the theatrical scouts, and Edward Knoblauch, one of the best of the younger playwrights, who is responsible for “Kismet,” “My Lady’s Dress,” “Discovering America,” and other Broadway successes, as well as part-author of the Arnold Bennett play, “Milestones,” was asked to dramatize the book for the English actress, Lena Ashwell. It made an excellent play, and had a long run. The story was of the kind of which we say nowadays, "That would make a corking scenario;" and in the course of time, "The Shulamite" attracted the attention of George Loane Tucker, the famous producer of that perennial Universal success, "Traffic in Souls," which has been shown in every country in the world where the motion picture screen has been introduced.

The fair Schulamite awakened love in the heart of the aged King.

It was found impossible to use the original title for the picture version, and for some time the feature went unnamed. Then one day Mr. Brandt, the general manager of the Universal, Mr. P. D. Cochrane and Mr. Paul Gulick, the editor of the Weekly, were invited to visit Sing Sing prison. They accepted and were immensely interested in the conduct of that much-discussed institution, meeting many of the men who are carrying out the schemes which cause the affairs of Sing Sing to figure so frequently in the news of the day. Among others, they made the acquaintance of Geo. W. Thompson, chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the Mutual Welfare League.

Thompson remembered that, some time ago, an inmate of the prison was the winner of the fifty dollar prize offered by the Universal Film Company for a title for a four-reeler, which was exhibited to the nation, far and wide, without a name, and for which thousands of persons sent in suggestions. The winning of the prize by a Sing Sing man had caused great interest in Universal pictures in the prison and Thompson suggested to the gentlemen that something of the sort might be attempted again.

"If he strikes you again I will kill him," said Waring.

"Very well," said Mr. Brandt. "We will send you a feature without a title and offer a small prize for the one selected by our program department."

The so-far unnamed "Shulamite" was the picture selected and a large number of suggestions were sent in, between two and three hundred titles being received. "The Folly of Desire" was the one finally chosen by the judges, and a prize of ten dollars was forwarded to the winner. In this inter-

Silas Gabb	Charles Conklin
Neva Gabb	Lillian Peacock

Amutt and Gabb meet and decide that their son and daughter shall marry to unite the families. But the young folks do not take kindly to the business of acting as cordons of love and friendship as they have never seen each other. So Nexa, who is summering in the country with Nancy Mopes, an old maid, sends her picture to the prospective bridegroom and then leaves for the city, where she takes a position in a lunch room.

Jack receives the picture and nearly passes away when he sees the awful face that he is to be hitched up to for life. The only way out for him is to get married to some one else, so he sets out to find some likely girl. By chance he meets Neva and she agrees to marry him, as a marriage will save her also. So they force a minister, who happens to come into the lunch room, to marry them.

The two fond parents are very angry when they learn that their children have not married according to their wishes, but when it is discovered that the pair have unwittingly married anyway everybody is happy except Nancy, who is still minus a husband.

“A Marriage for Revenge”

"The Heart of a Show Girl"

Ella Hall and Franklyn Farnum featured in Two-Reel Universal Special Feature, in which a captious critic unmercifully scores a willful dancing prodigy, only to lose his heart to her incognito on vacation.

Ella Hall as the dancer.

THE HEART OF A SHOW GIRL" appears on the Universal program as a special feature, and well it may, for the talent concerned in its production is of the highest order. Bess Meredyth has contributed the story, and it is one of the kind that have put Miss Meredyth among the foremost scenario writers of the country. It is she, it may be remembered, who is writing the scenarios for the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series, starring Carter De Haven. Crisp, clean and naive is this little romance of a stage child.

Ella Hall is quite a stranger in a two-reeler. Recently she had been devoting all her time to five-reel feature photoplays. She appeared in this two-reeler while another feature was being specially prepared for her use.

In "The Heart of a Show Girl" Ella plays a child part, one of the kind in which she has scored her biggest successes. Franklyn Farnum, who plays opposite Miss Hall, is one of the famous Farnum brothers, and carries his end of the production with artistic effect. It is a newcomer to the films, this being his third picture.

In short, "The Heart of a Show Girl" is one of those rare gems of production which occur when the finest talent in every department is brought together in a happy combination; a film to top the program of the most select theatres.

The story is as follows:

Elspeth Marner is a seventeen-year-old premiere danseuse—the regulation spoiled child, with a high-strung, nervous mother.

Frank Masterson is at once the most hated as well as the most respected critic of dramatic art in New York, for all of his criticism is caustic.

When the story opens, Elspeth, flushed with applause, enters her dressing room where her mother and the maid rush to do her bidding.

The next morning, in bed, Elspeth reads his scathing criticism; that her real name is doubtless Lizzie Schmitt; that she is spoiled and petulant and not at all a lady, etc. Elspeth is furious, hysterical, angry and her mother, after telephoning Masterson to tell him her opinion of him, calls in the doctor. He sees that it is only a case of jaded nerves and in spite of the mother's protestations, orders the girl away, alone.

Elspeth is sent to the seashore and placed in charge of some simple fisher folk. At first, Elspeth is inclined to be willful and very trying but gradually the kindliness of Mother Burnes wins her over.

Franklyn Farnum as the great critic.

CAST.

Elspeth Marner	Ella Hall
Frank Masterson	Franklyn Farnum

Meantime, to get away from the confusion of the city life, Masterson, incognito, takes a small fishing shack at the sea shore, and is spending a most enjoyable, care-free vacation.

The two meet—and neither recognizes the other. Together they enjoy the wondrous beauty of the sea. The friendship ripens—each discovers himself becoming younger, happier, gayer until on a fishing trip one day, when Elspeth is almost drowned, they realize that they are madly in love with each other. But arriving at the Justice of the Peace's office, they, for the first time, learn the other's true identity; there is defiance, hesitation, petulance for a time. And then all ends happily.

GIFT RING FOR KERRIGAN.

J. Warren Kerrigan was in receipt of a unique gift this week—a gunmetal ring with a Hindu inscription, from a young woman admirer living in Calcutta. She had seen his pictures, "A Son of the Immortals" and "The Pool of Flame," in which he is starred, and felt she would like to express the pleasure his acting had afforded her by sending him an East Indian ring, the wearing of which, according to Oriental belief, would bring him all kinds of good luck.

CAST.

Jeremiah Fogie	Max Asher
Lillian, his daughter	Gale Henry

IF ever surprise, astonishment, wonder and bewilderment were written on anyone's face it was on the face of the dignified, elderly gentleman with old-fashioned telescope valise as he stands in the midst of a band of busy office employes in the accompanying picture. And there is plenty of reason for it.

In fact, almost anyone would be at least mildly astonished if he should leave his place of business with a few incompetent, lazy employees, and, returning within two weeks, find that he was the head of a firm employing a whole roomful of real workers who have enough to keep them busy every minute. That is what is taking place in the illustration. Jeremiah Fogie, after a two weeks' absence from his run-down shoe factory, where business was so poor it could not keep his few employes busy, has returned to find them all working overtime.

This is only one of scores of logical, side-splitting situations that occur in Allen Curtis' production of "You Want Something." The story is a riot of laughter. It is perfect from a technical standpoint; its situations are well worked out. In all of them there is a laugh and in most of them a roar.

Jeremiah Fogie, a shoe manufacturer, has made money in the past, but his business methods do not pull trade these days as they once did. He is advised right and left to advertise, but considers it a waste of money. Tom Hustle, young advertising agent, is in love with Lillian, Foige's daughter. Fogie resents Tom's criticisms of his business methods and frowns at the love affair between the young people. Fogie's drummer, Silas Slowboy, comes back from the road, discouraged and without orders. In rage Fogie declares he will go out on the road and sell shoes to prove advertising is not necessary.

Before going Fogie promises Tom his daughter's hand if the latter proves advertising pays. Fogie meets with no success on the road. He meets a widow who interests him greatly, however. Meanwhile Tom changes the brand of "Fogie" shoes to "Anti-Skid." He pulls all the strings at his command advertising "Anti-Skids" broadcast. They sell like hot cakes. Fogie meets "Anti-Skids" in every nook and thinks it is a rival shoe. He comes home broken, but is overcome when he sees the factory working full blast once more and finds out that "Anti-Skids" are of his own manufacture.

Fogie gladly gives Tom his daughter's hand and command of business. Later the interesting widow is brought into old Fogie's life permanently.

"You Want Something" was awarded the $100 prize offered by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The original script has been considerably revised and put into technical shape by Staff Writer C. G. Badger. While it is of a purely advertising nature, as required by the Advertising Clubs, its picture interest will admirably suit it to any program.

GITTENS MADE SCREEN EDITOR.

WINDHAM GITTENS arrived at Universal City this week, having been sent to the Coast by Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis to serve in the capacity of screen editor for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. As screen editor, Gittens will co-operate with Eugene B. Gittens has had a long experience in the film world, and Vice-President Davis considers him a valuable acquisition to the Big U organization.

"THE PANEL GAME"

Harkness pays the bill. Vincent recruits his accomplice.

"THE PANEL GAME," a two-reel drama, written and produced by Jacques Jaccard, who is at present making such a success of the current serial, "Liberty," is a gem of real life. No stars are featured, but the play is admirably acted, and the production proceeds so smoothly that it is hard to realize that it is only a paly after all.

The plot centres about a blackmail scheme known as "the panel game," which is worked on unsuspecting men all over the country more often than the police are willing to admit. Most of the victims never inform the police, fearing the publicity. And this is how it is done:

Vincent Lee is a crook. In pursuit of business, he arrives at the beach with the regular summer crowd. Lee is accompanied by his "valet," one "Shifty, a typical product of the streets.

Nan Larson is another who lives by her wits. Lee sees her plying her trade and invites her up to his room to talk business. He suggests she join him in a partnership. where they can pull down real money, and she accepts.

JACCARD is a master of the accurate portrayal of human experience. It is not always "nice," but it is real. In this two-reel Imp Drama, written and produced by him, he sketches a blackmail scheme which might happen in any summer hotel, for blackmailing is the great American crime.

CAST.

Vincent Lee	G. Raymond Nye
Nan	Roberta Wilson
Shifty	Si Clegg
The New Maid	Peggy Coudray
Jonathan Harkness	Walter Belasco
His Wife	Helen Wright

Jonathan Harkness and his wife, typical country people, are stopping at the hotel.

In carrying out their new plans, Nan is established in the hotel with a maid and soon blossoms forth. Vincent scrapes acquaintance with Harkness and one day while he and Harkness are talking Nan nonchalantly strolls by and speaks to Vincent. Harkness is interested.

Harkness is willing to be led along and Nan uses her art on him. At last one night he tells his wife that he is not sleepy and will remain in the lobby to smoke and talk. He then calls up Nan's apartment and begs her to let him come up for a while.

Harkness is admitted to the room, which is closed. He complains of the heat and Nan naively suggests he remove his coat. At first he demurs, but finally does so. At this point Lee returns to Nan's room on an errand and discovers them. Vincent suggests that it would be fine to tell Mrs. Harkness of her husband's presence in the room, and the victim, glad to get out, is stung to the tune of $1,000 for the silence of Lee. He returns to his room, having learned a never-to-be-forgotten lesson.

"A THOUSAND A WEEK"

Timothy ousts the hero and plays the role as he thinks it should be played.

UNIVERSAL Special Feature Comedy in Two Reels. Written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery. Timothy, as an extra, knows he is good. He tries to star, but directors conspire to keep him down.

CAST.

Timothy Dobbs	Carter De Haven
Jeff (Jenkins)	Robert Milash
Mary	Vola Smith
The Emperor	Gilmore Hammond
The Leading Lady	Ruby Cox
Roman Hero	C. Norman Hammond

IN this, the second of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series, written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery, our hero, Timothy, continues on his way to glory via the motion picture route. But he is not a disciple in the old school that held that virtue was rewarded in the end or anything of that sort. He is a firm believer in the doctrine that if people do not notice your merit, make them. So, as he knows he can act, he sees no reason why he should not let the director know it. His official capacity in the studio is as extra, but that does not hinder Timothy from proving his talent. And before he gets through he sees the manager after him; after him it is true, but not with a contract in his hand. Rather in the literal sense of the term, and had it not been for the redoubtable Jeff they might have caught up to him, and then the series would have had an unexpected and premature close.

Don't be too impatient with Timothy if his weakness was an enormous conceit. Most anyone who stands behind a soda fountain all day and lets admiring females murmur their admiration to one's very face might, after a long enough time of listening, discover that they have just a tiny bit of the talent that is attributed to them. That was what happened to Timothy, although in his later years, or perhaps better say later episodes, he has occasion to rue bitterly this youthful credulity.

But this is telling the story backward. What happened in episode two, "A Thousand a Week," follows:

In the preceding episode Timothy shook the dust of Centerville from his feet and was on his way to the movie camp. After an uneventful trip he arrives in California, attended by Jeff, now called Jenkins.

Timothy believes that the operator at his home town, being jealous of his popularity, has held up the messages and this accounted for their failure to accord him a rousing welcome. While Timothy has only $100 to his name, he decides that he will have the best, and accordingly is driven to one of the biggest hotels in the city.

After a good long rest Timothy and Jenkins set out for one of the large studios. He meets the hard-hearted gateman, who refuses to acknowledge ever having heard of such a celebrity as Timothy and is unable to pass him inside. After strolling about the grounds he finally meets a line of men who are awaiting to get in and work extra. From their talk he learns that they hold tickets that will admit them to the "promised land." He offers one of the men $2 for his ticket and the man almost has heart failure hurrying to take the offer.

The extra people are cast for work in a Roman picture. Timothy is given a room with a number of others and they are very much amused when he orders them out of his dressing room, pretending that he is a star. They are just about to mob him when the crowd is broken up by the gateman, who hurries them all on the stage.

The action is started and the extras told how to carry their parts. But the director's theory of how to carry out the scene and that of Timothy's were not the same. Naturally the director's idea was to have the hero rescue the heroine. Timothy being quite confident in his powers, decides to play the hero himself and the director has one spasm after another in trying to start the picture right. At last the scene is about finished. The extra men rush in and the hero starts "killing" them. Timothy will not die in spite of the curses and pleadings of the director and his assistants for him to die. At last he does die, and with a sigh of relief the director and his men start for Timothy with blood in their eyes.

Jenkins has seen the way things are happening and valiantly comes to the rescue. He picks Timothy up bodily and carries him to safety.

Hard work.

Dining at the Waldorf.

THIRD episode of the Universal Special Feature Comedy series, "Timothy Dobbs — That's Me." In two reels. Written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery—In which Timothy, for the sake of eats and sleeps, does a Romeo to the Landlady's Juliet, with a little elko on the side.

CAST.

Timothy Dobbs........Carter De Haven
Jeff..................................Robert Milash
The Landlady..........Margaret Whistler

"TIMOTHY, how could you?" That's right. How could he? But that argues that you don't know Timothy as well as we do. There is nothing remarkable about Timothy's adventure in this number of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series, written by Bess Meredyth and produced by Wallace Beery. That is, nothing remarkable to one who has made this young man's acquaintance in the first episode of the series. Timothy, in the person of Carter De Haven, can do absolutely anything. His nerve and self esteem are sufficient for all emergencies. As a soda clerk he was a wonder and none of the girls could resist him. He knew he could act, so he decided to give the public the benefit of his talent. Hence episode two, where Timothy breaks into the movies. He breaks in in more ways than one and almost succeeds in breaking up the whole show.

And now Timothy continues his adventures in the movies and tries his hand at the gentle art of making love. Timothy proves a past master. He picks out as his subject one of the most beautiful old maids in captivity, his choice being dictated by necessity. Of course she was no Lillian Russell. Any one who could make love convincingly to a face like Mrs. Neverketchem's must be "some" lovemaker.

Timothy can also do an L-Ko. This is not quite so much to his taste as the handsome hero parts, but he can do them if he elects to try. Does he succeed? In Timothy's dictionary there is a blot over the word, failure.

Timothy has just returned from an unsuccessful visit to one of the well known studios. With the funds gone, Timothy and Jeff are forced to secure new quarters and they end up at a second-rate boarding house run by an old maid.

She threatens to put them into the streets if they don't pay up, and Timothy, realizing their predicament, decides to use flattery to prolong their stay in the house.

He makes love to the old maid in a gallant manner and wins her consent to have them remain a little longer. The landlady is transported to a new heaven of delight over the ardent love making of the handsome boarder.

He learns that at one of the comedy companies men are wanted to act. The next day he and Jeff hurry to the studio.

At last Timothy gets in and is given an extra part as one of the cops. He has a rough and tumbled time. In a chase he finally falls out of the automobile and is dragged through the streets. Jeff sees Timothy as the car passes and sets out in pursuit.

Were it not for a fortunate sandpile, poor Timothy would be dragging yet. But he is stopped very suddenly and when Jeff comes hurrying up, all that can be seen of Timothy is his feet sticking out, the balance of him being covered with sand. Jeff rescues him and the two friends sadly return to the boarding house.

The old maid sees her gallant lover all bruised and bleeding and bandages him up. Timothy comes to and sees the old maid sitting beside him. He frantically pleads with Jeff to take him away, even to the studio, anywhere to be away from his persistent admirer.

Big U Drama.

Written by George E. Marshall and W. B. Pearson.
Produced by George E. Marshall.

CAST.

Vera Browning	Olive Fuller Golden
"Shifty"	Harry Carey
"Snake" Matthews	Joe Rickson

"Snake" Matthews is the leader of a notorious gang of outlaws. "Shifty" is the laughing stock of the bunch and never has he been known to strike back or resent anything. The gang plan a particularly bold hold-up of the stage, as there are rumors that a large shipment of bullion is on the way. "Shifty" is among those who are to protect the hold-up men.

Vera Browning is returning home after a several years' stay in the city. When the stage is held up "Snake" at once finds an interest in her and after looting the stage takes her with them to their camp. He orders "Shifty" to cover their trail and the gang set out.

Upon arrival at the camp "Snake" is surprised to find "Shifty" has followed them. For some unknown reason "Shifty" finds that the girl appeals to him in a way that he has never felt before and could not refrain from following her. He is impressed with the look of fear on the girl's face and determines to watch "Snake." A short time later he hears a terrific struggle and enters the room to find the girl struggling with the drunken bully. Her appealing look touches him and he knocks the man out. Securing two horses, he and the girl set out for the town. The others pursue and seeing that they will be overtaken, "Shifty" sends the girl on ahead while he stays and meets the boys. There is a short, sharp fight, terminating when "Shifty" runs out of ammunition. Seeing he has no chance, "Shifty" makes a swift drive at "Snake" and the two go over the cliff.

The Husband	Reggie Morris
The Wife	Gertrude Selby
The Jilted Man	Kitty Howe

Reggie was a fortunate man and the ceremony was being duly performed and everything going fine, but just about the finish there happened to appear on the scene an old suitor of Gertie's, accompanied by a minister ready to tie the knot for him.

Gertie was called away and the ardent suitor was about to make a bigamist of Gertie before she knew what was happening. But she tartly told the old suitor that he was too late; first come, first served. The old suitor hied himself to the brewery and went home with an overload of the brewer's best. This placed him in no frame of mind to forget the jilting he received.

Reggie's father in the meantime telegraphed his beloved son that he was on his way with an Eugenic bride for him. So Gertie had to disguise as a boy to be near her hubby and the Eugenic bride-to-be fell desperately in love with Gertie.

The jilted suitor by this time had gathered enough strength and courage to start on the warpath and Gertie, in trying to elude the fair maiden, ran amuck of the jilted suitor, who took a few shots at her. Things for a while looked rather dubious for Gertie, but love always triumphs and her great love for Reg in the end had to be rewarded.

Mac	Rich MacAllister
Billy	Billy Armstrong
Charlie	Charles Insley
Gertrude	Gertrude Douglas

This isn't the regulation story of a man and a girl, but something much more interesting—three men and one girl.

Mac was the proverbial sailor, "A Sweetheart in Every Port," but really one had to admire his choice in this port. Standing on the wharf one day with her, dreaming of the time when she would say "Yes," he was discovered by Charlie, his boss. It did not take long for Charlie to show Mac his place and immediately ordered him to the boat.

The next day Billy, another one of Gertrude's suitors, begged her father for her hand, but instead of Gertrude's hand he received her father's foot. Father made it emphatic that unless he got a job he needn't come around.

The only job Billy could see in sight was Mac's, but how was he to get it? He finally coaxed Gertrude to flirt with Mac in order to make him neglect his job and then he would persuade Charlie, the boss, to give him Mac's job. Gertrude was very successful in making Mac neglect his job, and Charlie decided Billy could have it. Billy, only having the job two hours, thought he would like to take Gertrude for a ride and, losing his temper while he is out with her, throws her into the water. Mac, on shore, heartsick, seeing her struggling, lost no time in rescuing her.

Fatty leaves his country home to go to the city and bids a sad farewell to his folks.

Bess, who lives in the city with her mother and her father, who is a detective, takes a novel and goes to the park to read, where she strikes up a flirtation with Fatty.

The father goes to his office, while the mother purchases a watch as a birthday present for him, but she is seen by a crook, who follows her. When she stops in the park to rest, he gets the watch.

On his way out of the park, the crook passes Fatty and sells him the stolen watch. The crook then tries to flirt with Bess but is thrown out by Fatty, who has fallen in love at first sight, and is invited to Bess' home, after he has made her a present of the watch.

When Bess and Fatty enter the house, the mother is out in the hall telephoning her husband of the loss, and he starts home immediatley.

Bess leaves Fatty while she shows her mother the watch he gave her. The mother recognizes the watch and starts for Fatty, being joined later by her husband. The crook sees an open window in the living room and is about to enter, when Fatty, still chased by the father and mother, jumps through the window and they go down in a heap. Fatty knocks out the crook, explains everything, and learns that he receives a thousand dollar reward for his capture of the desperate criminal.

Eddie	Eddie Lyons
Lee	Lee Moran
Girl	Priscilla Dean
Father	Fred Gamble

Eddie, calling on his girl, hears her father state that he needs the great Majah ruby to complete his collection. Eddie leaves and comes to store, where he sees a big ruby. He buys the ruby and goes home, where he gets Lee to impersonate a Hindu jewel vendor. They then go to the girl's house, where father treats Lee with great respect.

Meantime a real Hindu, looking much like Lee in his disguise, has learned that the cheap ruby Eddie bought is the genuine article, and he has followed the boys. He gets in the house and suddenly comes face to face with Lee. The Hindu knocks Lee out and takes his place at the banquet table. Lee, recovering, gets into a mess in the antique room, and the crowd rush in to see the trouble, leaving the Hindu and the girl alone. The Hindu now tries to get the ruby. Lee comes in and the Hindu is forced to run. He leaps out a window and hides in bushes outside. The girl explains what has happened. Lee walks into the trouble and is accused of attacking the girl. Lee runs, the crowd after him.

The chase leads back to the room, where Eddie is consoling the girl, and here Lee is cornered. He is trying to make himself understood, when the real Hindu returns, and is caught by Eddie.

Eddie now learns the truth and the situation is explained to the girl's father, who is grateful for having the ruby saved, and the Hindu is taken away, while Lee is left to congratulate Eddie and the girl.

A Suitor	Ed. Brady

Arthur Botts thinks he is in love with Sibly Grey, but he is really in love with her money. She has another suitor, but he does not count in Arthur's plan. He announces to Sibly that he is going to marry her and she is willing; but not so is father, who is of a commercial frame of mind. So Arthur is turned down. The girl tries to cheer him, afraid he might kill himself—which gives Arthur an idea.

He later writes her a note telling her he is going to die, but when it comes to deciding how, Arthur hesitates.

Contemplating all this, Arthur visits the shop of a chemist who thinks he has produced a deadly poison for which there is no antidote. He is trying it out on a dog and feels confident that it will work—but it takes three days for the effect to be consummated. Arthur takes the poison unknown to the chemist.

Then he reads in the paper that he has been left a large sum of money by a relative. So does Sibly's father, and the latter calls Arthur, telling him that he has changed his mind about having him for a son-in-law. Arthur is heartbroken, but it all turns out right when, three days later, he sees the little doggie running about the streets. The poison is a failure.

"SONG OF THE WOODS."

Written by Olga Printzlau.
Produced by Clifford Elfelt.

CAST.

Leafy	Vola Smith
Joe	G. Raymond Nye
Old Tim Dorman	Marc Robbins
Rosa	Vola Smith
Ralph Lane	Charles Gunn

Leafy is a wild little woodland girl, who lives with her father, Old Jim Dorman. Joe, a young woodsman, is her sweetheart, and old Jim sanctions their love.

Then Ralph Lane comes fishing on a vacation, and sets his tent up the stream. One day he spies Leafy splashing in the deep little pool with only her long hair about her and is startled at the sight. He follows her and makes her acquaintance. The attraction betwene them is mutual, and many secret meetings follow.

It finally reaches the stage where shep romises to elope with him.

Joe, in the meanwhile, is filled with bitterness. On the night of the elopement he starts out to kill Lane. But this is not necessary, as she realizes what she is doing and comes home before any harm has been done. But Jim is offended and will not see her.

Then Old Jim Dorman makes him sit down, and tells him of how, years ago, he once loved and married a young woodland girl. She jilted him but he still loved and waited for her patiently. One stormy night, a year later, he was startled at a noise and opened the door to find a little bundle on the step. It was a baby.

The following day, after he had crooned the babe to rest, he found his sweetheart in the pool—dead. A rudely constructed little cross on a mound is all that is left, and Jim Dorman takes the two young lovers there and shows them the cross. Here he begs them to love each other and benefit by his sorrowful experience. The lovers kiss and leave him at the cross.

STILL MAKING COMEDIES.

Two of the oldest men in point of service at Universal City are Allen J. Curtis, director of the Universal Joker Company, and Joe Murphy, his assistant.

Once a week Curtis creates a laugh-producer for the public, and he leans largely upon Murphy to attend to the details of the comedy in hand.

Murphy started at Universal City five years ago at three dollars a day, and has worked himself up by industry and real ability to the position he now holds.

"The Right Car But the Wrong Berth"

L-KO KOMEDY in two reels. Dan Russell railroaded from suit shop to eternity. The draw bridge draws and Dan ascends like a Fourth of July balloon. All from entering a ladies' berth—by mistake. And he was trying to escape from the lady's husband, too.

CAST.

Mr. Cowbull	Dan Russell
The Lady	Katherine Griffith
Her Husband	Vin Moore

"THE RIGHT CAR BUT THE WRONG BERTH" is an L-KO Komedy in two reels. Yes, L-KO is the picture's proper name, although it is one of the funniest things that the mind of man has ever invented; funnier even than the caprice of nature; funnier even than—but it is no use. The humor of an L.-KO cannot be described in words. It just ripples and runs, and finally crashes to a whirlwind finish.

Dan Russel as a floor-walker is a failure, but as a lady-killer he thinks he is right there. A floor-walker should be the epitome of solemnity. Dan is far from being solemn. He is so funny in the part that he made the cameraman laugh, and this is a feat remarkable in the realm of the studio.

All aboard! L-KO special to the land of mirth.

The duties of a floorwalker should stop at showing ladies the right counters, but Mr. Cowbull let his duties go further. Unfortunately, a lady's nasty-tempered husband thought otherwise regarding dressmaking shops. Mr. Cowbull did not heed, however, until matters reached such an unpleasant state that he was told that he had five minutes to get out of town.

He was perfectly sincere in wishing to escape, but unluckily husband picked out the same train. Mr. Cowbull jumped on a mail catcher to save his life, but the mail catcher threw him back again into a ladies' berth. where gentlemen are not supposed to be. The husband was not supposed to be there, either, but he was, and so was the conductor and so was the porter and so was a flirt-hater.

All picked out the top of the train for the exercising grounds. The train had to be in the great city on time and couldn't stop for a mere killing. This made running on top even more unpleasant and Mr. Cowbull ran from one end to the other or until he caught on a bridge. The husband, however, also caught on the bridge but neither one knew that this bridge was a drawbridge and went up 250 feet.

How drawbridges, trains, steamboats, hand cars, and flying machines could all meet in one spot and not get mixed up any worse than they did is a problem.

MENDEL JOINS UNIVERSAL.

DESERTING the vaudeville stage, where he has been a well known figure for a great many years, Jules Mendel has joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and will appear in comedies with Al Frank, another well-known actor.

The comedian will be directed by M. L. Forrester, with Viola Lind as leading lady. They will start work on a one-reel comedy.

Mary Fuller in "The Trail of Chance"

BISON Two-Reel Drama, produced by Lucius Henderson and adapted by Catherine Carr from the story by Amy Vorhaus. Mistaken identity almost leads to tragedy; averted by wit of back woods girl.

CAST.

Bill Brown	A. G. Corbel
Becky, his daughter	Mary Fuller
Richard Stanton	John Walker
Ben Callahan	Joseph W. Girard
Tommy	Andy Clark

"THE TRAIL OF CHANCE," a Bison two-reel drama, produced by Lucius Henderson, shows Mary Fuller at her best. In a plot where love and hate and mistaken identity all are important elements, Mary furnishes the quiet note of innocence and repose. This is exactly what Mary can do best, as it is her charm that has placed her at the topmost rung of the ladder that leads to fame in the moving picture field.

Mary Fuller has won her place, not by the many stunts she has performed, because she herself says that she does not very often attempt this kind of work. It has all been due to the fact that in the movies Mary is her own sweet self, and being that, no one could help but admire her. She began her sareer as a singer, but soon sought the stage. From the stage it is not such a big leap to the motion picture field, as the great number of legitimate stars who are forsaking the older art to try the new, bear witness.

But all this happened years ago. Since then Mary has appeared in all sorts of roles, from Mary Tudor to the Princess Zuleika. She has had her share of the proverbial thrills of the movies also, and has been set upon by bloodhounds, escaped down ropes and raced in high-powered automobiles with the best of them. She has even tried to write her own scenarios, although she herself admits that they have not been eagerly sought by the producers. But all of these facts are incidental, for the real secret of Mary's success is Mary herself. It has come because she represents the ideal of American girlhood and womanhood.

The plot of the picture, written by a newcomer to the films, is an excellent one and the production by Lucius Henderson leaves nothing to be desired in the line of clarity or artistic production.

It all happened on account of a letter that Tommy, the mail boy, forgot to deliver to Bill Brown. Bill went away on a short trip and while he was away things began to happen.

Shortly after he left Ben tried to make love to Becky, Bill's daughter, but the little lady informed him in very decided terms that she had no ambitions to be Mrs. Callahan. Then a young stranger arrived, who told Becky that her father knew all about him, so she said that he could take the cabin in the woods till her father came back. As the days passed they grew to love each other and Ben became very jealous.

Stanton meets Becky.

Then came from the near-by city a notice saying that a certain Richard Stanley was wanted for a murder, giving a description that fitted Stanton. When Becky found this out she was very much worried and sent Tommy to warn her lover of his danger.

Stanton, seeing that there was no way to prove his identity, tried to get away and hid in some near-by bushes. But by accident the men fired some shots and one found its way into the bushes, wounding Dick. With much pain and toil he finally managed to drag himself to Becky's cottage and she hid him in the attic. The sheriff and his men, not finding Dick at his hut, went to Becky's cabin to look for him. They were on the point of leaving without having found him when some tell-tale drops of blood, dripping down from above, gave him away. So Dick was captured and the men in their anger decided to lynch him. Beck pleaded in vain, so as they took him away she sent Tommy for her father.

Tommy rode as hard as he could and met Bill on the way home. Now he remembered the letter which he had forgotten to give Bill and when he opened it Bill read that Dick was a government forest expert. Hard and fast they rode to save an innocent man and succeeded in arriving just as Dick was about to be hung. After all the explanations were made Dick was freed and Ben, foiled in his attempt on Dick's life, retired to safer parts.

CLEO'S SISTER VERY ILL.

Cleo Madison's invalid sister, Helen, has been returned to her home after a trying time with appendicitis at the hospital.

The Universal star's sister, who has been an invalid for the past eight years, was seized suddenly with the affliction and was ordered post-haste by the family physician to the hospital. An operation was performed the same day, and for a time there was some doubt as to the outcome. After forty-eight hours, however, the phvsician assured the anxious parents and sister of the stricken girl that all danger had passed.

"The Call of the Past"

Two-Reel Imp Underworld Drama without the usual conventional ending. Somebody pays.

"THE CALL OF THE PAST," a two-reel Imp underworld drama written by Harvey Gates and produced by Chas. Mack and William Lowery, is not the stereotyped crook melodrama. In the average play of this kind the crook easily eludes the toll of the law and escapes with some girl to live a life of angelic purity and goodness ever afterward. But this is not the way it happens in real life. As a rule somebody pays for misdeeds outside the movies, and in "The Call of the Past" somebody pays, although it is not the guilty man. Some people have based a theory of art on the fact that true art should be an exact reproduction of life. Most people will not go this far, but all agree that an utter absurdity cannot be truly artistic.

The production of the picture is very well handled by the joint directors. There is plenty of punch without its being injected physically.

The cast includes William Lowery, who plays the male lead, the part of a criminal who meets a sweet country girl and reforms after his friend makes a great sacrifice to save him from the consequences of his last "job." The female lead is taken by Agnes Vernon, who has been with the Universal Company for so long and played in so many pictures that she does not need any introduction to the moving picture fans. She is at her best in just this kind of a role, a sweet country girl. Agnes has beautiful blonde hair and a quiet, refined manner which, combined with an indescribable charm, make her altogether delightful as a screen artist.

Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Chas. Mack and William Lowery.

CAST.

Donohoe	Wm. Lowery
John Logan	Kingsley Benedict
"Squint" Duffy	Frank Brownlee
Mary Phagan	Agnes Vernon

The plot in very brief form follows:

Donohoe, the leader of a band of crooks, takes a vacation in the country and there meets Mary Phagan. The two marry, without her knowing the kind of a chap he is, as he assumes another name.

Donohoe decides to make one more haul and then settle down to the right kind of a life. So he leaves for the city and gets in touch with his confidant, John Logan. His friends are all delighted to see him.

"Squint" Duffy, a detective, is promised promotion if he can land Donohoe. Duffy knows Logan and tips him off that he has a "sucker." Donohoe and the gang decide to fleece him and rig up a fake pool room. He is caught and a fight ensues in which Donohoe shoots and kills one of the stool-pigeons and makes his escape.

Later Mary's grandmother dies and Mary goes to the city to seek work—and her husband. In the tenement house where she lives she meets Logan and they become good friends.

After a year or so, Donohoe obtains Mary's address from the postmaster and seeks her—but she is not at home when he arrives; when she and Logan come in he hides behind the door and surprises her, but not as much as he does Logan. Donohoe signals for him not to give him away, as Mary knows nothing of his past life.

"Squint" Duffy has been watching Mary and Logan for some time and now makes a call. He is surprised to see Donohoe and tells Mary that he is wanted at headquarters. Logan decides that he will sacrifice himself for his friend—and also because he loves Mary; he insists that he is the one who killed the stool, and so Donohoe is free to live an honest life.

FIRST SCENE ON NEW STAGE MADE BY LYONS AND MORAN

BEFORE the completion of the huge new stage at Universal City a spirited competition was entered into among the various comedy companies over the right to initiate it by making the first picture. Finally lots were drawn, and as a result Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with their company of players under the direction of Louis Chaudet began making a comedy while carpenters still worked around them. They filmed a scene of the one-reel comedy, "The Terrible Turk."

powered cars is simply ridiculous, and makes me mad," she says, with the brown eyes sparkling. "I have driven over every boulevard in southern California and over most of the mountain roads as well. And I have never had a hint of trouble, except the time that a man ran deliberately into me, when I was sitting quietly in my car at a street corner. Southern California is simply ideal for the motorist. The roads are so fine and there are so many of them.

"I have found a new use for my car. I use it as a dressing-room when I want to go in swimming. I love to drive out along the Malibu road, where the scenery is so gorgeous, and then draw up in a particularly lovely spot and go in for a swim. Then I motor back again in the cool of the evening, all refreshed and rested from the work of the day."

On Decoration Day, Miss Dean was invited with many another motion picture beauty to take part in the automobile fashion parade at Ascot Park which was a feature of the celebration this year. All the stars drove in line in their beautifully decorated cars. Miss Priscilla was there in her Buick, which was almost hidden by roses. She was far more surprised than any one else when she was awarded the cup for receiving the greatest applause from the crowd. In addition to this trophy, the Ventura Refining Company also presented her with a "Rose Cup," a huge silver affair, filled to the brim with the flower with which her machine was covered.

Her other Nestor releases so far are "The Battle of Chile Con Carne," in which she wears the becoming garb of a Spanish-American, and "Broke but Ambitious." Admirers of the Nestor comedies (and their name is legion), who are also connoiseurs of feminine beauty, will wish that Miss Dean's connection with the company may last forever.

LIBERTY" THIRD EPISODE.

Lopez, finally coming to a place of safety in his flight, berates his fellow bandits for their failure to withstand the attacks of the rangers.

Liberty, having recovered somewhat, is able to ride with an armed escort, to her late father's hacienda, and here she seeks recreation during her recovery. Major Winston, one of the guardians of Liberty, gambles heavily, and gives notes of his indebtedness of the total of $20,000.00. José Leon, the other guardian of Liberty, has a son, Manuel, who desires to wed Liberty, and so the father and son plot to use the gambling notes against Winston to try to force him to agree to the prospective marriage of Liberty and Manuel.

Liberty, whose sweetheart is an American army officer, Captain Rutledge confers with him, and they pledge affection to each other. Jose taunts Major Winston about his betrayal of his duty as guardian in losing money belonging to Liberty, but the latter refuses to comply with Jose's demands.

DETROIT NEWS.

By FRED T. GRENELL.

BERT M. GRAHAM, of the Detroit Universal sales forces, sprang a surprise on all his competitors last week when he signed up two vaudeville houses on Monroe avenue for the Universal program. As the Universal has been supplying the Columbia, the competitor of the other two, for the last two years, his feat in making Universal unanimous has brought him many congratulations.

The new Drury Lane Theatre, Detroit's latest amusement venture in the business district, opened last Saturday. The policy calls for a daily change of program, with Universal pictures and features occupying three days each week.

"What John Wanamaker Would Do!"

By H. S. HODES.

WITH "What Wanamaker Would Do!" the Moving Picture Weekly presents the first of a series of talks on Direct Advertising. Further articles dealing with the writing of circular letters, exhibitor follow-up systems, etc., will appear from time to time.

All letters pertaining to Direct Advertising will be gladly ananswered on this page.

ONE of the most hopeful signs of the coming of a more prosperous era in the exhibiting end of this industry, is the realization by wide-awake exhibitors that their problems and the problems that confront merchants in all other fields are identical.

The man who sells motion picture entertainment to the public must, like his brothers who sell any sort of commodity, do two things before he may expect to obtain a profit on his investment. These are:

1. Arouse interest in what he has to sell.
2. Turn this interest into a buying impulse.

Now, there is no denying the fact that the average exhibitor recognizes the importance of these two points. At the same time, his efforts towards bringing them about have been as effective as the tactics of the Stone Age era of warfare would be on the Verdun battle line.

In his efforts to arouse the interest of the possible patron, the exhibitor has used—still uses, in fact—lurid posters containing so much "punch" and "wallop" as to wring a howl of pain from the narrow-gauge-minded worshippers of his Imperial Majesty, Czar Censorship. And, following up whatever havoc may be wrought by this form of heavy artillery, the exhibitor thrusts forth his massed formations in the way of announcements modestly mentioning the fact that the longest show in town can be seen at his house for the trifling sum of five cents—one nickle—one-twentieth of a dollar!

Suppose John Wanamaker decided to conduct a moving picture theatre. As a merchant of years' standing, Mr. Wanamaker realizes the value of GOOD advertising. He also knows that the most effective form of advertising is NOT that which reaches the consumer's eyes while his mind is engrossed upon other matters. Instead, experience has taught him that it is the advertisement that enters the HOME of the possible purchaser—where it receives the utmost attention it is possible for ANY advertisement to get—that is most effective.

Now, lurid six-sheets and offers that reek of cheapness will not, as a rule, attract the sort of attention that means money in the cash drawer. Mr. Wanamaker knows this. He also is aware of the fact that Uncle Sam and all his grey-clad messengers are ready and willing to help him enter the home of every man, woman and child in the community from which he draws his clientele. Therefore, one of the very first steps taken by this extremely successful merchant would be the compiling of a MAILING LIST.

Arming his theatre attaches with pencils and pads, he would send them out mornings, before the theatre opens up for the day. These attaches would carefully take a census of all the names contained in the letter boxes within a certain radius of the theatre. In addition to this, a slide would be regularly thrown upon the screen requesting those patrons who wish information on future programs to be presented at the theatre, to leave their name sand addresses at the box office. The membership lists of the various organizations in the community would also help build up the Wanamaker mailing list.

This list compiled, the merchant-exhibitor would next call upon the exchanges he patronizes. These men would be requested to assist him in his advertising efforts. If, as is the policy in the Universal Film Exchanges, a competent staff of advertising and publicity men are a part of the exchange organization, these men would promptly get together with Mr. Wanamaker and advise him as to the best method of using Direct Advertising in connection with their product at his house.

As to the nature of this assistance, it is right here that John Wanamaker would sit down and analyze the various mediums that might carry his message through the mails. Would printed matter prove effective? Yes —providing this matter is well gotten up and lacks the air of cheapness.

At the same time, he'd bear this point in mind. Some of the greatest houses in the world absolutely owe their existence to PERSONAL LETTERS! Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, The National Cloak & Suit Company, the Charles Williams Stores—all these organizations were built up by letters.

Therefore, it is only reasonable to assume that if letters are able to affect people living miles and miles away from the aforementioned organizations, they will bring business to the exhibitor from people who live right in his home town—merely a few steps away!

Letters would therefore be Mr. Wanamaker's chief reliance in his Direct Advertising Campaign. Letters as unconventional as a morning call; letters as full of the human element as a conversation between friends.

It is a peculiar fact that very few people possess the ability to make their letters read as convincingly as they themselves are able to talk. Face to face with his prospects, the average business man will present his sales arguments eloquently and efficiently. But the moment he attempts to put these same arguments on paper, he seems to become afflicted with a sort of infantile paralysis of the mind.

Knowing this, John Wanamaker would carefully study the talking points about the programs he presents. These jotted down before him, he would do his utmost to visualize the people to whom his letters are to go. Imagining these people standing before him he would talk to them ON PAPER. If his message sounded stiff and stilted, he would write it over and over again until it was as nearly perfect as he could possibly make it.

However, even this important detail of his Direct Advertising Campaign need not give him an undue amount of worry. As a matter of fact, the advertising and publicity staffs of his exchanges will readily relieve him of his circular letter writing. Furthermore, Mr. Wanamaker would find that such organizations as Universal and Bluebird provide "ready-made" letters, which merely require filling in with their features.

"HOP, THE DEVIL'S BREW," BEATS "BIRTH OF A NATION."

Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen: I had a large audience on Sunday night to witness another of those always pleasing Bluebird plays, "Hop, the Devil's Brew." I received many compliments regarding it. Some even said your picture beats "The Birth of a Nation." They played here the same night.

Yours respectfully,
FRANK S. MORSE,

The advertisement of "The Grasp of Greed," which appears on this page, is a reduction of a three-column advertisement which was run in the Portland, Ore., papers by the Strand Theatre of that city. It is run here to show the prominence given to Bluebird Photoplays even in houses which use vaudeville as well, and also to call attention to effective newspaper display advertising.

PITTSBURG WINS.

Another Bluebird Exchange has broken into the honor column by winning the fourth monthly contest of the Bluebird exchangemen. C. F. Miller, manager of the Pittsburg office, has the honor of heading the procession on the fourth month.

The order in which the prizes have been awarded thus far is as follows:

First month, St. Louis Bluebird.
Second month, Kansas City Bluebird.
Third month, Kansas City Bluebird.
Fourth month, Pittsburg Bluebird.

Mr. Arthur J. Lang, executive secretary of the Nicholas Power Company, which we believe sells a moving picture projector of merit, has taken warning of the hot weather of the city, and has hied himself to the Catskills for a short sojourn. Mr. Lang has worked hard this Spring, and to good effect, and no one begrudges him his vacation.

TATEM'S SERIAL JOYS.

Tatem & Co., exclusive film agents of Cardiff, Wales, have gained such a reputation by their releasing of Universal serials, that they can book them to exhibitors instantly on nothing at all except the title and the cast. "Peg o' the Ring" is going like wildfire over there, and already Percy W. Tatem, managing director, is making inquiries about "Liberty." In a letter just received from him, he says:

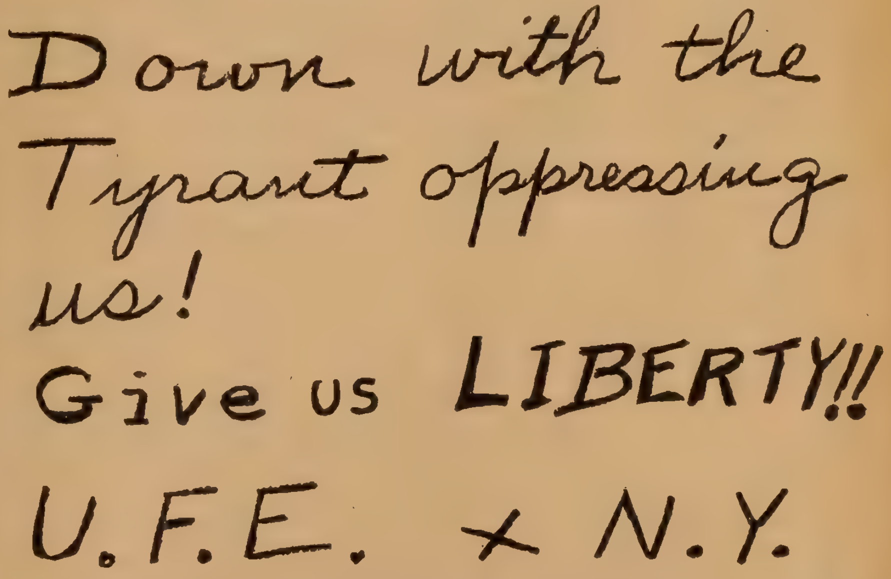
"The greatest event now taking place is the booking of "Peg o' the Ring." The trade show took place in London on Tuesday last, and our trade show for Cardiff is fixed for August 3rd, but without seeing the film the success of it is assured. Never before in the history of serials have the bookings been so heavy, and what they will be when our exhibitors see the film I fail to predict. Our phone has been going all day, and exhibitors seem likely to go to any price in order to secure the rights for this film in their own towns, but the only way out of the difficulty is for everybody to run the film, and that is how it is going to end. We have gained such a reputation for the Universal serials that we can book right away on the title and the cast. I hear from many towns in South Wales that the people have gone so keen on Miss Cunard that they have been writing over for her autograph.

"Terence O' Rourke has proved a great success. Only Monday last a principal theatre in Cardiff which is running same had the misfortune not to get their copy. On their bill was one of the greatest English films of the year, Miss Florence Turner, in "The Welsh Singer," together with a two-reel Chaplin feature. The management thought that they would slip through without showing "Terence O' Rourke," and made no announcement that the film had not arrived. The audience sat tight till 11 P. M. waiting for the film, and when the management announced that they could not show it, the crowd demanded readmission tickets, which they got. The result was a packed house for the matinee next day and 200 people refused admission at the evening show. This speaks for itself."

Yours Universally, Tatem, & Co.,
(Signed) Percy W. Tatem, Mng. Dir.,
Cardiff, Wales.

JAPANESE FILM MAGAZINE.

One of the interesting magazines which exchanges with the Moving Picture Weekly is the Cinema Record, a Japanese amusement paper published in Tokio. The editor of this large and prosperous magazine has been very liberal to Universal and Red Feather Features, giving a great deal of space to the serials such as "The Black Box," "Peg o' the Ring," and "The roken Coin," and running full page layouts of "Her Bitter Cup," and other Red Feather Features. The printing of the magazine is excellent. It should fill a strong place in the amusement life of Japan.



Down with the Tyrant oppressing us!

Give us LIBERTY!!

U.F.E. × N.Y.

In the last number of the Moving Picture Weekly two cuts were run on pages 52 and 53, showing a post-card follow-up circular and teaser idea which was originated by the Universal Exchange of New York. The third and last of the series is printed herewith.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

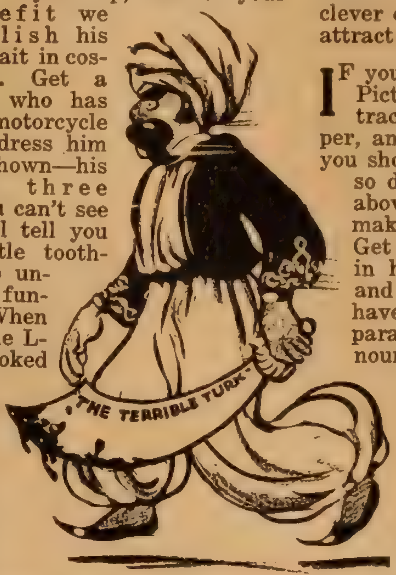
THE Editor of "Putting It Over" sincerely hopes that all readers of this page took especial notice of the "LIBERTY" advertising suggestions made in the last issue, for two good reasons:

First—Because they were wonderfully helpful boosts for a very remarkable serial.

Second—Because it shows every Exhibitor what a little thought will do in framing up stunts that will help get the crowds. To take advantage of these ideas becomes a matter of habit after a time, when you have tried one of two and found how easy they are to put over.

Get the habit of reading the Advance Notices. It is rare that the stories of the releases as told there will not suggest to you some stunt that you can prepare and have ready when release date comes around. Try it this week.

WE have with us today Billie Ritchie as a motorcycle cop, and for your benefit we publish his portrait in costume. Get a man who has a motorcycle and dress him as shown—his boots three times too big, etc. If you can't see it in the picture, we will tell you that Billie wears a little toothbrush mustache way up under his nose that is the funniest thing imaginable. When you are ready to show the L-Ko Comedy scream, "Crooked From the Start," released September 6, put your motorcycle cop in action thus: Dress a pretty girl in short, jaunty coat, men's riding trousers, puttees, cap, goggles, etc., and have her drive a racing car around town with the cop chasing her wherever she goes. He should yell "Stop" at frequent intervals, but she should not drive so fast as to make it hard to read the banner announcing the picture and your show which you will affix to the sides of her car. You can be sure that this stunt will attract a record-breaking crowd to your theatre and the picture will please them all.



EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran (getting better all the time, by the way) give you another great opportunity in their laughable farce, "The Terrible Turk," the Nestor release of August 28. In the story Eddie's best girl's papa is a gem collector, and a Turkish spy is trying to get a sacred jewel which Eddie has presented to him It becomes necessary for Lee to impersonate this Turk, so there are two terrible Turks, dressed as you see in the sketch herewith. Make them comically fierce—two of them, to add to the excitement, and have them wander around the streets, properly placarded, and have them meet every so often, and indulge in a talking match and a fake scrap. Let each one carry a curved Turkish sword, but have it made of wood or you may get into trouble with the police. Two clever chaps can put over some comical stuff with this stunt and attract a lot of attention.

IF you are showing the wonderfully beautiful Dorsey Expedition Pictures, they offer an exceptional opportunity for some attractive publicity. You ought to boost them in your local paper, and your editor should give you good write-ups every time you show them. They are very much out of the ordinary and are so different from the average travel picture, so unusual, and, above all, so quaintly beautiful and interesting that they will make a hit with every man, woman and child that sees them. Get a Japanese and dress him in his native dress, the louder and more elaborate the better; have him carry a Japanese parasol bearing your theatre announcement as he parades around distributing your printed matter. There are quite a few of the Japanese subjects to come.

IN the M. P. Weekly of August 5 you will find an advertisement of the wonderful Carter De Haven Comedy Series, "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," which shows a picture Timothy and his valet, a great big fellow, nearly twice as tall as the little comedian. That suggests a great little stunt for this corking series, and as the big chap appears in each release, you can use the stunt over and over. Get a little man dressed as flashily as possible. Get your cues from Timothy on the screen. Lots of them.

LET'S CALL A

(No. 151. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

ABOUT eighteen five-reel "features" are released in this country every week.

Of these, about fourteen are perfectly rotten; one or two are just fair, the other one or two are good.

This sort of thing is going to kill the popularity of any and every theatre that has gone feature-mad. And it isn't going to take long to do it, either. Already the people are sickening of weak, padded, silly five-reelers. The renewed success of the spoken drama this season is one of the most convincing proofs that high class patrons who had deserted the spoken drama for the photoplay are going back to their old love!

Any exhibitor who tries to argue himself away from these cold-blooded facts is a plain, or garden variety, of chump. In the past year I have received quite a number of letters from exhibitors who indicated that they didn't believe I was in earnest in warning them against the feature craze. They pointed to their big receipts as proof that I was wrong.

Believe me, I never was more in earnest in my life, and I never was more in the right in my life!

I meant every word I said when I predicted that the flood of poor features would hurt the picture theatres. I knew that nothing would stop the growth of the picture business more effectively than long-winded, padded, poorly directed and miserably acted five-reelers.

SPADE A SPADE

That's exactly what has happened and is continuing to happen every day.

If you give your patrons a mixed program of short subjects, they will stand for one or two that they might not like; because they are bound to be pleased by at least a part of your evening's program. But if you give them a five-reel picture and the whole thing is rotten (as is all too frequently the case nowadays) they are sore at you and sore at the photoplay in general.

The Universal program was NEVER SO STRONG AS IT IS RIGHT NOW. The pictures are better in every detail. Our one, two and three-reelers contain more actual entertainment than ninety per cent. of the five-reelers being released nowadays---and simply because we tell a better story in one, two or three reels---and tell it better---than most of the five-reelers do!

The people CRAVE entertainment. They hate to be bored. You are boring them to death with long features and yet many of you are actually afraid to quit feeding the people the stuff they don't want!

The Universal has no special pet. We don't care a rap whether we make one-reelers or five-reelers. Our equipment is as good for one as for the other. But it is maddening to see so many theatres insisting on the kind of pictures that the people are sick of. It's time for you to quit fooling yourself and CALL A SPADE A SPADE!

"The Heritage of Hate"

FORTY-SECOND Red Feather Production. Written by Walter Woods, scenario by E. J. Clawson and produced by Burton George, with Roberta Wilson and William Quinn in the principal roles. A story of an inherited revenge and its accomplishment, by a beautiful young girl, who learns at last to change hate for love.

IN "The Heritage of Hate," the forty-second Red Feather Production, Director Burton George has cast Roberta Wilson, for the first time in her life, in a role which calls for more than the conventional prettiness and sweetness of the stage or picture ingenue. In this strong story of an inherited vendetta, by Walter Woods, she has the role of a child born under a cloud, who resolves to dedicate her life to the avenging of the wrong done to her mother by the rich and successful shipping merchant, who is her unacknowledged father. Alone she plans his run, in the accomplishment of which she is assisted by a group of foreign plotters, to whose interest it is that the shipper of munitions to Europe shall be brought to destruction. Miss Wilson handles the difficult role, with its many emotional contrasts, like a veteran, and her versatility argues well for the future of the girl who has been less than a year a motion picture actress.

In her support are William Quinn, in the role of the object of her hatred, Paul Byron, who has the part of the hunchback, who finally convinces Roberta that love is stronger than hate, Betty, Schade, Eileen Sedgwick and Lillian Concord.

Of these Miss Schade has perhaps the best reason for remembering the picture. She was called upon to do an unusual "roll"—down the whole length of a staircase. The steps were padded, of course, but the scene required a rehearsal, and Miss Schade refused to have a substitute put in for her. It is impossible to steer oneself just exactly in the center of each step while rolling down stairs and she found that the sides of the treads were very hard indeed. The finished result certainly adds a thrill to the big scene, but Miss Schade was black and blue for weeks.

One of the handsomest sets ever erected in a studio was used for the ball scene in this picture. The walls were fully thirty feet high, with a huge stairway in the middle, flanked on either side by balconies overlooking the dancing floor. The whole thing is built of mottled marble, that glistens in the multitude of glass chandeliers with which it is lit. A crowd of really well-dressed men and women promenade and dance on the immense floor to the music of a large string orchestra.

Roberta exchanges hate for love.

The thrill of thrills of the picture is the fire scenes, photographed by night, on the Municipal pier of the city of San Diego, where part of the picture was filmed. The announcement that the fire scenes would be made on the docks was made in the newspapers, and the result was a crowd of many thousands of persons, who were also photographed for the picture. Director George exploded fifty pounds of powder under an enormous pile of barrels, boxes and debris of all kinds, hurling the whole in the air, to the accompaniment of dense clouds of smoke. An old man, thinking the waterfront was being bombarded, dived off the pier into the water and was rescued by a passing vessel. The San Diego fire department had been requisitioned for the occasion, and came dashing down the main street—Broadway—at full speed, past the great crowd—all of which was faithfully preserved by the camera for use later in the completed picture.

The night before the motor boat "Gryme" had been photographed for the film, when a bomb was exploded on board, sending the sailors leaping from all sides into the water. Another grat crowd witnessed this, and the San Diego papers aver that these were the most thrilling scenes ever made in the city for motion pictures.

Bradley had been living with Myra for sometime, but he was making love to Florence and finally won her consent to their marriage. Florence had money and position which Myra had not, so Florence won.

And so, in poverty and without a name, Roberta was born, and as she grew older, watched her mother die from a broken heart, and so within her grew hatred, a desire for revenge upon that man who was her father and who had caused her mother's death.

Bradley has by this time gained great affluence in the world, and his home, with his wife and daughter Ellen, is happy. Ellen is affianced to Richard Brockton, who is wealthy and Bradley is anxious that the marriage be consummated, as he might need his financial aid. Bradley is carrying on his business extensively and stakes his all in a venture, which will either spell ruin or immense wealth for him.

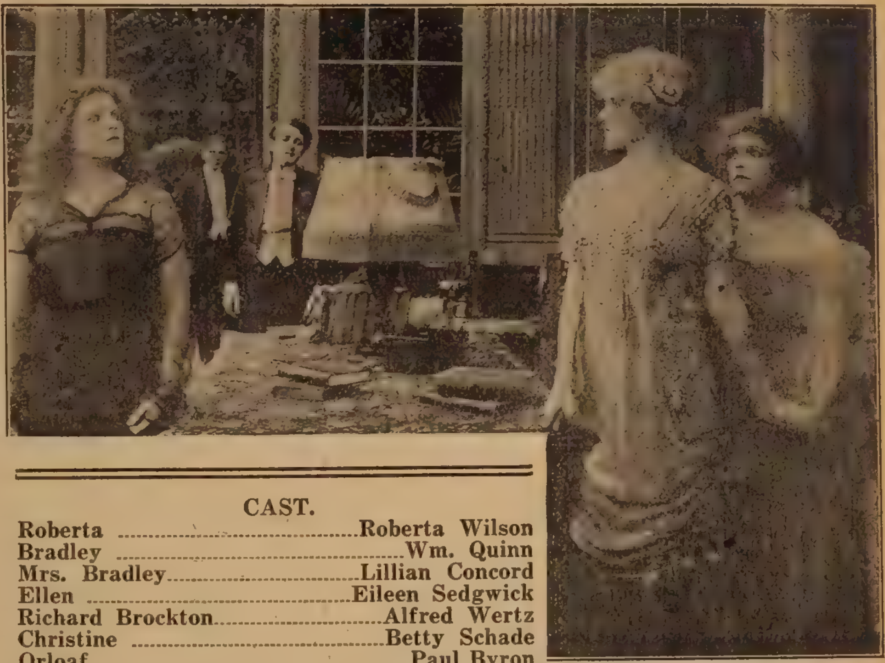
Orloaf, a hunchback, and one of God's good men, is Bradley's closest friend. Roberta, without her father discovering her identity, obtains a position as his confidential secretary, and plans systematically to ruin him. Bradley cannot understand where the leak is in his office and suspects nearly every one except Roberta. He tells her that there is something strangely familiar about her, but he does not analyze it closely enough to know. Before ever his secret commands can be carried out they are common knowledge, and so his plans are frustrated. A friendship ripens between Roberta and Orloaf, who lives at the same apartment house, but he, being a cripple, thinks he cannot show his love—and she, being without a name, thinks love is not for her.

Bradley is carrying on an affair with Christine, who does not know of his married life and thinks that she is the only one. Roberta discovers this and so tells Christine about Mrs. Bradley and Ellen—and also tells her that she is his daughter. Christine, angered, seeks him out at his home and arrives during the progress of a big ball which the Bradleys are giving, as Bradley is almost sure now of success in his plans.

Bradley has had detectives working on the case, but although they trace Roberta they cannot find anything irregular in her actions, while she before their eyes gives her information to the waiter in the cafe.

Christine causes quite a commotion at the ball and in spite of Bradley's endeavor to make her keep still, she tells everything. At this moment the wharf and the ship—all of Bradley's fortune—are burned and so Bradley is crushed in every way.

Later Roberta and Orloaf meet at the Mission, where Hoffman's picture of Christ is hanging, and Roberta realizes how shallow and selfish is the havoc she has wrought and and as they leave the Mission they see Bradley, a wreck of a man. Orloaf tries to cheer Roberta, tries to bring out the best that is in her, but when she realizes just the thing she has done, life holds no charms for her and she tries to kill herself, after writing a note to Orloaf telling him of her love for him. This note he reads and reseals and after reviving Roberta tells her of his love, and she never knows that he has read the note.



Christine confronts Mrs. Bradley and Ellen.

LOUISE OWEN JOINS UNIVERSAL FORCES

LOUISE OWEN has joined the Big U forces at Universal City, and makes her first appearance in “The Emerald Pin“” a two-reel Laemmle Drama. Miss Owen has had a notable career on the legitimate stage and in pictures. She was born aboard a ship on Lake Michigan and her education was completed in the convent of the Sacred Heart in New York. She has appeared under the direction of the Shuberts in the Princess Theatre and the Little Theatre in New York, and for three years was with Biograph, later joined the Mutual and from that company went to the Vitagraph, with which organization she remained until she joined the Universal.

DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION HONORS LOIS WEBER

THE Motion Picture Directors Association now has a woman director, playwright and actress of the Bluebird Company.

Miss Weber's wonderful work as a director frequently has been a topic of admiring conversation at the meetings of the directors and many maintained that in view of the genius she has displayed in the making of some of the most attractive and widely-discussed photoplays, she should be admitted to membership. When the matter formally was put before the association during one of its recent sessions it was found that the directors were heartily in accord with the idea, so the rules of the organization were set aside for the purpose and Miss Weber was unanimously chosen an honorary member.

She is the first woman to be thus honored and the directors say that no other of the gentler sex will be admitted to membership.

SURPRISE PARTY FOR LLOYD CARLETON'S BROTHER.

THE home in Hollywood of Lloyd B. Carleton, director of the Red Feather photoplay, “The Devil's Bondwoman,” was the scene of a large gathering of motion picture people on the evening of October 3, the occasion being a surprise birthday party to Director Carleton's brother and assistant, John T. Carleton.

John was greatly surprised, indeed, to find most of the stars of the film colony gathered to do him honor. Among other things he was presented with a huge birthday cake in the center of which stood a lone candle, not indicating, of course, that he was only a year old, but that he was completing his first year as a resident of California. The talent present furnished all sorts of entertainment and the guests tripped the light fantastic toe until the early hours of the morning.

SCENES FROM THE RED FEATHER PRODUCTION

"The Mainspring"

WITH BEN WILSON

"Honor Thy Country"--Universal Special

"He is an American! You must spare him!"

A STRONG three-reel picture with an irresistible patriotic appeal. Story by Willis and Woods. Scenario by Alice Von Saxmar. Produced by Ben Wilson, with Neva Gerber, Charles Perley, Joseph Girard and Edward Cecil prominent in the cast. A real United States torpedo boat destroyer, the "Farragut," figures in the action, by special permission of the Secretary of the Navy.

BEN WILSON, who has long enjoyed a reputation for good work both as an actor and a director for Universal, is making a new record of excellence for himself since his transferrance from the eastern studios to Universal City. Recently he struck twelve with a three-reel picture, "Society Hypocrites," and in "Honor Thy Country," he has gone and done it again. The story, by Willis and Woods, has an imaginary South American Republic for a background. Nowadays, if authors wish to write an up-to-date story of intrigue and corruption, of governments which change over night, and of armies commanded by American adventurers, they have perforce to locate the tale in the southern half of our hemisphere. The Balkans, which have been the classic background for such affairs ever since the king was imprisoned in Zenda, are otherwise occupied just now.

So Mr. Woods and Mr. Willis have chosen a sort of vague Central American republic, in which the villain (played by Joe Girard, who fairly revels in his wickedness) can gnash his teeth to his heart's content; conduct political intrigues which involve the safety of the American visitors, including the lovely heroine; and give wonderful opportunities to the hero, an American officer serving as a mercenary in his rather comic opera army.

A feature of the picture is the use of a real United States torpedo boat destroyer, the "Farraguet," which was lying off San Pedro. She was "all shot to pieces" by a battery of cameras for the occasion. Permission to use her was obtained by the officials of the Universal Film Company, who wired to Secretary Daniels direct. In his answer the Secretary stated that he had instructed Commander Hudson, of the destroyer, to aid Mr. Wilson in every possible way in making the picture. So the hero is rescued by a file of real marines from a real ship.

Dick Sterrett	Edward Cecil
Betty Thomas	Neva Gerber
Count Del Vaine	Joseph W. Girard
Lieut. Scott	Charles Perley
Florita	Rhea Haines
Boyd Thomas	Robert Emmons

Dick Sterrett is a soldier of fortune who is the commander-in-chief of the forces of Count Del Vaine in a little South American republic. Lieutenant Scott is an American naval officer on leave who has been amusing himself with Florita, the niece of the ruler. Dick tells the other that it is dangerous to trifle with the honor of the girl, but Scott scoffs at the idea.

Boyd Thomas, a wealthy American who is touring the country, arrives with his daughter Betty. The girl despises Dick, as he sells his services for gold, and likes Scott. There follows a romance between the two as Betty thinks that she loves the man.

When Florita tells her uncle that her honor demands that she marry Scott, the Count is furious. He asks an explanation of Scott and when the other refuses to make good the wrong that he has done, the Count swears revenge.

One day while on shore Thomas gets drunk and insults some natives. As a result he is put in prison. Betty is very much worried when her father does not return and tells Scott of her fears. He decides that he can get her father out and goes to the Count to demand an explanation. The result is that the Count lets Thomas go, but imprisons Scott. He has the American officer put in the torture room and whipped. While this is going on Dick comes in and the Count in glee shows him the torture that is going on in a room below. It so angers Dick to think that an American citizen should be treated in thisway that he makes the Count sign Scott's release at the point of a gun. He also has word sent to have him hold the boat so that he can make his escape, and gives him a note to give to Betty saying what he has done.

Dick is captured and Scott forgets to give the note to Betty until the boat is about to sail. She is indignant at the thought that they are going away to leave this hero to his fate. She visits an American warship that is lying in the harbor, and with the aid of the men that they furnish she goes to rescue Dick from the terrible torture that they are putting him through. At last she realizes that it is Dick whom she loves, and so the picture ends.

FLASHES FROM THE NEWS WEEKLIES

ALMOST TWO MILES A MINUTE

ONE of the most remarkable feats of aviation that has ever been accomplished was performed this past week by Carlstrom under the auspices of a New York newspaper. He started out to make a nonstop flight from Chicago to New York, a feat that has never been done. But he was forced to alight twice, the first time to fix a leaky gas tank and the second time on account of the darkness. But the flight was wonderful even if he did not do what he started out to. His first stopping place was at Erie, Pa., over six hundred miles from his startingpoint. Then after a great deal of time wasted in trying to get the right kind of gasoline, he got under way again and at last arrived at Hammondsport,N.Y., where he had to come down for the night. The next morning he continued on his way and surprised the men who were waiting for him at Governor's Island by arriving long before he was expected and completing the flight from Hammondsport, some 315 miles, in two hours and twenty-one minutes, at an average speed of a hundred and thirty miles an hour. His time for the whole trip was about eight hours and a half actual flying time or an average speed of a hundred and fourteen miles an hour. The forty-fifth number of the Animated Weekly shows him leaving Chicago and arriving the next day in New York.

AN AIR RACE

IN these days when aeroplaning is so common the old sport of balloon racing has gone out of style a little. But it is still the same old thrilling adventure, as this race proved. There is a certain element of suspense in it as well as interest, as there is no way of telling where one is bound for or where one will eventually land. The forty-fifth number of the Universal Animated Weekly shows a recent international balloon race that was started from Muskogee,Okla. Among the contestants was Capt. John Berry, the oldest living balloonist in the world. One of the balloons shown was the one that caught on fire while it was 14,000 feet in the air, but came down safely.

HERE AGAIN

TOO much credit cannot be given to the Germans for the second trip of the Deutschland. When the ship arrived the first time it was thought to be somewhat in the nature of a fluke. But this second arrival proves that submarine commerce is a thing to be counted upon in the blockade of the future. It will revolutionize the way that warfare is carried on, as it seems that it is no longer possible to have an effective blockade. The arrival of the submarine liner is shown in the forty-fifth number of the Animated Weekly with views of our old friends, Capt. Koenig, etc., who were all shown in the weekly the last time that the ship arrived. It is also interesting to know that the Deutschland this time brings with her a cargo that is worth about ten millions of dollars and the trip has been so profitable to the owners that they intend to establish a line of these vessels and have a regular service.

HARVARD CRUSHES CORNELL

FOOTBALL enthusiasts all over the country will welcome the opportunity that is offered by the Universal Animated Weekly to view what seems to have been one of the most notable contests of the season. When Harvard defeated Cornell last Saturday they did more than merely win a victory. They erased a defeat that has stood on the clean slate of the Crimson, as last year it was Cornell that won the victory.

The score, 23-0, proves that Harvard is in a better situation than most of the wiseacres gave her credit for. They have been backward this year up at Cambridge, but now the team is rounding into shape and although they miss Eddie Mahan, Casey bids fair to step into his shoes. Although their chances for the championship are lost through the one defeat by Tufts, still it is certain that by the time that the big games arrive Harvard will have a machine that will be in a fair way to make trouble. The forty-fifth number of the Animated Weekly shows how they do it.

THE WAR IN EGYPT

THERE has been a great deal of well-deserved sympathy showered on the heroes who are fighting in the trenches over in France and upon the men who are in the great war in other parts of the European arena, but so far there has been little said about the war that is going in all the parts of the globe. The forty-fifth number of the Universal Animated Weekly shows the war that is taking place in Egypt under the shadow of the pyramids. There is a force of Australian soldiers guarding the Suez Canal, a very important post, as England is dependant upon the supplies that are all the time arriving from the Orient and from India. But the life that the men lead in that country is no joy. They suffer from constant hardships as the climate is very trying. The sun beats down all the day and the sand keeps the heat so that there is little relief at night. The men have a very dreary sort of an existence. There is little danger, but that is what the men complain about, as they would rather be in the middle of the fray. As one sees them plodding through the sand it is impossible not to sympathize with them.

WONDERFUL SETS FILMED BY JULIAN IN "THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS."

NEITHER pains nor money were spared by the Bluebird Company to make every detail perfect for Director Rupert Julian's production of "The Buglar of Algiers," picturized from the story of Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's Magazine.

In the first place, a complete Brittany street was built at the studio. Costumes were specially made for the villagers and among the quaint homes with thatched roofs the actors and actresses presented scenes typical of old France. War comes and then Gabrielle, played by Ella Hall, and her brother Anatole, portrayed by Kingsley Benedict, are parted as the young man enlists as a bugler. With him also enlists his friend Pierre, played by Julian. The three had been great friends; in fact, Gabrielle practically had been a mother to both young men.

Subsequently, the soldiers of the enemy are seen galloping over the hill and upon the sleepy village, scattering women and goats and poultry as they dash through the street.

After a lapse of many years the two men return to the little village to find it changed. They cannot find Gabrielle, and finally Anatole is ordered to Paris to be decorated for an act of heroism. He starts out with Pierre but dies en route. So Pierre passes himself off as Anatole.

In the presence of the President he meets Gabrielle and taking her back to the village places the decoration on the body of his dead friend.

A huge banquet table was provided and, in addition, real food was served to the beautifully gowned women and the men in evening dress.

"A Stranger from Somewhere"

With FRANKLYN AND AGNES FARNUM VERNON

Is this Sam?

Grace tips the "loafer"

Is this "Dippy?"

A WONDERFUL Bluebird, written by Willis and Woods and produced by William Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum in a dual role, Agnes Vernon as the heroine and Claire McDowell as the adventuress. A picture which combines drama, sensationalism and comedy in one delightful whole.

CAST.

Sam Brockton "Dippy" Lewis	Franklyn Farnum
Grace Darling	Agnes Vernon
Howard Dana	Barney Furey
Olga	Claire McDowell
Daniel Darling	Arthur Hoyt
Mrs. Darling	Helen Wright

HERE is a picture which it is impossible to classify, but which is simply delightful all the way through. It starts as a Western, rapidly turns into a crook drama, takes another twist into pure comedy, doubles back again into a drama and ends with a surprise finish which is a perfect jack-in-the-box for everybody. Franklyn Farnum, the younger brother of Dustin and William, who made his picture debut just the other day as the French composer in "Love Never Dies," another Bluebird, in which he supported Ruth Stonehouse, has in this the dual role of a Westerner, the "Stranger from Somewhere," and the dope-fiend "Dippy," who is the tool of as an unscrupulous a pair of crooks as ever robbed an innocent of his roll.

That the youngest member of the Farnum family possesses his full share of the family talent is proved by the rapidity of his development in pictures, especially in Bluebirds, in which it is demanded of an actor that he possess ideal qualifications for a leading role. Of course, though he is new to the art of the silent drama, Mr. Farnum is no stranger to the stage. He has had prominent roles in such successes as "The Dollar Princess," "Madame Sherry" and "The Candy Shop." He was leading man for two seasons with the Henry W. Savage productions. His most recent stage appearance was the lead in "The Only Girl" at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles. So Mr. Farnum is anything but a tyro in theatrical matters.

Still it is unusual for an actor who is so new to the screen to be cast as star of an important five-reel production. Mr. Farnum comes brilliantly through the ordeal. He took to pictures like a duck to water, and only one thing worried him for some time. He felt that he could not lay claim to the title full-fledged movie actor until he had risked his life, or

Grace thinks she knows what he wants to say

Dippy complains that he can't stand any more.

at leats a limb or two, for the camera, and he waited hopefully for the chance. In "A Stranger from Somewhere" it came. In one scene the hero, while in the person of Sam Brockton, has to fall and roll down a flight of unpadded steps. Director Worthington offered to put in a substitute, as the scene is "shot" from a considerable distance. But the young actor refused with scorn.

"Why," he said, "It's the very chance I've been waiting for, to prove that I'm a real movie actor at last, and now you want to take it away from me!"

The supporting cast is more than up to the Bluebird's high standard. Agnes Vernon has the role of the girl who is puzzled almost beyond the retention of her sanity by the cameleon-like changes of her lover. Worthington has directed little "Brownie" Vernon in countless photoplays, but never with greater success than in this. Claire McDowell, one of the most finished of screen actresses, has a most congenial role as the villainess, "Olga," and forms a striking contrast to blonde little Miss Vernon. All the other roles are in capable hands, and the whole picture is handled in a way that calls for nothing but praise.

Sam holds up the supposed intruders.

Some of the endless complications are given in the following brief synopsis.

Howard Dana and his partner, Olga, had been tipped off that Sam Brockton, a newly-made millionaire from the West, was in town, and they begin laying their plans to fleece him. Knowing that the millionaires in a certain district had closed their houses and were spending their summer at different resorts, they affect an entrance to the Darling mansion and practically take possession.

It so happens that before Sam has had time to procure a change of costume he assists in helping Grace Darling and her father when their carriage has overturned. Both are attracted, but she goes on her way, leaving Sam gazing after her awestricken. Olga has been near by and watched the meeting and soon has Sam engaged in conversation. She asks him to call upon her, when she will arrange to have him meet the beauty he has rescued.

With this in mind, Sam goes to the Darling mansion, where Olga and Dana work the old badger game. Sam, in spite of his innocent look, is really wise, but he takes his medicine like a soldier. At this moment Grace arrives, as she had come home to get more clothes. She thinks for a time that Sam is one of the crooks, but he convinces her and Mr. Darling that he is not. While he is doing so, however, Olga and Dana escape. Grace invites Sam to spend the week-end with them in the mountains. Sam is delighted and can scarcely wait.

Dana and Olga think Sam is "Dippy."

Olga meantime learns of the invitation. At a meeting with the leader of their gang, "Dippy" Lewis, Olga notices the close resemblance of Lewis to Sam and straightaway "Dippy" is transformed into as good an imitation of Sam as possible and goes to visit Grace. She is surprised to see him so soon, but is gracious to him, although he often embarrasses her with his uncouth manner, which is attributed to his being so long in the West. "Dippy" cannot resist the temptation to steal from some of the guests, and it is not long until he feels that it is safer for him to leave while he has the chance.

Sam arrives just shortly after "Dippy's" departure and cannot understand why Grace treats him in such a cool manner. He is greatly surprised a little later when Olga and Dana arrive — not knowing that "Dippy" had left and thinking Sam is "Dippy"—and advise him to propose to Grace. Sam is elated that Grace should consider him and is more than happy when she promises to marry him. As he leaves her to find Mr. Darling, Olga and Dana meet

"Circumstantial Guilt"

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Story by George Suprenant. Scenario by Maie Havey. Produced by George Cochrane. A tense situation—one juror holds out for acquittal because he, himself, committed the crime. Wonderful exposition of the danger of merely circumstantial evidence.

The murder.

THE dangers of conviction upon circumstantial evidence are paramount, but it is seldom that they are so forcefully brought to our attention as in "Circumstantial Guilt," a two-reeler, directed by George Cochrane. Here is the case of a man who is about to be convicted on this kind of evidence. The jury is out on the case and they stand eleven to one for conviction. The last man is obdurate and will not consent to send the man to prison for life on merely the force of circumstances. He will not give in in spite of the pressure that is brought to bear on him by the other members of the jury. He knows that the man accused innocent of the crime, as he is the one who committed it. He is afraid to say this, as he does not want to suffer the consequences, yet he refuses to let a ninnocent man go to prison. In the end he does the right thing and confesses.

But the happy ending to this pictue should not blind us to the true lesson: that is, that there is no case of circumstantial evidence, however strong, that cannot be broken down. It may be recalled that a few years ago a man was released from the penitentiary in Pennsylvania after serving twenty-four years of a life sentence. After all that time the real culprit confessed. But what could the State do to pay the convicted man for the ruin of his health, his broken spirit, the loss of self-respect that he had suffered? These few cases that are made public, together with the many cases of crimes that go unpunished, prove that our system of justice is far from perfection.

CAST.

Fillmore	Jack Nelson
Antonio	Burton Law
Mary	Grace Bonyng
Hartman	Charles Cummings
Evans	Fred Montague
Casey	Dan Duffy

The story follows:

Antonio, a poor Italian fruit peddler, is on trial for the murder of Hartman. In spite of his protestations of innocence and his story of the finding of the gun hurled into his fruit stand, the consensus of opinion is that he is guilty.

The jury retires, and after being out for a considerable time all but one, Fillmore, are in favor of conviction. He stoutly adheres to his opinion and seems to be laboring under some strain. One of the jurors pleads with him to give in, as he is very anxious to get home to his wife, who is seriously ill, and still Fillmore holds out.

At last he can seem to stand the strain no longer and calling for attention tells his story:

His sister, Mary, a sweet, innocent girl, had been betrayed by Hartman and had drowned herself. Over her dead body Fillmore had vowed vengeance. He had followed Hartman to the city and then one evening seen him entering a cafe. Knowing that he would return home some time, he waited for him outside until midnight, and then, as Hartman emerged and started walking down the street he shot him and hurled the gun into the wagon of Antonio.

The confession made, Fillmore falls dead and Antonio is cleared of the accusation and the web of circumstances which had almost enmeshed their innocent victim.

BIG NOISE IN SILENT DRAMA.

WHEN the Los Angeles Harbor Commissioners had the side of a mountain at Catalina Island blown down recently the explosion was made the basis of a two-reel story of love and conspiracy culminating in a dastardly plot to rend the hero limb from limb by dynamite. Director Henry McRae of the Universal Company produced the Bison story, "The Lost Lode."

UNIVERSAL "SHOOTING."

F. C. TUTTLE, secretary and treasurer of the Peters Cartridge Company of Cincinnati, who was a visitor at Universal City last week, remarked casually that he never was among so much "shooting" in all his life.

"No matter where I turned," said Tuttle, "there was a cameraman 'shooting' a scene of some sort. Guess I'll send the boys a case of shells for the real thing when I get back to Cincinnati."

"The Thread Of Life"

SPECIAL Two-Reel Imp Drama. A story with a background, first of the hospital and then of the underworld. Love and jealousy contend for the mastery in the soul of a woman, but love wins in the end. Written by Joseph Gollomb. Produced by Ben Wilson.

CAST

Dr. Carl Renard	Ben Wilson
Mayme Carter	Sarah Thorne
"Spider" Carter	Robert Rogers
Lena Payton	Frances Nelson

Testing the new method.

The nurse becomes Mrs. Renard.

BEN WILSON is one of the directors who thinks no detail too small for his attention in the staging of a photoplay. The present drama "The Thread of Life" is an instance of his painstaking care in this regard. The scenes of the story are divided between the hospital, where a young doctor wins fame and fortune by the success of a new method of treatment; and the underworld, the home of the brother and sister, Mayme and "Spider" Carter, who, through an accident to the girl, come to have so much to do with the destiny of the doctor and the nurse he loves. The scenes in the clinic have never been more convincingly staged for a photoplay, while the crook's den, which forms the alternating background, is just as realistically handled.

The exciting story runs as follows:

Mayme Carter has been dangerously shot in a quarrel between her brother "Spider" and another crook, over spoils She has been brought to the Emergency Hospital in a dying condition. Dr. Renard tries a new method of keeping her alive and succeeds in so far as the girl hangs to life by the slimmest thread.

Her coming through alive means to Dr. Renard not only her life, but also fame for the success of his hitherto untried method. He discovers that the girl has fallen in love with him.

In her dangerous condition, he cannot tell her that he loves and is engaged to Lena Peyton, her nurse. Mayme, however, discovers it. Without letting the doctor know of her discovery, she gets her brother "Spider" to kidnap the nurse after she has been lured to the slums.

The doctor is distraught at Lena's disappearance, which has left no clue behind. He is at a loss. Accidentally he catches a fleeting expression on Mayme's face which makes him suspect. He hypnotizes her and while in that condition she is compelled to tell him where Lena is being kept a prisoner.

He disguises himself as a clothesline man and entering the yard behind the house where Lena is being imprisoned in the burglars' den, climbs the pole until he can look into the room where she is. Spider and several other crooks are also in the room discussing what to do with the nurse.

The doctor descends to the basement and sees through the grating on the ground floor a crook on the watch. Taking out a bottle of chloroform which he had brought for the purpose, he soaks a handkerchief with it and, springing on the crook from behind, renders him unconscious.

He steals up the steps and out on the fire-escape. Peering cautiously into the room, he notices a combination of positions of electric fan, curtain and lighted gas jet which gives him an idea.

Cautiously reaching into the room he starts the fan going by pressing a switch. This blows the curtain against the gas jet and sets it on fire. The crooks don't see it until it has burst into flame. They are panic-stricken and run out. The doctor frees Lena and, beating the fire out, escapes down the fire-escape with her.

At the hospital the doctor does not let Mayme know of the rescue. He feigns great unhappiness, which stirs Mayme's deeper feelings of gratitude and desire for his happiness. She tells where Lena is still kept, as she believes, and gives the doctor up. Her recovery brings the doctor fame and wealth and marriage. Mayme sends the lovers a wedding present.

SOUTH AMERICAN ADMIRES GRETCHEN LEDERER.

GRETCHEN LEDERER, one of the well-known leading women of Universal City, playing the lead in "The Masked Woman," recently received a letter written in Portuguese from an admirer in Rio de Janeiro.

The writer declared he was a man of wealth and that he had admired her pictures more than any one he had ever seen on the screen. He inquired if there was anything he could do for her and anything she would like to have, and that it would afford him the greatest pleasure to provite it.

The clever actress finally had the letter interpreted and sent her admirer a handsome photograph, but said she could think of nothing that she really needed, although she appreciated the fact that her work was pleasing.

"THE LOST LODE"

DAUNTLESS girl braves sea in motorboat to save lover as lost lode is found. Bison two-reel melodrama. Direction by Henry McRae. Story by J. B. Rice. Scenario by William Parker.

CAST.

John Stepton	E. N. Wallack
Gloria	Edith Johnson
Tom Higgins	Edward A. Hearn
Edgar Collins	L. C. Shumway

"We have found the lode," said Higgins.

IN the mining venacular out west, the "lode" of a mine is the vein that contains the metal. It is the streak in the rock that has had the precious ore deposited in it. It is the function of the mining engineer to keep track of the lode, to follow it and see that it is not lost. For when the lode is lost the mine is practically useless. That was the reason that John Stepton was so worried when the lode of his mine was lost.

The Bison two-reeler, "The Lost Lode," produced by Henry McRae from the scenario by William Parker, presents a situation that gives an opportunity for as many thrills as were ever crowded into the confines of a two-reeler. There is all the excitement about the finding of the lost lode which will make the mine worth something, and when it is found the villains plot to kill young Edgar Collins, the mining engineer who has found the lode. When one of the drillers finds that there is a plan to kill Edgar and telephones Gloria there ensues one of the most thrilling races that has ever been staged. It is a race for a life, and a very dear one, too. Edith Johnson, in the part of Gloria, does remarkably well, especially in the race, where she has to start her motorboat and run it to the mine. There, after having arrived in time, she finds that she has no dory to get to shore. But this does not stop the plucky girl and she jumps into the water and swims to the shore in time to save the man she loves.

The story in brief follows:

John Stepton, owner of a once prosperous mine, finds himself on the verge of bankruptcy and is on the point of selling out to Graham, a chap who is picking up all the mines in the district. Edgar Collins, a young mining engineer, whom Stepton has engaged to trace a lost lode of the mine, rushes in and tells him that he thinks he has discovered the lode which leads under Gloria mountain. This spoils the sale.

Tom Higgins has been Stepton's assistant and is in love with Stepton's daughter, Gloria, who does not favor his suit, as her heart already belongs to Collins. One of the drillers has discovered a new vein and disclosed the place to Higgins, who tells him to keep his knowledge to himself and they will buy the mine from Stepton and then work it themselves.

Collins forms the plan of blasting the mountain and makes all preparations. Higgins and the driller decide to frustrate this by cutting the wires just as Collins is ready to press the button and then when he goes to investigate the wires will be put in contact and he will lose his life.

One of the men who is working for Collins is assaulted by one of Higgins' men, who rolls what he thinks is the dead body down the mountainside, but the man revives and manages to phone Gloria what has happened. She is away, but returns on her yacht and swims ashore. Higgins and his men tamper with the wires and pull the lever, causing the explosion, but Collins is not injured. So the picture ends happily as the lost lode has been found.

him and tell him that he must divide with them as soon as he gets a settlement. Grace overhears this, and, horrified, leaves the hotel. Mr. Darling has left for the city the night before, so Sam hurries to town after the two.

Meantime some of "Dippy's" gang have chloroformed "Dippy," thinking that he is Sam, and thrown him into a cellar to give "Dippy" time to win Grace's affections. When Olga and Dana return with the story of the sound berating which Sam gave them when they wanted him to divide the fortune, they release "Dippy" and dress him up again as Sam, for they have come to town on the same train with Grace and think she is planning an elopement. As a final effort they plan to carry Grace off before Sam can arrive.

Grace goes to her home, but when Olga and Dana arrive with "Dippy" she notes the deception immediately and phones for the police. Sam arrives just in the nick to time, for Olga and Dana have about overpowered Grace, and the two men battle, overturning and demolishing most of the furniture. The police arrive and take the trio to jail, and now at last Sam and Grace thoroughly understand each other, which, we presume, means that happiness is looming in sight for them after their many adventures.

Where Is My Wife?

BILLIE RITCHIE and Lucille Hutton in a two-reel L-Ko express. It speeds from start to finish.

"What is this, Billie?"

"WHERE IS MY WIFE?" is the title of the latest of the L-Ko laugh compellers, featuring Billie Ritchie and Lucille Hutton. The L-Ko Company is now progressing at such a rapid rate that it is hard to tell where they will end. Each release is better than the one before, or at least that is the way it seems to the average spectator.

Lucille Hutton, as she gets more experience, added to a natural ability to act comedy roles with especial regard for the ridiculous, bids fair to be a real acquisition. She is the subject of the front cover sketch this week.

But outside the stars the feature that makes a slap-stick comedy funny is the number of laughable bits of business that is included in the production. Here is where the L-Ko Company excels, as they contrive to get more funny things for their actors to do than appear in the films of other concerns in a whole month. When Billie in a bathtub goes sliding about the hotel, forced now one way and now another by the streams of water that are being turned on him, there is real comedy. Whatever the highbrows may say, a person that can sit still without laughing at a picture like this has a piece of dull lead where his funny bone ought to be.

Billie is the proprietor of a hotel, but his wife is the one who does most of the proprieting. Billie is a modest little fellow and is well content to do the entertaining of the house. He is very active about the place, showing every one how to perform their jobs, but he really shines at serving the ladies. One of these delicate creations arrives and Billie is all attention. But his wife says "No," and the ambitious lad is forced to sojourn under the desk. There he finds a way to get in a word or two by poking his head out from the bottom. He makes a little rendezvous with the lady without his wife learning of it. Then when the lady rings for soap he writes his love on the bar and covers it so that the sentiments are not apparent until the bar is used.

Then follows a series of mistakes that were most unfortunate, as they put the attentions of Billie in the wrong light. He sent a little note to the lady of his love by means of a fan. But the darn thing blew too far and the note came into the hands of her husband. Then there followed a great mix-up, as the doors of the two rooms that the manager and the lady had were changed. The husband went after Billie, and, strange to say, he found him in the most embarrassing of positions. Then there was a chase in which Bilile barely escaped the wrath of the other, and it all ended when Billie fell into a bathtub and was carried about the streets in the rear of an auto.

AN INNOVATION ON THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

THE program of the Universal for the week of November twentieth contains an innovation, as far this company is concerned. On Friday, the twenty-fourth, the first number of the Universal Screen Magazine will be issued, and will appear thereafter every other week on the same day. This feature comes under no existing brand head, but has a brand name all its own, just as the Universal Animated Weekly has.

In fact, the Screen Magazine is a sort of "Animated Fortnightly" and bears the same relation to the Weekly, that a Sunday newspaper, with its special feature sections, its illustrated supplements, and its magazine, bears to the daily newspaper which prints the news. The weekly is topical, and the magazine is general, in its interest.

It is arranged and edited by the same staff which prepares the Animated Weekly, and no two issues will be in the least alike. The subjects which will be dealt with pictorially are such as are discussed in any up-to-date magazine. New inventions will be shown in operation, nature and animal studies will be presented, the work of our Government in its various phases will be illustrated. The manufacture of various articles, and the picturesque side of industries will form a part of its contents. There will be beauty hints for the women "readers," and a humorous chapter for everybody.

The Screen Magazine is made up like a real magazine. It has a cover designed specially for it, a table of contents, and then come the articles, each preceded by a title page. It is as if some giant publication were being exhibited to you, while an unseen giant hand turns the pages for you.

Volume One, Number One, contains the follow "articles": New Inventions. A machine which tunnels through rock without blasting.

Dumb animal friends. U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry's crusade against "Ticks" which save $15,000,000 yearly. The germ shortens the life of the cattle by sucking their blood.

Beauty Hints. Every woman can be her own beauty doctor. Bar wrinkles without the aid of the beauty shop.

Studying Nature. Here is a beetle that eats grapes. Only half an inch long, this beetle can ruin a vinyard.

Animated Sculpture. "The Butterfly and the Flutterby." A few moments with Willie Hopkins, renowned sculptor.

The other issues as they appear will be as varied and interesting as this one. It is quite safe to predict that the Universal Screen Magazine will be one of the most popular features of "The Mightiest Program On Earth."

Agnes Vernon and her mother.

"BROWNIE" VERNON'S PAL IS HER OWN MOTHER.

THE very first thought in the life of dainty little Agnes Vernon, who plays the lead with Franklyn Farnum in the Bluebird Photoplay, "A Stranger From Somewhere," and who is affectionately called "Brownie," is the little mother in the Hollywood home awaiting the return of the actress from her labors of the day.

There are just two of them—"Brownie" and her mother—and they live for each other. Still, neither finds it a hardship, for they are more than mother and daughter—they are pals. Wherever "Brownie" goes her mother goes, too, and really the mother does not look older than her girl.

The little home is always full of sunshine. "Brownie" has her cat and her canary kept safely away from the Persian beauty and all three are glad when she gets home in the evening.

She is one of the favorites at the film capital. She is full of life, always merry and has a kind word or a joke for any one she chances to meet. In addition Miss Vernon is a clever actress and always is cast for important parts in Universal productions.

BRADLEY MAKES FIRST AUTHOR APPEARANCE

FOR the first time in moving picture annals an author has appeared before the screen as an adjunct to the showing of his photoplay. This author is Willard Bradley, mayor of Greenwich Village, and the photoplay is "Main 4400," the two-reel Victor comedy-drama starring Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon. The place was the Grand Opera House at 23rd street and Eighth avenue, New York City. Almost the entire population of the district known as Greenwich Village, over which Mr. Bradley holds sway, was present in a body to greet their favorite mayor and author, and the excellent production which the Universal made of this two-reel story under the direction of William Worthington amply justified their attendance, and the praise of its author. In token of their appreciation a beautiful loving cup fourteen inches high, and inscribed with a suitable token from the residents of Greenwich Village was presented to Mr. Bradley.

Incidentally, Herbert Rawlinson was severely injured in this picture. He has been confined to the hospital at Universal City for about a month since his accident on the stage, in which one of the ligaments of his right leg was broken. He had his first night out this week.

He was taken to Morosco's Theatre in Los Angeles, where Miss Maude Fealey was giving a party to a number of theatrical friends. Rawlinson moved around on crutches among the guests.

"It made me feel like I was really living again," said this Universal favorite on his way back to the hospital.

“THE DEVIL’S BONDWOMAN”--

Doria and the Prince.

Doria receives Mason.

The Prince meets Beverly.

“THE Devil’s Bondwoman,” which was written by Willis and Woods, put into scenario form by Maie Havey, and produced by Director Lloyd B. Carleton, employs the same cast of players, with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson at their head, which has been seen in several other successful Red Feather plays, “Barriers of Society” and “Black Friday” among them. This is a melodrama with an allegorical prologue, and its strong situations and entralling story give both the director and actors a fine opportunity, of which they have taken full advantage.

In the prologue Life’s Alchemist calls upon the different spirits to aid in making a mortal, but ere they have finished the Devil steals in and adds Love of Self. Then, laughing in fiendish glee, he takes the mortal and starts him on the road of life, showing him the easiest way. By the time he returns to the cavern another form—that of a woman—has been completed, but the Devil leaves the man to teach her the downward path.

Mason Van Horton, a young millionaire member of society, owns the Van Horton bank, located in the tenement district, but he has so little care for business that the bank, and the hundreds of poor workers who have entrusted their hard-earned savings to it, is on the verge of ruin.

FORTY-THIRD Red Feather production, written by Willis and Woods, with a prologue by Fred Myton; scenario by Maie Havey and produced by Lloyd B. Carleton, with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson in the leading roles.

CAST.

The Devil Prince Vandloup	Richard Morris
The Woman Beverly Hope	Dorothy Davenport
The Man Mason Van Horton	Emory Johnson
Doria Manners	Adele Farrington
John Manners	William Canfield
Aunt Barbara	Miriam Shelby
The Alchemist	Arthur Hoyt
Spirit of Fire	C. Norman Hammond

John Manners is the one most responsible, for he has business ability and has taken advantage of Mason at every turn. His wife, Doria, has social aspirations and is a typical vampire. She does her best to ensnare Mason, and he is nothing loathe, until he meets Beverly Hope, who has come to visit her Aunt Barbara.

There is something so sweet and innocent about Beverly that, for the first time in his life, Mason wishes that he had a clean slate, so that he could honorably ask her to share his life.

Doria is infatuated with Prince Vandloup, who makes love to her on every occasion. One night, after a gay party at the Manners home, Mason promises to see Doria alone. After all are gone he goes to her apartment, where she is waiting to receive him. As he starts towards her the face of Beverly comes before him and he rushes madly from the room, pasisng Manners on his way out. Doria, chagrined and piqued, tells her husband that Mason has forced his way to her room, and that she has to fight for her honor. Manners is angry enough to kill Mason, but she begs him to ruin him instead.

Manners does not take long to accomplish this feat. Mason, in an endeavor to make restitution, sacrifices his entire fortune. Beverly promises to marry Mason and helps him in every way, even going to his apartment when she has a premonition that he is about to kill himself.

Doria gives a reception to which she invites Mason. He goes, intending to have a talk with Manners. At the reception is one of the women whose earnings have been lost in the bank failure, but Doria orders her from the house. Instead of leaving, the woman slips unnoticed to Doria’s room, and there stabs herself. Later, while all the guests are assembled at dinner, Doria is startled by a drop of blood which falls from the ceiling. There is great consternation.

Mason is talking with Manners in the library, and the two are advised of what has happened. Manners goes to the woman up-stairs, and, as he is returning to the library overhears his wife and the Prince making love. He denounces her, and tells the astonished guests that she is the one who really is responsible for the failure of the bank and the ruination of Mason. He now realizes that she has lied about Mason. The Prince, after trying to besmirch the character of Beverly by reporting that he has seen her coming from Mason's apartments late at night, takes Doria away with him. His form changes to that of the Devil and she knows that she is in his power.

SMALLEY ASSISTS JULIAN.

"ANYTHING I can do for you here?" asked Phillips Smalley of Rupert Julian one day this week, poking his head through a window of a quaint building, one of several dozen that make up the Normandy village used in the Bluebird of "The Bugler of Algiers."

"You do not mean to say that are idle?" asked Julian in an incredulous tone.

"Yep, won't have anything to do for three or four hours," replied Smalley, "so for heaven's sake, get me busy."

"All right, Phillips; keep those French troops in order for me; see also that the musicians play appropriate music for the coming dramatic scenes, and also make sure that those people in the market place keep in position—that's a good fellow."

And Smalley did as he was asked. "Great fun," he said. "I'd love to help them all."

The general manager of Universal City happened to come along a little later, and when he saw what one of his leading directors was doing expressed himself as greatly pleased to witness such a spirit of co-operation.

TRUCKLOADS OF SUPPLIES ARRIVE DAILY AT U CITY.

THE receipt and dispatch of supplies by express at Universal City reaches heavy proportions daily and is increasing rather than diminishing.

However, under the system inaugurated recently by the officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the big shipments are handled without confusion and are quickly distributed to destined points.

Several times daily huge trucks arrive at the film capital with quantities of supplies for use in the making of pictures or the enlargement of the plant, and they return with quantities of finished product for the market.

The amount of material, supplies of all kinds, which is required by the large plant, is staggering to the uninitiated.

The ruined woman stabs herself in Doria's room.

"The Woman He Feared"

"I'm through," said Clive.

Claire encourages Gray in his love.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama. Written by E. M. Ingleton. Produced by Harry Millarde. A woman almost ruins her nephew's life to be avenged on a man who tired of her.

THE Woman He Feared," a Gold Seal three-reeler, could be produced by very few film companies, as it demands types that are so rare. Even at Universal City, the film capital of the world, Director Harry Millarde found it difficult to get all the types exactly correct. But the finished production of this strong drama of E. M. Ingleton's shows all the pains that have been expended on it as it is masterful in every respect.

The part of John Gray, a reformed drunkard who almost slips back into the black abyss from which he has emerged by dint of prodigious effort, is played by Franklyn Farunm, the youngest of the famous Farnum brothers. A whole page full could be said of the work of Clarissa Selwyn, who plays the part of Gray's aunt, the one who tempts him into his former ways to get revenge on her erstwhile lover. She plays the role with all the shades of meaning that another actress might have lost. Miss Selwyn has created the role of a villainess who is distinct from the traditional vampire, a villainess who destroys by her cold-blooded calculations.

A brief outline of the plot follows:

CAST.

John Gray	Franklyn Farnum
Henry Clive	William Canfield
May Clive	Vola Smith
Claire	Clarissa Selwyn
Myrtle Andrews	Adele Farrington

Henry Clive, a wealthy widower, placed his small daughter, May, in a convent when she was a mere child, and now that her education is completed he takes her home.

Clive, alone, has amused himself according to his fancy, but now that his daughter has come to live with him he decides to reform. So he informs Claire, his mistress, that their relations can continue no longer. Piqued, she plans revenge.

Her nephew, John Gray, is a drunkard. When he loses his position on a newspaper because of this, she sends him to a sanatorium, where his cure is eventually consummated, and she promises to make him her heir and draws up her will accordingly. Through her he meets an artist, Myrtle Andrews, who has received a commission from Clive to paint May's picture.

May makes the acquaintance of Gray and soon the two are fast friends. Claire, who has been watching the little love god at work, tells her regenerated nephew that she will provide him with ample funds for a wedding if he can win May, but he must keep secret the fact that she is his aunt. While not understanding the reason for the stipulation, Gray agrees.

The wedding takes place. To the wedding breakfast comes Claire with her friend the artist, Myrtle. Stealthily she exchanges her glass of champagne for his of ginger ale. Gray becomes intoxicated and shames the woman he married and her father, and Claire tells Clive that because he once spurned her that now she is avenged and also discloses the fact that Gray is her nephew. Clive orders Gray returned to his apartments, whither Claire follows with liquors, and when he recovers somewhat from his drunken stupor tempts him further.

May, meantime, has decided that her place belongs beside him. As she arrives Gray, somewhat awakened to what his aunt is endeavoring to do, berates her and orders her from the house. Claire, returning to her own home, intends striking Gray from her will, but ere she can do this an attack of heart failure ends her life. So Gray and his wife are free to live out their lives in peace.

HENRY McRAE "ROLLS THE BALLS."

ALL great men have some boyish hobby as a surcease from their mental labors. Director Henry McRae of the Universal gets his mental relaxation by "rolling the balls" at the various Japanese concessions at Santa Monica and Ocean Park, California.

At his summer home in Santa Monica Canyon he has sufficient oriental goods won at the games to stock a Japanese store. Every time McRae returns home in the evening with an odd-shaped bundle Mrs. McRae sighs, clears space for a vase or piece of lacquer ware and observes:

"Henry's been rolling 'em again."

His latest Bison picture is called "The Lost Lode" and features L. C. Shumway and Edith Johnson.

"The Emerald Pin"

LAEMMLE Two - Reel Drama, which teaches a lesson from the past. Story by E. M. Ingleton. Scenario by Maie Havey. Produced by Burton George.

THE story of "The Emerald Pin" is one that could be taken to heart by a great many of the girls of today. Burton George has realized all the possibilities of the plot of the story and the resultant is a picture play that is picturesque as well as intensely interesting from start to finish. Roberta Wilson has had her beauty admired so much of late that it is hardly necessary to go into further rhapsodies, though they are in order. Suffice it to say that a pretty girl is a constant quantity and time or period does not matter in the least. Roberta looks even prettier in the hoopskirts of yester year than she does in modern costume. Her portrayal of an old woman is one to which a great many more experienced actresses could point with pride.

"But promise you won't play for money," said grandma.

In the long ago.

Grandmother Kathleen	Roberta Wilson
Kitty	Eileen Sedgwick
Mrs. Dexter	Gretchen Lederer
Alvin Randolph	Charles Perley
Rose	Louise Owen
Rose's Cousin	Myrtle Gillette

The story in brief follows:

Kitty lives with her grandmother, a sweet-faced old lady, who guards her with all the love of a mother. One day a Mrs. Dexter, who belongs to the smart set, invites Kitty to a bridge party. Ere the party is over, however, the grandmother arrives and takes a rather rebellious Kitty home, and then she tells the story of her own life.

Long ago, when grandmother was a young girl she had a sweetheart, Alvin, and he finally asked her to become his wife. Kathleen was very happy and confided the news to her best friend, Rose, who was herself in love with Alvin. Her jealousy caused her to plot.

Alvin requests Kathleen not to gamble; Rose learns of this and invites Kathleen to a party, where she has secured the aid of her cousin to make Kathleen play. At first Kathleen wins, but later she loses all the time and in order to pay her gambling debts borrows money from Rose until the sum mounts.

Then Alvin presents Kathleen with a beautiful emerald pin. Rose tells Kathleen that unless she pays the sum borrowed immediately that she will go to Alvin for the money. This alarms Kathleen and at the suggestion of Rose she pawns the pin. Then Rose suggests that they go to Kathleen's home to view the presents—and the wonderful emerald pin. Kathleen with a quivering heart accompanies them.

But meantime the maid, who was an accomplice of a band of crooks, had admitted one of the gang and taken all the presents. This foils Rose's plan, but never so long as Alvin lived did Kathleen dare to wear the emerald pin which she later secured from the pawnshop.

Kitty promises never to gamble, and the grandmother feels that she has accomplished some good by disclosing her secret.

BULLETINS SUNSHINE.

Many of the companies of Universal City secure their "sea stuff" at the beaches near Los Angeles, but they never leave the film capital until assured of the right light for photography.

Consequently, the police of Santa Monica have adopted the plan of sending a daily bulletin by long distance telephone to the directors in order that they may know the exact conditions before starting on the eighteen-mile trip.

If it has been foggy or cloudy and the sun comes out word is at once sent to the photoplay studios and usually there follows an exodus of automobiles for the shore.

ACTORS' PRIZE HATS.

MUCH friendly rivalry exists over hats between Walter Belasco and Marc Fenton, two character actors of Universal City.

Walter is the proud possessor of one which was worn by his brother David when the latter produced his first success, "Cherry Blossoms," and he wears it whenever possible before the camera.

He was telling about his prize one day when he was overheard by Fenton, who returned shortly with an ancient style of chapeau on his head. He made the declaration that it was once worn by Edwin Booth, so this hat also is appearing on the screen.

Rupert Julian is Induced to

By MARJO

As he appears in the first part of "The Bugler of Algiers."

TO the average beginner the motion picture business holds out abundant promises of glory and easy money. In reality it is a hard, uphill fight, bounded on all sides by failure and heart-breaking reverses. It takes a great deal of courage, luck and perseverance to succeed."

So speaks Rupert Julian of the profession in which he has made a distinguished reputation. He is one of the most modest of men, so he probably does not realize that he is describing his own qualities. He has had an eventful career, in the course of which he has been a sailor before the mast, a tea salesman, the engineer of a donkey engine, and a gold prospector in Australia. Between each of these episodes in his life he has tried the stage, having appeared with many of the principal English actors, Sir Herbert Tree, Lewis Waller and Sir George Alexander among others. His last engagement was with Tyrone Power in the production in which he played Marc Anthony to Mr. Power's Brutus.

Julian was born in New Zealand, the son of a well-to-do sheep and cattle ranchman. He received an education to fit him for the Roman Catholic priesthood, but he had other ideas, and against the wishes of his parents he decided to follow them. The spirit of adventure was in his blood and would not be denied. When the Boer war broke out, Julian immediately volunteered for active service, and for two years he saw all the hardships and realities of war. Twice he was captured by the Boers. The first time he was lucky enough to be exchanged, and the second time he managed to escape. For three days he wandered through an almost desert country without food. At last he made his way to the coast and shipped on a sailing vessel as an able seaman. He was landed at Gibraltar, but he returned again to South Africa as soon as possible and remained with the colors until two months before the end of the war, when he was invalided home, the proud possessor of a lieutenant's commission. Mr. Julian has offered his services to his country in the present struggle, but so far has not been called upon.

He endorses the saying that one finds a use for any piece of knowledge in motion pictures. His military experience has been invaluable to him, and he has often been complimented on the accuracy of his military manoeuvers, since he has been directing photoplays. His engagement in pictures followed an introduction to the Smalleys, with whom his first work for the screen was done. He was induced, rather against his will, to try working for the screen, but, contrary to his expectation, he found it fascinating, and when the call to return to the stage went out that fall, Mr. Julian ignored it and remained in California, a devotee of the silent drama. Lois Weber is of the opinion that no better "villain" of the smooth society type exists than that which Mr. Julian has so often played for her. He had important roles in such successes as "Scandal" and "The Dumb Girl of Portici."

But the directing bee was firmly fixed in his bonnet, and once that insect begins to buzz in a man's brain, he won't be happy till he gets a job as director. It has always been the Universal policy to advance such of its players as seemed to show talent to the position of director, rather than give the opportunities to new producers from the outside. Julian was given his chance, and he so much more than made good that he was engaged by Bluebird to produce for them exclusively, and is now regarded as one of the cleverest of directors. Four successes stand to his credit with this organization. The first, a dramatization of Tennyson's "Maud," which was rechristened "Naked Hearts;" a screen version of "L'Abbe Constantin," called "Bettina Loved a Soldier;" another of an Emile Gaboriau story, called, on the screen, "The Evil Women Do," and his final picture, which will shortly be released, "The Bugler of Algiers," an adaptation of the novel, "We Are French," by Robert Davis, the editor of Munsey's. This is regarded as Julian's masterpiece, and one of the best, if not the best, picture which Bluebird has ever sponsored.

When one can prevail upon Mr. Julian to talk about himself and his profession from a personal angle, one is sure to hear things that are worth while. He is particularly interesting when he discusses that absorbing question, "How to get into the movies."

Rupert Julian as the old dict, in "The

"Really talented players are always in demand," he says, "and those who decide to try this uphill path have as good a sporting chance as in any other profession, if they go after success seriously and sincerely. There is no use in imagining that it is going to be easy, though the screen, perhaps, which finds a use for 'types' as well as actors, offers a slightly better opportunity than the stage. Personally, I believe in actors rather than types, but that is my personal preference. There are great rewards — there is no denying that. The three things most required in order to win them, are steadfastness, temperament and brains — just about the same things that one requires to make a success of anything, you see.

"I believe firmly in all possible preparation for a screen career, if you have time to get it. Undoubtedly there are aids to good performance which may be learned. Any sort of stage experience, even carrying a spear, is valuable. Dancing is especially important, as it improves the player's deportment. I have found, myself, that everything I have ever learned or seen or done, has been a help to me, both in acting for the screen and in the production of pictures. And I have certainly seen and done a good deal.

"After having prepared himself in every way he can think of, the applicant's next step is to get engaged by hook or by crook as an extra in a studio. I think I have never heard of any one who was really successful who did not begin as an "extra." It is the one direct route, in my opinion. So-called 'influence' and introduction are of no value; the thing to do is to chose your moment as you would a diamond, for presenting yourself to the director. I have seen the most promising people lose their chance because they applied to a director in an inopportune moment, when his mind was seriously occupied with something else. You may argue that the picture producer's mind always is occupied with something else. So it is—but the ideal producer is always on the lookout for new material of promise, and you may be lucky enough to strike the ideal producer. I said that luck was an essential factor in the game.

ıding over Kingsley Beneof Algiers."

"Go yourself. Don't send a long imaginative description of your capabilities and qualifications. Written applications are seldom considered. Photographs are always helpful, even if you have a personal interview, as a means of judging whether you 'screen' well. The briefest and best description of yourself is a photograph. When you have your chance to walk on and hand some 'regular actor' his hat, for heaven's sake, don't make a five-reel scenario out of it. Be natural at all costs, even if it hurts you. The great thing to avoid is 'acting.' That will come later, and if you have luck and your director is built that way, you will have a chance to pant and writhe to your heart's content. But your first stunts will be simple ones. Approach them in the same spirit. Many an actor has got his first job in pictures because he forgot he was an actor at all.

Rupert Julian, the typical actor, as he really appears.

"Of course, you will be coached. All extras and many experienced actors are coached. All that depends largely on the individual methods of the director. Originality is everything in this profession as in every other but at first you may think that you are never going to get a chance to show that you possess it. You will think that an automatom could do what you are asked to do just as well. Don't fear. Genuine originality will always show itself, and triumph in the end, no matter how exacting the director. Remember he is like the general of an army. He has to keep a vision of the whole, while you only see the small part in which you are concerned.

"If you have the theatre bug you can't keep away from the footlights. I had it. After failing at all honest work, I succumbed to the call, much to the dismay of my dear old mother, and the annoyance of my first stage director. He insisted that I should never make an actor, and it has taken me eighteen years to disprove it."

LIBERTY” began with a rush that is by no means common even with serials. Of course every serial has to arouse interest and lots of it, or else no one would go to see it. But “Liberty” has more than just interest. It had more thrills in the first few episodes than most serials can boast of for the whole fifteen or twenty episodes. And what was more, every episode ended with a situation that was so interesting that the spectator felt that he just had to see the next. That is, of course, the aim of every serial story, whether it is told in a magazine or on the screen.

When “Liberty” began so auspiciously the question that at once arose in the minds of the knowing ones such as the reviewers and the wiseacres in the Universal office was whether or not the company could keep it up. But now as the grand and glorious serial is coming into the homestretch (it is now going on toward the sixteenth episode), the interest is mounting with the advent of each new episode.

There have been battles of all kinds and intrigues, and sprinkled through the whole picture has been a generous dose of the stunts of Eddie Polo and Marie Walcamp. These two stars have covered themselves with glory and have furnished thrills galore. The man who plays opposite to Eddie in his fights must have a very unhappy home life indeed, or else he would not keep his job for a day. Marie has shown herself to be one of the most accomplished horsewomen in America.

Just a cursory glance at the last few episodes will prove that all this talk is not the proverbial “bunk” of the press agent. When Bob and his men are besieged in the little hut on the hill there is no fake about the bullets that are used. You can plainly see them spatter the sand and chip the plaster. It is a fight to grim death and if a person does not feel his pulse rise at the sight of it, he is not human or American.

When the major and his men are surrounded out in the desert and are facing almost sure death it must send a thrill through every nerve. As they dig a makeshift trench and prepare to sell their lives at the highest price and later as their Major is wounded when they stop in the midst of the battle to make a retreat for him, these are events that ring with the reality that convinces because they are true and are happening every day on the border. They make an impression that can never be forgotten.

These are but a few of the reasons why the statements at the top of this page are no mere boast. “Liberty” is the most exciting and popular serial that the Universal Company has ever run and that, of course, means that it is the finest that any company has ever turned out.

“LIBERTY,” EPISODE NO. 14.

At the close of the thirteenth episode Liberty and Pedro had been captured and were on their way to the prison at Chihuahua. Out on the desert Major Winston and his men are surrounded by a detachment of Mexicans, who outnumber them about three to one, but the Americans decide that they will fight, as they know that they will receive scant mercy at the hands of the bloodthirsty villains who are about them. But it is not long before numbers begin to tell, and, although the Americans put up a brave fight, they are getting the worst of it.

All this time Bob and his men have been held imprisoned in the ruins on the hill. They have been fighting to good advantage when the leaders of the troops that are opposing them decide that instead of wasting so many troops they will starve them out. This is very disheartening, as they have provender for only a few days left. Then some one makes a great discovery. From the hill it is possible to see the fight that the major and his men are having in trying to come to their aid. They see the latter's men cut down and realize that there is not much hope of assistance.

At last the major himself is wounded. The handful of his men who are left, feeling that the game is up and wanting to save their commander, dig a hole and put the major into it. They then fix the hole up with bayonets and put coats over so that he can breathe. When they are finished they have made a very safe retreat. The remainder of the soldiers are then wiped out by a charge that is led by Lopez in person.

Pedro and Liberty are now in the prison. Pedro is sitting in his cell and outside are two guards talking of the torture that they are going to put Pedro through. They have been drinking rather heavily and pay no attention to their prisoner. But Pedro is on the lookout and finds that the door is open. He takes advantage of this discovery and suddenly lunges against it. Then the guards turn on him and he grabs one about the legs and upsets him and the other he throws against the table. The one who has been thrown is now creeping up on him when Pedro suddenly turns and bowls him over with a blow on the jaw. He then is about to make his escape when the guards turn on him and he rushes to the other side of the room. Then as they follow he turns a back somersault over the guards, smashes down the door and gets into the corridor. But there all his efforts prove futile, as he is overpowered by superior numbers and taken to the torture room. As one of the guards is found to be dead and the other badly wounded the men who have hold of him want to subject him to the severest tortures.

In the meantime Liberty has found it a bit of masonry loose in the wall of her cell and by working very desperately manages to make it large enough to crawl through. She gets into an underground chamber, where she finds a pool of water and a number of skeletons. The walls are covered with slime and dirt and there can be heard the sound of dripping water. To add to the horror of the place there are all kinds of rats and vermin swarming about. Seeing no way of escaping here, she turns to go back when she finds to her horror that the whole has been closed, and that she is a prisoner in this awful dungeon.

WRECKS AEROPLANE IN "LIBERTY" SERIAL.

IN the tenth episode of "Liberty, A Daughter of the U. S. A." in which Marie Walcamp is featured with Jack Holt playing opposite, a real airplane flight was shown.

In the eleventh episode Director Jacques Jaccard ordered the wreck of the airplane. It is shown falling headlong down the cliff, catching fire as it lights. Eddie Polo drags Miss Walcamp from the wreckage.

RICHARDSON JOINS UNIVERSAL

JACK RICHARDSON, who is playing in "Giant Powder," under the direction of Henry McRae, at Universal City, has a record of having been "killed" more than any actor in the motion picture business.

Richardson has been playing Western "heavies" for the American Company for five years and no author ever thinks of sparing the life of a villain in a Western story.

"GUILTY"

AN IMP Two-Reel Drama which features Harry Carey, with Edith Johnson, in one of those Henry McRae pictures which have just one punch after another. The story was written by Ben Cohn and the scenario by William Parker. After a thrilling fight with kidnappers, Carey rescues the girl by a dare-devil leap from one motorboat to another.

IT is unusual for a Henry McRae picture to be released as an Imp, but this one came naturally under that classification. To most of the fans a release by any brand name would be as sweet, if it gave Harry Carey a chance to fight for his life and the honor of a girl against impossible odds. He has two of them in this and rescues her on both occasions just in the nick of time. He does it while wearing the ordinary dress of an every-day man, too, without any of the adjuncts of chaps, sombrero or six-shooter, which help to strike terror to the heart of an enemy. The story runs like this:

CAST.

Ramon	Harry Carey
Copeland	E. N. Wallack
Captain	L. C. Shumway
Nedra	Peggy Coudray
Benton	Lee Hill
Grace	Edith Johnson
Her Uncle	Marc Fenton

Ramon Valentine, an author of socialistic tendencies, who is living in the slums to gather material for a novel, finds himself under suspicion of murder. He has attempted to assist a poor family who are threatened with eviction by Copeland, a millionaire tenement house owner. He gains the enmity of Barnes, a detective, who comes to arrest him for the murder, and only the confession of Joe Pagliano saves Ramon from being charged with Copeland's death.

Joe tells of murdering Copeland because he turned a deaf ear to Joe's pleas that his baby was starving and he could not pay his rent, and then dies from wounds received in the battle with Copeland. Ramon assists the Pagliano family and becomes interested in Nedra, Joe's eighteen-year-old daughter. This growing love is blasted by Jimmy, a slum boy, who has been acting as Ramon's ferret. He says that Nedra is associated with a band of thieves. Ramon goes that night to see for himself. While Nedra is breaking into a house Ramon sees a beautiful girl being kidnapped. He recognizes her as a girl whose life he saved in a thrilling auto accident. He battles with the kidnappers, but is outnumbered. They pursue Ramon and the harbor police engage in a running duel as the kidnappers are fleeing with the girl in a motorboat. Ramon rescues the girl in the nick of time.

Grace recalls Ramon's previous heroism in saving her life, and it is evident that Ramon has found some one who is going to become the heroine of his real life novel.

"A Million-Dollar Smash"

L-KO Komedy in two reels, with Lucille Hutton, who is the daughter of the station agent with a faithful lover, Jimmie. Nitro Ned does his best to trouble the course of true love, but gets his in the end.

Lucille forgets about father.

Nitro Ned is foiled again!

LUCILLE HUTTON, with a background of a rural railroad station, is the particular star of "A Million-Dollar Smash." The comedy simply stuns the spectator by its recklessness with the United States currency. Bills of enormous denomination are sent fluttering over the screen in an irresponsible manner which causes us involuntarily to clutch our wallets. Of course, everything comes out all right in the end, but a terrible lot happens before that. Here is some of it:

Lucille is the sweetheart of Jimmie, who is her father's assistant. Her father is the station agent at Koko, a very important post, as there are very many shipments of gold that are all the time coming through. One day they receive word that there is a great shipment coming and there is much excitement.

On the train that is bringing the gold is "Nitro Ned" and his gang, who plan to get the money. They see the bank messenger and are about to grab the coin when he gets off at Koko. So the crooks follow and plot.

The first thing that Ned does is to "get in soft" with the daughter of the master. The station master is very well pleased, as he does not like Jimmie and the new lover seems so genteel. So Jimmie is bounced and the new man takes his place.

The crook now proceeds to get the combination of the safe by means of a looking glass. Then all there is left to do is to get the "swag." This is not so easy, however, as the old man is usually on the lookout. Finally they decide that the time has come, but Jimmie is on the job and holds them up with a gun. Then they lock the boy in the safe and plan to take the whole thing. The express freight is coming through that morning, so they plant a lot of dynamite so as to blow the safe into one of the vacant cars.

The fuse goes off at the right time and the safe is blown into the car. They proceed to side-track the car and finally separate it from the rest of the train. But they fail to take everything into account. Soon the car is running wild and they are powerless to stop it. It gets to a town and goes through the streets, much to the astonishment of the natives, who stand agape and cannot make out what it is all about.

But the car cannot be stopped, and when it comes to a cliff the poor thing does not know enough to halt. So the car and the men in it all go over the cliff in a whirlwind finish that is the greatest ever. Jimmie has just enough strength left to climb out of the ruins and capture the crooks and so gains undying glory and the girl whom he loves.

McRAE MAROONED ON ISLAND.

DIRECTOR HENRY McRAE of Universal City has put in a great many years filming stories of thrills, excitement, railroad wrecks, shipwrecks and almost everything that contains a punch, but a few nights ago he and the members of his company went through an experience which was more realistic than comfortable.

The McRae company, including Edith Johnson, Edward Hearn, L. C. Shumway, E. N. Wallack and Marc Fenton, were transported by a launch to a small island off the coast of Catalina Island for the purpose of filming scenes in McRae's production of "The Lost Lode," the two-reel Bison mining drama. The launch returned to San Pedro and was to return in the evening for the photoplayers.

Late that afternoon a heavy fog enveloped the Southern California coast and a heavy sea was running.

The master of the launch was afraid to attempt the journey so he remained in port.

On this bleak island was an old shack used in days gone by, by fishermen, and in this the members of the company sought shelter from the cold, damp air of the night. Grace Bliss, of Avalon, also was with the company as Miss Johnson's best friend.

The actors did the best they could to keep the room warm, but the company had to remain all night without food or sufficient clothing to keep warm.

"I admit we were mighty glad when the launch came for us the following morning," declared McRae in telling of his experiences. "This business of being marooned is all right on the screen, but personally I don't appreciate it in real life."

Front cover of the Japanese Movie Magazine for September.

KATSUDO NO SEKAI.

THIS cut is taken from the cover of the Japanese Movie Magazine, or, as it is called in Tokyo, Japan, where it is published, "Katsudo No Sekai." The cover is published in three colors, green, gold and red, and is extremely attractive, showing Miss Cunard breaking through an oval hoop of gold paper. It is interesting to note the Japanese eyes which the artist has given to Miss Cunard. Japanese are not at all partial to eyes unless they are almond-shaped.

The magazine itself is full of stories about American films, particularly Universal films. "Lucille Love," "The Campbells Are Coming," "Peg o' the Ring," are the subjects of large articles; "A Trip to Universal City," biograpies of Francis Ford, Grace Cunard, Rita Jolivet, an explanation of Miss Cunard's psychological expression, a comparison of Grace Cunard and Pearl White, gossip of Miss Cunard's real life, story written about Miss Cunard by Mr. Tom Cochrane of the Universal Film Company, and caricatures of Francis Ford as Hugo Lubeque, and other players, make up an extremely interesting number.

The story of the psychological explanation for Grace Cunard's expression has been translated for us by a Japanese friend, and is herewith enclosed for the benefit of English-speaking admirers of Miss Cunard.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPLANATION OF CUNARD'S EXPRESSION.

By K. Yamana.

(Translated from the Katsudo No Sekai by a Japanese Friend for the Moving Picture Weekly.)

SHE was in the water of Pacific Ocean about one hours during picture has been taken. It is very hard case for young lady like her, and picture was taken while she was swimming in the high sea, also she must have control of other actor and actress. That is most hard thing for young lady but she always does like those case with struggle and eagerness.

Her Intrepidity of Company.

Also she went to Rocky Mountain so often for picture taken with other follower, some day they spend time so much to picture taken, therefore they could not go back to headquarter. Of course there is no human dwellings in the deep mountain like Rocky. By reason of they decided to make company without tent and spend one night on the Rocky. It seems most hardest case for her, because she always restrospection for that night and talk to every people.

How She Leading Her Followers.

She is always leading her followers with love and advice to them, that to take the picture is always followed a hard case, but, too hard case make a good film so we must need to hard practice for to overcome difficulties. If anybody usually have good practice there is nothing matter when we do for difficulty, also actor and actress must have good healthy. If we have good health we can do every thing how it is hard.

TOM COCHRANE RETURNS.

Various allusions to Mr. Tom D. Cochrane on this page attest the extremely efficient manner in which he has started the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's activity in the Orient, and particularly in Japan. His work well started in the Philippines, he continued the same methods, adapting them, of course, to Japanese requirements in the land of the Rising Sun. Having a keen appreciation of the value of publicity and advertising, Mr. Cochrane made it a point to solidify the company's business in the minds of the leading publications which appertain to films, and so successful has he been in this particular, that all of the magazines of this character which come under the observation of the Home Office have carried a great preponderance of Universal matter. Mr. Cochrane has finished his preliminary labors in Japan, and has just returned to this country, and for a short time is visiting his brother, George Cochrane, at Universal City.

The letter from our correspondent, K. Sakamoto, has been crowded off the page this week, but his remarks on Universal films in Japan will appear in the next issue.

STORIES OF THE ONE REEL PHOTOPLAYS

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Issue No. 1.

The first article in the first issue of the Universal Screen Magazine shows a new machine for tunneling through solid rock without any kind of a blast. The contrivance consists of a surface of hammers that deliver 14,000 seven-ton blows per minute at the rock and so eat it away.

Next comes the campaign the government is conducting against the ticks that each year kill $15,000,000 worth of cattle. The cattle are given baths in an tiseptic solution.

Beauty hints are next on the bill of fare. In this case they ought to be valuable as they are posed for by one of the beauties of the stage, Catherine Calvert. The proper way to use cold cream, powder, etc., are all shown.

Next some wonderful views of a beetle that is causing great damage in the vineyards of the country are shown. This is the bug that is eating up the grape crop every year.

"ACCUSING EVIDENCE."

Special Big U Drama.

Lon is a member of the Northwest Mounted and is in love with a little girl of the woods. He is accused of a breach of duty and rather than have the morale of the corps suffer he submits to the false evidence. Later he is vindicated and the picture ends happily.

"SAMMIE JOHNSIN AT THE SEASIDE."

and "In and Around Ancient Japan," as Seen by Dr. Dorsey.

Powers Split Reel.

Sammie Johnsin is a character that is not new to the admirers of the comedy cartoons of the films. He has appeared off and on on the Universal Program and now he is performing some more of his comic antics at the seashore. He almost gets drowned and then plays the hero, but in the end he is happy as all the heroes of the films ought to be.

The other half of the film is the continuation of Dr. Dorsey's series about Japan. Some of the fine old ruins are shown and after seeing them it is not hard to believe that Japan had a civilization that antedated ours by many years.

Imp Drama.

CAST.

"Spike" Dugan	Malcolm Blevins
Dan Moran	Charles Cummings
Nellie Moran	Betty Schade

"Spike" has been sent to prison by the evidence of Dan and has sworn to have revenge. One day Dan reads that he has been released and is terrified. At the time he is sick and Nellie goes to the druggist's for some medicine. The medicine is poisonous, so that when he hears "Spike" coming Dan pours some of it into a glass of whiskey to cheat "Spike" of his revenge. But when "Spike" arrives he sees the whiskey and, thinking to drink to the other's health, he takes the draught and is killed before the officers, whom Nellie has brought, can arrest him.

Eddie imagines that he is ill, so he consults Dr. Dopum, at the same time that Boggs, who is really desperately ill, does so. The physician promises to mail them the result of the consultation, but Eddie receives the one meant for Boggs, and Boggs the one meant for Eddie.

Eddie is surprised to learn that he only has six more days to live and bemoans the fact he has no funds with which to have a last gay time. He drops the note, which is picked up by Lee, whose business it is to procure cadavers for a near-by medical college. He persuades Eddie to sell him his body and pays him in advance.

At the beach Lee follows Eddie about, ever reminding him of the six days. Eddie rescues Miss Dean from the unwelcome attentions of Boggs and they fall in love. It happens that Dr. Dopum also visits the beach, and so Eddie discovers the error. But his nemesis—the funereal Lee—is not to be put off and demands the body, dead or alive. But he is persuaded to pursue instead the unhappy Boggs, leaving Eddie and Miss Dean to their happiness.

"HER MESSAGE TO HEAVEN."

Special Laemmle Drama.

This is the story of a little girl who has been told by the pastor that heaven is a real place and she so firmly believes this that she calls up and asks to speak to heaven. But by accident she overhears a dire plot, which, by her efforts, is frustrated.

The story with its touching message is charmingly played by one of the clever juvenile actresses of Universal City, which boasts of a great number of wonderful child players on its roster. The picture will have a strong appeal to juvenile audiences.

"THEIR FIRST ARREST."

Joker Comedy.

Story by Smythe Addison
Produced by W. W. Beaudine.

Sam	William Franey
Jake	Milburn Moranti
Sheriff	Charles Conklin
Widow	Gale Henry
Helen	Lillian Peacock

Sam and Jake have graduated from a correspondence detective school and are anxious to get to work. Both are in love with Helen, the Sheriff's daughter, but the latter orders them to leave his daughter alone. While they are still at the house the Sheriff gets a message from a widow living near by that a burglar is in the house, and Sam and Jake both scent a field for action.

The Sheriff sets out to capture the crook—and the two detectives do the same. Meantime the crook has ransacked the place and the widow is cringing in terror in one of the rooms. When the Sheriff arrives she does not recognize him in his make-up, and, mistaking him for the crook, faints. The crook in an adjoining room is as frightened as is she.

The widow revives and herself captures the crook whom Helen had taken into custody, but released when Jake and Sam appeared with the Sheriff, whom they declared was the real burglar. The widow now marches the crook to the station, where the others are putting the Sheriff through the third degree as per the instruction book. The Sheriff removes his disguise and he and the widow decide that they can find happiness together, and so Helen wins a new mother.

"MOTOR MAT AND HIS FLIV" And Ceylon as Seen by Dr. Dorsey.

Powers Comedy Cartoon and Educational.

Motor Mat is a new creation and he will not last very long at the speedy rate that he is travelling. He buys a flivver from a mail order concern and after it arrives by parcel post his troubles begin. He starts the thing and then cannot stop it. He rides past the policeman and does a million things that he should not do, and at last the motor gives out. But this does not discourage him, and he gets a little squirrel to be his engine.

The second half of this film gives some more of the incomparable scenery that Dr. Dorsey has taken for the Universal Program.

Jack returns from college and is told by his father that he is going to start him in business as his partner. Early the next morning Jack reports for work and finds that he is to learn the game from the ground up, and is accordingly made apprentice to the boss plumber. While on the first job he learns the art of loafing, and on returning to the shop is called up by his girl, who invites him to an afternoon reception. He agrees to come, but Spike forces him to stick.

At the girl's home a miniature fountain, which has been arranged on the dining room table, fails to work, and the butler sends for the plumber. Spike and Jack are assigned to the job. Jack is compelled to crawl under the table, while Spike turns the water on in the kitchen, where he gets to flirting with the cook and forgets Jack's predicament. The guests gather around the table and Jack is unable to escape without disclosing his identity. After various difficulties with the fountain, in which Jack's rival, as well as Spike himself gets a soaking, Jack is dragged forth, where explanations follow and Jack attends the party in his overalls, while Spike makes himself solid with the cook and likewise enjoys a good meal.

"THE TORMENT."

Special Big U Drama.

Before Jack Bronson's father dies he tells his son the story of his life. It seems that in his youth he had been rather wild out in a town in the West and had contracted a disease which he had transmitted to his son. The mother had died of a broken heart. Jack forgives his father, but is heartbroken himself, as it interferes with his plans. He is engaged to be married to a girl, yet he can hardly ask her to marry a man who is damaged goods.

But when he tells his sweetheart all this she laughs and says that she wants him anyway. So the picture ends with the somewhat dubious happiness of the couple.

CAST.

John Morgan	Rex Rosselli
Lucille Morgan	Betty Schade
Frank Wilson	Lloyd Whitlock

And one day Lucille is riding through the park she notices a couple of crooks climbing into a machine just ahead of her. Sensing that something is wrong, she follows them through the street, and, picking up a couple of cops, rescues him. Then she takes him to her home and he meets her father.

In the days that follow Lucille and Wilson become fast friends and one night Lucille and her father are invited by Wilson to his home, where he shows them a priceless diamond that he has brought from Egypt. While Lucille and Wilson are admiring a beautiful necklace in front of a mirror Morgan secretes the famous diamond in the old-fashioned locket which Lucille had removed. Lucille sees this in the mirror.

Wilson finds the diamond missing and gives Morgan three minutes in which to return the stone. Morgan is frightened. Lucille quietly opens the locket, takes out the diamond and throws it on the floor. When the three minutes are up Wilson rises to phone the police. His feet touch something on the floor—it is the diamond—and he begs forgiveness for his rash accusation.

Katty's aspiring mother has decided that she shall marry the wealthy bachelor, Nathan Bush, but Katty is not over enthusiastic.

Mrs. Lee sends Katty to the city to study music for a year, after which she is to return home, marry Bush and lead the village choir. But, arrived in the city, Katty longs for the bright lights and all their supposed joys. She makes the acquaintance of a young reporter, Alan Martin, and he asks to call, thinking that he will have a quiet evening with the little country girl. But he reckoned without his host, for Katty had determined that she would see the sights.

With the aid of a couple of girls in the rooming house Katty gets "dolled" and is such a sight that she almost takes Alan's breath away. Alan turns back and tries to persuade her to tell him if she is without funds.

At last they become very good friends and on their honeymoon they go to see Nathan and the choir—go to see and nothing more.

"THE LONG SEARCH."

Special Big U Western Drama.

The long search ends out on the border with the death of Starlight, an Indian girl. She was stolen from her cradle by the Indians when she was only a child and her brother, at the deathbed of his mother, promised to look for her until he found her, if it took the better part of his life to accomplish his purpose. True to his word, he goes to the border and enlists in the army. One day after a raid on the camp of some Indians they find an Indian girl who has been wounded. When he bends down to comfort her he finds to his surprise that it is his long lost sister, whom he recognizes by the birth mark on her arm.

The thrilling-sensational-patriotic Universal Serial Glorious

PROOF Of the Pulling Power of this Great Serial

"I have broken all records with that wonderful serial, 'LIBERTY,' although I have used numerous other Universal Serials, as well as some of the Pathe and others."—Wm. Emmerich, Blue Bell Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

"'LIBERTY' is the biggest MONEY-GETTER of all the serials we have ever run, and we have run some good ones. The picture is full of action and punch, loaded with thrills, right up to date and pleasing my patrons."—I. M. Owens, Mgr., Strand Theatre, Barnesville, Ohio.

"Our public delighted with 'LIBERTY.' Doing a splendid business and attendance increasing every night. Photography splendid and all features clean and well cut."—West Side Theatre, Denver, Colo.

"Put 'LIBERTY' over big yesterday in spite of opposition opening of another serial. I believe that 'LIBERTY' is the best serial I have ever tied to."—Fred McCoy, Gem Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

"'LIBERTY' has been a wonderful success in our house, and we have a large following on this picture. I figure that I turned away between six and seven thousand people today, who were disappointed because I could not take care of them."—Cameragraph Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Twin City and Northwest exhibitors consider first episode of "LIBERTY" greatest of all serials. At private showing exhibitors went wild, saying "LIBERTY" is greater than "The Battle Cry of Peace." Thirty-one Minneapolis theatres have booked "LIBERTY" at big prices, despite the fact that seven other new so-called serials go begging.—Fred S. Meyer, Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis, Minn.

John Fairmeadow Arrives.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN in

"The Measure of a Man"

With LOUISE LOVELY

FORTY-THIRD Bluebird Photoplay. Story by Norman Duncan. Scenario by Maud Grange. Produced by Jack Conway, with J. Warren Kerrigan, Louise Lovely and a strong cast of Bluebird Players.

THE forty-third Bluebird photoplay is a red-blooded drama of a mining camp, to which comes a young fellow seeking a refuge from his dissipated life. The rough miners take him for a "parson" and the situation is such that the deception cannot be avoided. Against his will he is forced to play the role of sky-pilot. It is not an easy one, but the end more than justifies the means, and the scene closes on a double wedding. The story was written by Norman Duncan, put into scenario form by Maud Grange, and produced by Jack Conway, in the heart of the redwood forests of southern California. Conway was provided with a splendid cast of players, including Warren Kerrigan and Louise Lovely in the leads; Harry Carter, the super-villain of the Bluebird organization; Ivor McFadden and Marc Robbins. Conway has known how to get the very best from them. The story runs as follows:

To a little Western town comes John Fairmeadow—in answer, so Pattie and her friends think, to her prayer that God will send a parson to say the last sad rites over the body of her father, who has died suddenly. John is not a minister—far from it, in fact. His coming to this small town is for the sake of trying to overcome his habits of dissipation; but his clerical looking garb convinces the simple and uncouth Westerners that he is a preacher of the gospel. John, kind of heart, and learning of the bereavement and sorrow that have come to Pattie, cannot refuse.

CAST.

John Fairmeadow	J. Warren Kerrigan
Pattie	Louise Lovely
Billy	Ivor McFadden
Donnie	Marion Emmons
Jack Flack	Harry Carter
Jinny	Katherine Cambell
Pete	James Horton
Tom	Marc Robbins

But that is not all. Now that a parson has come, Pattie is not willing to let him go, and, before John realizes what has happened he has promised to remain in the little town, where he at once is respected, both because of his profession and because when necessity arises, he can use muscular force, a possession which always commands homage in a town of this type.

Some miners in a nearby town, learning of the coming of the new parson, invite him to pay them a visit. John feels himself a hypocrite, but so great is Pattie's faith in him that he must go on.

Pete conducts the saloon of the town, with the help of his small son, Donnie, who is beloved by all. He and Pattie are great friends, and while the parson is absent in the other camp they persuade the miners to construct a crude church and cabin. The miners are all rough, but they have an innate respect for what is good.

While in the other camp John meets with much opposition from a certain element, at the head of which is Jack Flack, a divekeeper and a power in politics. John, however, goes on with his work, much to the detriment of the proceeds of the dive and saloon. Jinny, one of the dance hall women, with a small baby, hears John preach and repents of her mode of life so deeply that she decides to give it up. As the minister leaves she places her baby in his path and then follows him all the way back to the other camp. John takes the baby to Pattie's home, and while she is crooning over it she sees the face of Jinny at the window. Jinny is the daughter of Tom, a miner, whom Pattie knows. John persuades him to take back his erring daughter, but he vows vengeance upon Jack Flack, who had brought about her downfall.

Billy, one of the miners, and not a half-bad sort, confides to the minister that his mother is waiting for him, and John promises that when Billy comes back from his prospecting trip in the hills he will send him home before he squanders all his money.

Flack, with some of his friends, decides to revenge himself upon the parson. They visit the camp. While they are in the saloon Billy comes in for tobacco, and Flack grossly insults him and knocks him down. Then Flack with his men start out to "get" the minister. But Billy, somewhat recovered from the blow, overtakes the despoiler of his girl's honor and kills him. This makes it pretty bad for Billy, as Flack has practically controlled the courts. But John shoots him in the shoulder, and so makes it appear that Billy shot Flack in self-defense. One of the miners helps nurse him and before long he and Jinny are in love and go to the "parson" to be married. John can carry the deception no further, so tells that that, while he had once studied for the ministry, he is not ordained. They declare that they will wait until he is, so he once more resumes his studies.

Billy finds the temptation of drink is too strong, and at last it is only by physical force that the "parson" removes him from the saloon and takes him to his cabin. Billy struggles desperately and John is compelled to tie him up. On the "parson's" dresser is a bottle of whisky which he has left there to prove to himself that he has overcome the drink habit. Billy struggles to reach this; for in the meantime a board of examiners have come to examine the "parson" for his ordination. Because of his rough clothing they are not very favorably impressed. Hearing the noise in the next room the "parson" goes in to Billy, and in the struggle some of the whisky is spilled upon his clothing. The examiners declare him unfit for the ministry, but they do not leave without a sound berating from Billy, who has been sobered by their denunciation of his friend.

Later, Billy leaves to visit his mother. He also makes a visit to the bishop, telling him of the work of their "parson" and asking that he be ordained. The bishop finds that Billy does not even know John's name. So interested does the bishop become in the good done by the minister that he decides to return with Billy and see for himself.

When the bishop arirves the "parson" is with Pattie and is telling her of his love. The "parson" turns out to be the bishop's son. It is with joyous heart that the bishop ordains his son, and then performs the double marriage ceremony for him and Pattie and for Jinny and Billy.

Physical force is necessary in making converts.

LOIS WEBER TO DIRECT BEN WILSON.

FOR the first time in nearly three years, Ben Wilson is without a directing job, and he says he feels like the proverbial "fish out of water."

Wilson has just finished his three-reel Universal Special production, "Honor Thy Country." Now he is to enact the principal part in a feature photo drama which Lois Weber is preparing for the screen. Wilson is the exact type required for the part, and ily gave his consent. He says it feels strange to be without a script in his pocket.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO.—Authentic report has it that theatres in Quebec Province will remain open on Sunday, if the action of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke is unquestioned. Mr. Grequire, manager of this house, states that he has had his lawyer go fully into the question, but there is not anything in the laws of the province to prevent them from opening on Sunday. Montreal shows at present remain open seven days in the week, therefore it seems likely that theatres in the province will follow suit.

The Universal Film Company at St. John, N. B., received some unexpected publicity last week. Mr. Margetts, the manager, is the possessor of a very fine bulldog which succeeded in taking five prizes in the dog show, which was held on October 10th and 11th. It also made a very big bid for the silver loving cup.

Mr. M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Universal exchanges, made another periodical trip to Canada, visiting this time the Montreal office.

Many pretentious plans are being made for the carrying on of the Bluebird business, which is growing tremendously. Mr. Hague, general manager for Canada, also met Mr. Hoffman at Montreal and completed arrangements which have been under discussion for some time.

Mr. Jules Levine, who successfully inaugurated the Beauty Contest in Winnipeg, paid a visit to Toronto last week on his way to New York. Mr. Levine has been appointed in charge of the Bluebird sales in the Western provinces and assumes his duties Monday, October 30th. Mr. Levine has been in the film game in the West for about five years and has a very comprehensive experience. In his new capacity he should be a splendid success, as he has a product well worthy of his efforts.

A great change is coming over the film market in Canada. Over a year ago the Western provinces began to show a decided preference for five-reel features. This has now become the accepted program for the West, but until lately the regular program has been strongly entrenched in the Eastern provinces. However, the last six months have seen a steady swinging of the current in the opposite direction and today Ontario exhibitors are showing a decided tendency to purchase big features. In Montreal this has been carried to an almost abnormal degree, as the theatre men are competing one with the other to secure the biggest productions possible, with the result that many of them are sacrificing their profit to the exchanges who are booking these features. Program companies in existence in Canada are now completing their arrangements to book their product in a somewhat different manner to the past and the old-time theatre exchanges are now purchasing comedies, serials and weeklies, so that they may meet every requirement of the exhibitor.

WINNIPEG, Man.—That a better understanding between motion picture censors and the film exchanges in Winnipeg and Manitoba will result from the conference this week between Hon. Edward Brown and the film men, was the opinion just expressed by Mr. Brown. Censors will be less severe, will speed up their work so exchange managers will not have to pay rent on films when they are not being shown, and high-class pictures of such a nature as to make them "questionable" for children, will be permitted to be shown to "adults only," said Mr. Brown. He conferred Friday with members of the censor board, and urged less severity in dealing with motion pictures.

To speed up the censoring work an additional projection machine will be installed in the censors' headquarters, so two films may be considered at the same time. Several of the censors can pass judgment on one film, and several will take care of another at the same time. This, it is expected, will do away with the theatre owners' complaint against delays. In respect to pictures that may be passed by the censors for "Adults only," it is announced that this rule will be strictly enforced. Motion picture theatres will be required to bar all children from their playhouses when such films are being shown. In this way, it is said, Winnipeggers will have a chance to see many worthwhile "movies" that otherwise would be censored.

IOWA NOTES.

By C. S. STEVENSON.

THE employees of the Laemmle Film Service at Des Moines were recently entertained by their manager, D. B. Lederman, at his country home. Following a hard week of night work in completing an invoice the force was turned loose at Mr. Lederman's home and enjoyed itself to the limit. Following a lunch, the crowd spent the evening in dancing, singing and entertainment of various kinds, each department giving a stunt. The function was given for the purpose of bringing the employees closer together and creating a spirit of good will and co-operation, both from the standpoint of the company and from that of the employees. Mr. Ledermans' office has always been commented on as being one of courtesy and cordiality toward all, and similar gatherings such as this lead Mr. Lederman to believe that this desirable spirit will be strengthened and still closer co-operation and more efficiency obtained.

The Des Moines Bluebird office reports the last week in October as a record one from the standpoint of total rental and of new business obtained.

"Bluebirds are certainly going great in Iowa," recently said Nicholas Amos, Des Moines Bluebird manager. "Our pictures are selling themselves. 'Undine' is still proving to be one of our most popular pictures, while 'Hop, the Devil's Brew,' is also much in demand. Our later releases are making very good showings and we are getting contracts for regular business every day. The future of Bluebirds in Iowa looks great!"

The recently installed supply and equipment department of the Des Moines office is resulting in lots of business, according to D. B. Lederman, local manager. "We installed this department," said Mr. Lederman, "in order that our exhibitors could spend their money in their own State.

A new traveler with the Universal out of Des Moines is R. F. Crawford. Mr. Crawford has had a varied experience in the film game. He was booker here for the General Film Company and later transferred to the same company's office in Minneapolis. He returned to the Des Moines Universal once as booker for a short while, resigning to take over a theatre in Des Moines. He is now propritor of the Amuzue Theatre in the Iowa capital. His wife manages the theatre during his absence on the road.

'The Play's the Thing."

A Bluebird Poem

By M. F. Todd.

A Bluebird hopped on the bough of a tree
And warbled a song of prosperity.
His joyous tones sent thrills through the air,
And attracted the crowds from everywhere.

Young and old all flocked to the tree
To hear what the Bluebird's song might be.
Though it told quite a bit of the Joy of Spring,
The theme of his song was, "The Play's the Thing."

The business man stopped in his hourly grind,
For the Bluebird's music his thoughts had entwined.
His hopes for bright fortune arose then and there,
And his burdens were lightened—he had not a care.

On went the song—" 'Tis Spring, 'Tis Spring.
The Play's the Thing—The Play's the Thing."
Everyone listened; the song true did ring,
For they all well could see "The Play's the Thing."

The stars in the skies looked down with reproach,
For the Bluebird had dared on their realm to encroach.
Already they felt that the time was at hand
When the Bluebird would reign throughout the land.

The kiddies danced and shouted with glee;
The Bluebird song swayed the old oak tree.
Old age forgot its rheumatics, to sing,
And joined in the chorus—"The Play's the Thing."

A downcast exhibitor passing by Stopped and listened and heaved a sigh,
For the public preferred other shows to attend,
The reason for which he could not comprehend.

"The world has no use for a failure," said he;
"I'm down on my luck—there's so many like me."
But just then the Bluebird song touched the right string,
For its notes reached his ear—"The Plays the Thing."

Back to the city his feet fairly flew;
He was filled with the glory of what he now knew.
Said he, "I'll work and do everything,
To prove to me patrons, 'The Play's the Thing.' "

Now everyone's happy; everyone's gay!
When the Bluebird happens to chance his way.
It's a Happiness token when he starts to sing,
"The Play's the Thing—The Play's the Thing."

TOO AFFECTIONATE SCENERY.

"Cut to five feet," the censors bleat,
"That orgy in Reel Four,
"Where the fresh breeze caressed the trees,
"And wavelets kissed the shore!"

Standing over him with naked sword and murderous mien, the Commander of the Moors, ordered the French bugler to blow the retreat. Looking death squarely in the face, and mentally saying good-bye to all things earthly, the heroic bugler blew—not the retreat, but the charge. No episode in the world's history reveals greater valor than this. It is one of the stirring scenes in

"The Bugler of Algiers"

A screen version of the novel "WE ARE FRENCH" from the All-Story Weekly Magazine, by Robert H. Davis and Perley Poore Sheehan.

The producing cast, flanked by the gorgeous mountain scenery of France and Prussia, and exquisite photography, is headed by such brilliant players as Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, Kingsley Benedict and Zoe Rae, the infant prodigy who has already, at the age of 8, earned a niche in the hall of fame.

This is a BLUEBIRD Photoplay that will make the heart beat faster, loose the fount of tears and stir the blood to a riot of patriotism and love of country. We ourselves have never seen a more thrilling or a sweeter drama, and we recommend it to you fervently and earnestly.

Putting It Over

Advertising Suggestions That Get Business

CROWDED to a half page this week because the WEEKLY is so full of other good things, there simply isn't room.... An important question: Are you boosting "LIBERTY" for all it is worth? There never was a serial with so many good chances for stunts. East or west, a man on horseback draws attention and fills the eye, and what with the Mexican, Texas Ranger and American trooper costumes and uniforms, there is a chance for a parade that should pack your house at every episode.

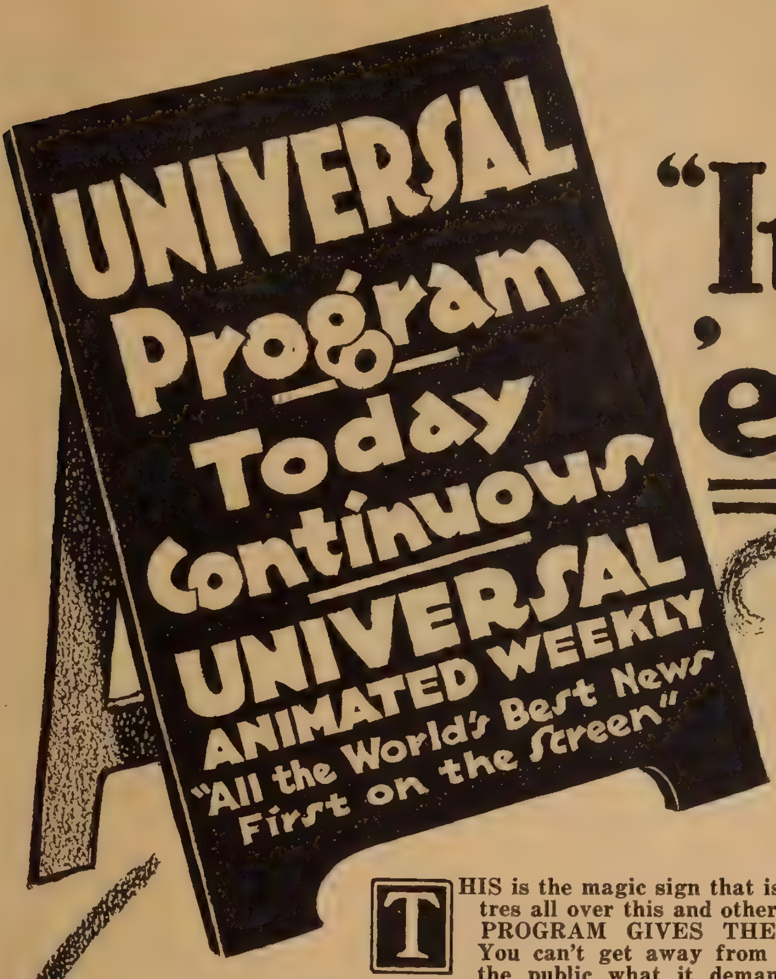
DON'T overlook the possibilities of the woman on horseback either. Have a pretty girl dressed in the manner of Marie Walcamp—and one who can ride—gallop as fast as the police will let her around your town, with appropriately painted banner or placards arranged blanket fashion on her horse's sides.

"LIBERTY" is a serial that people will remember for a long time to come. Get all in to see it that you can. It will help the attendance of the next Universal Serial, which, by the way, is another ten-strike.

ON THURSDAY, November 23, there is a Laemmle two-reel picture called "The Emerald Pin," which is a story within a story and is told partly in Civil War times. It would be a good idea to put the ushers of your theatre in crinolines, if you employ girls, and in Civil War uniforms, if you use boys or young men.

THE NESTOR for November 20 is an unusually good one. It concerns the predicament of a young man who is cheated into thinking that he has only six days to live. He needs money for a last good time and sells his carcass to a funereal personage, promising to deliver it when the six days are up. The undertakerish personage then pursues him all over the beach resort, demanding persistently, "How do you feel?" Have a good-looking chap of the type of Eddie Lyons walk through the streets, pursued by a long thin creature, dressed in black, to represent Lee Moran as the undertaker. He should follow the other persistently, sneaking after him and watching all that he does. He may wear a placard on his back with the name of the picture and your theatre.

THE RED FEATHER for November 20 is called "The Devil's Bondwoman." Mephisto costumes are easy to obtain, and it would be very effective to have a regular operatic Mephistopheles in red clothes, short cape, pointed shoes and cap with a standing feather, dragging a handsomely dressed woman chained by the wrists to him. This could be used as a lobby tableau vivant, or posed on the stage in front of your screen while the lights in the house are up, with appropriate placards giving the date of the release.



"It Pulls 'em IN"

TODAY
TOMORROW
EVERY DAY

THIS is the magic sign that is packing thousands of picture theatres all over this and other countries, because the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM GIVES THE PEOPLE WHAT THEY WANT. You can't get away from it—you can't argue against it. Give the public what it demands and continued, lasting, profitable business is the certain result. The wonderful variety of subjects, the class of pictures, the players, stories, and special pictures make the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM supreme. It is the "bread and butter" of the business. It is the "sure-fire winner." It is to the picture business what blood is to the body. YOU can guarantee your house absolutely certain continued business by booking and exhibiting the mighty UNIVERSAL PROGRAM.

UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY

The new sales plan recently instituted that allows any Exhibitor to book and show the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY has met with tremendous appreciation at the hands of the trade. Heretofore, only those exhibitors who booked the entire UNIVERSAL PROGRAM could secure the Universal Animated. On the new plan any exhibitor can get it. 1600 BROADWAY NEW YORK

"Life's Maelstrom"

BIG U Drama in two reels. Written by Murdock MacQuarrie and produced by Jay Hunt. The story of a lost daughter and her reunion after many days with her old actor father.

The old actor reads Walter's play.

The fishermen invite the city men.

THE romance of an old actor is told in this two-reel drama and the actor is played by one who knows the life which he portrays by actual experience. A glimpse of the seamy side of the stage, when the suffering old man is forced to play his part in spite of his mortal illness, is given in this chapter out of real life.

Myra is the daughter of old John Barclay, well known on the stage. A few years before the opening of the story she had run away from home with a man whom she had thought that she loved. But after a few months she realized that he did not really care for her, as he mistreated her and spent most of his time in other company. But it was too late to go back, as she was too proud to ask her father's forgiveness. One day the police come after her husband and she finds that the reason that he never stays at home is that he was a burglar by profession.

In the town where Barclay is playing he is taken sick, but acts in the performance, as there is no one to take his place. This brings on a serious illness that causes the disbanding of the company, as he is necessary to its existence.

In the meanwhile Myra has reached her last resources. There is nothing left to pawn and the landlord wants his rent. She is so ill that she cannot work; and there is nothing left for her but the streets. She is picked up by a kindly woman and taken to the hospital. But before this she has written to her father, telling him of her plight and asking him to come to her aid.

When old Barclay has fully recovered from his illness he sets out to help his daughter, but finds that she has left her lodgings without giving any new address. While resting in his rooming house, thinking of the best course to follow he hears a typewriter hammering away and finds that there is a young author writing a play. Barclay, from the wealth of his long experience, gives him advice and gets a manager to promise to put it on. So the two of them go to a secluded spot by the seashore to revise the play.

In the meantime Myra has been discharged from the hospital, well but penniless. She does not know what to do, but at last decides to end it all. She jumps from the top of a bridge, but is rescued by some fisherfolk, who take care of her. But she has lost her memory and cannot remember anything that has happened.

To this place come old Barclay and his young friend. When Myra sees her old father her memory returns and there is a happy reunion. Then later the news comes that Wade has been killed in trying to escape and the family is happy in the knowledge that the only cloud that was hanging over them has been dispelled.

TRAINED DOG IN FILMS.

A SPLENDID specimen of a collie owned by Hazel Van Vleck has been playing at Universal City as one of the leading members of Director J. C. Hartigan's company. The collie recently shared honors with Ernie Shields and Yvette Mitchell, who are featured in "Any Old Duke 'll Do," a Victor comedy.

Maggie carried messages, delivering to the proper actor, jumped out of a window and recovered a cigar thrown out by the wife in the screen play and carried it back to the husband.

Later the dog swam across a body of water pulling a heavy rope, tied it around a tree and held it as the hero and heroine went across hand over hand and then let go of the rope in time to "drown" the Indians following in pursuit.

"Maggie" works simply by direction from Miss Van Vleck and without rehearsal, seeming to understand every word spoken. The animal's intelligence has made it capable of earning a big salary for its owner.

FRANKLYN FARNUM MAKES SCREEN RECORD

Director William Worthington presents his five-reel Bluebird production, "A Stranger From Somewhere," farce melodrama, featuring Franklin Farnum, supported by Agnes Vernon, Claire McDowell, Barney Furey, Arthur Hoyt and Helen Wright. Farnum played a dual role and appeared in 340 of the 350 scenes of the photoplay.

Worthington declares this is one of the best stories he has ever filmed. It is full of action, laughable situations and has a clever climax.

"THE SON OF A REBEL CHIEF"

A BISON Two-Reel Drama, written and produced by William V. Mong. The son of a Southern family is driven by convictions to fight against his own people, but love conquers prejudice in the end.

Will shoots his father.

Will declares his intention of fighting for the North.

AUTHORS are never tired of the period of our Civil War as a background for their stories, and, fortunately for them, the public is never tired of it either. A new variation of the old theme of a house divided by strife against itself is told in this appealing picture by Director William V. Mong, who also plays the principal role.

Will Dozier and Elsie Dening are sweethearts and live in the South just previous to the war. Will's father, Colonel Dozier, is a strong sympathizer with the South, while Will, unknown to his father and sweetheart, favors the cause of the Northern people, his mother's people.

When the call comes Will joins the Northern army and his father and Elsie are heartbroken. Will tries to see his father, but the latter sends him a note telling him to do whatever his heart says is right. Colonel Dozier frees the slaves on his plantation, closes the house and goes to take up his commission with the Southern army. One of the slaves, Old Wesley, follows his master and acts as his body guard.

Some time later Will is detailed with his company in the vicinity of his former home. He prevails upon his old mammy to give a dinner for the Northern boys, but as they are making ready for the feast the Colonel and some of his troopers arrive. Will discovers his father and compels him to allow him and his men to escape.

A few weeks after this Will is doing guard duty and has with him the note given by his father. He is attracted by a noise near by and discovers a Southern soldier making notes of their encampment. He dislikes to shoot the man, but remembers the message of his father. He orders the soldier to halt, and, when he starts to run, fires. Will follows into the underbrush, where he discovers the man, dying—and also that he has shot his father.

When the war is over Will returns to his home to find Elsie and the faithful old servants tending the grave of his father and mother, and through the efforts of Old Wesley the two young people are brought together and a reconciliation effected.

LION ATTACKS ROSSELLI.

THE Universal City zoo barely escaped being the scene of a tragedy one day this week while Director Douglas Gerrard was engaged in filming a portion of his photoplay, "The Mouse," in which he and Ruth Clifford play the most important roles.

A lion is used in a number of scenes, and these scenes were being made in the jungle arena. Peter was the lion used in this instance, with a mouse, the rodent being placed on a fine net which covered the beast. Rex de Rosselli, superintendent of the zoo, who was playing a part at the time, found Peter in rather bad humor and warned Gerrard and the others to be careful of the animal.

After much time and patience had been expended in getting the lion under the net, the animal suddenly broke loose and charged directly for Rosselli. The latter, in trying to evade the beast, fell over a log and Peter with a roar that echoed throughout the hills pounced upon the prostrate superintendent, but at the same instant Director Gerrard struck the lion on the head with an iron bar and the animal fell violently to the ground, stunned.

Rosselli then quickly was taken out of danger's way and hurried to the Universal City hospital, where it was found that his right shoulder and side had been slightly scratched, and that he had sprained his left ankle. Dr. Lloyd Mace and his assistants gave Rosselli the necessary treatment and he was able to leave the hospital for his home later in the day.

Director Gerrard called off the scenes for the afternoon until the following day, when they were taken without any further sensational incidents.

JOKER

Joker Comedies have them all on the run. Joker Comedies are as different from the ordinary comedy as a Broadway top-liner is from a black face act in a medicine show. You can't put up the best comedies on your screen unless you include JOKER COMEDIES.

Directed by William W. Beaudine, the five principal comedians are doing stunts and putting over funny stuff such as you never dreamed of.

Beyond All Question the Very Best One-Reel Comedies In the World

Headed by the inimitable Gale Henry of the twisted face, and Wm. Franey of the comedy face, there is a bunch, including Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti, that can't be equaled in any comedy studio in the world. Their big specialty is one-reelers that start with a chuckle and end with a roar. No matter what you may have thought of the Jokers of other days, you'll agree when you see any of the following that Joker Comedies are the supreme one-reel fun films of your entire experience.

Joker Comedies have, without advertising, but purely on their growing reputation, reached a sale never before equalled by any other brand of one-reelers.

Following are some of the laugh-getters that prove Joker Comedies to be the greatest of them all:

"A MARRIAGE FOR REVENGE,"
"SOUP AND NUTS,"
"FALL OF DEACON STILLWATERS,"
"A BLANK SUSPICION,"
"A RAFFLE FOR A HUSBAND,"
"SHE WROTE AND PLAYED IT,"
"KATE'S LOVER'S KNOT,"
"BASHFUL CHARLEY'S PROPOSAL,'
"A STAGE VILLAIN,"
"A WIFE FOR A ROMANCE."

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from this Week

Ben Wilson in "The Mainspring." A drama of Opportunity admitted at the first knock. With Francelia Billington and Thomas Jefferson. Forty-fourth Red Feather Production. Directed by Jack Conway and written by Charles Agnew McLean, of the Street and Smith publications. Released November 27. An unusual Red Feather in every respect. Ben Wilson plays a dual role, and plays it in a manner never to be forgotten. Lawrence Ashmore has accepted the job of reporter. That is about the only thing left for an impoverished millionaire, but few reporters have the opportunity which was presented to young Ashmore. But then, no regular reporter would ever have taken advantage of it as he did. Being admitted to the home of Jesse Craven, the financial magnates, whose severe illness had thrown the street into a panic, thorugh his resemblance to Larry Craven, the magnate's son, young Ashmore proceeded to collect information which would be useful to his paper. But he had not been a reporter long enough to be able to carry the deception out, and he was imprisoned in a room in the house under suspicion. As soon as he finds out, however, from the lips of the very attractive niece of the financial power that the old gent's enemies in the street are the same men who ruined his father, and made him a pauper, he agrees to impersonate the missing son, and it is done to such good purpose that in a very short time he has ruined old Craven's enemies, rescued the kidnapped son, become affianced to the niece, and general manager of Craven's.

"Should She Have Told?" with Ruth Clifford, Edward Hearne, and George Beranger. Three-reel Gold Seal drama of the underworld, produced by Donald MacDonald. Released November 28. I don't know whether she should have told, and neither do you until you have seen this drama. This is a very vital question, and a crackerjack drama. You will be missing a whole lot if you don't show this to the thousands of people who come to your theatre. Two courses lay before Ruth Clifford. All unknown to her, she marries a crook. After he started to serve a seven years' sentence she obtained a divorce and married her former husband's brother, unconscious of the relationship of her husband to her former husband. Their union was very happy. As soon as the prisoner was released from jail he made it his first business to find out where Ruth was and to call upon her. Naturally, Ruth did not care to have this shadow of her past block her happiness, and from the goodness of her heart she gave George some money. Operation repeated several times. Now the question arises, would it have been better to tell her husband in the first place about it, or take the chance of evading discovery of her past.

"The Last of the Morgans," with William V. Mong and Nellie Allen. Two-reel Laemmle Southern gentlemen drama. Directed by William V. Mong. Released November 29. Seventy years old and unable to pay the mortgage on the estate which had been in his family for generations. Nothing to do but sell to the city folks and move away from the place where he was born, and where his beloved wife was buried. Such an event would have discouraged most men, but old Marse Morgan took his five hundred dollars and went to the city to invest it. When he came back to Morganville, a pauper, he did not tell his old cronies that he had bought a street car from a gang of confidence men with the five hundred. It would not have been a wise thing to do, for they all thought that he had realized a lot of money from the sale of his place. So strong was this belief that they would not even let him into the poorhouse. Heavens knows what would have happened to the last of the Morgans if his old body servant, now serving the new masters of the place, had not plowed up the jewel box which Old Marse's lady had hidden when the Yankees took possession of the place during the Civil War.

"The Mansard Mystery," with Joe Girard, Neva Gerber, Wadsworth Harris and Howard Crampton. A two-reel Imp mystery drama. Directed by Stuart Paton. Released December 1. Mystery just oozes out of every foot of this feature. Leave it to Mr. Paton to take care of that. He is past master in the art. We are not going to tell you the very commonplace agency which was used, but we will divulge the fact that the poison of the hooded cobra, the most powerful poison in the world, had been administered to Howard Crompton, and the point of the film was the solution of the mystery, which even Howard himself did not know. Suspicion fell alternately upon the butler, upon the nephew just returned from Africa, upon the doctor, and upon a foreign gentleman.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Devil's Bondwoman," with Dorothy Davenport, Emory Johnston, Adele Farrington and Richard Morris. Forty-third Red Feather Production. Directed by Lloyd B. Carleton. Released November 2. I wonder what all the screen vamps did before they got so darned popular in the movies? Can you imagine all the unrequited yearnings that went to waste and all the feminine attractions that have died unsung by scenario writers, advertising and publicity men? Be that as it may, as the story books say, a vamp vamps to some purpose in this big drama. To some purpose means just that, because the vamp is not dragged in to make a vamp play; she is there as part of a strong and well developed plot and a big story carefully worked out and wonderfully well directed. You may not think that Emory would leave Dorothy for any other woman, but the devil was at her elbow (in the person of Richard), and the devil was a sworn enemy of Emory's. He induced Adele to enter a desperate flirtation with Emory, a wealthy young banker. She made an appointment with him for a late hour in her boudoir. He came, Dorothy's face rose before him. He fled. Maddened, she told her husband Emory had forced himself into her room and had insulted her. For revenge her husband ruined Emory financially, and Dorothy saved him from—but you must see the gripping climax of this unusual drama. There are some marvelous sets and a run on Emory's bank that gets over big. Book it and be glad.

"The Woman He Feared," with Franklyn Farnum, supported by Vola Smith and Clarissa Selwyn. Three-Reel Gold Seal Vampire Drama. Directed by Harry Millarde. Released November 21. Um-m-m! Zowie! But there is some punch to this picture, and a story that gives Franklyn Farnum an opportunity to show what a versatile actor he is. He gets off with a bad start—in character—that is, he is a dipsomaniac, which is slang for rum hound. Loses his job and everything. Goes to his aunt, who is some vampire, and she stakes him to a cure and makes a will in his favor. He gets a brace and meets Vola, whose father is a former intimate of the vamp. aunt. The young folks are married, papa knowing nothing of Franklyn's relationship to the vamp. At the wedding breakfast, to which auntie has invited herself, she substitutes champagne for Franklyn's ginger ale, and he gets—well, let's say overcome. Then there is an untangling that will keep the fans on the edge of their seats. A very fine three-reeler that will make your patrons holler for the great Universal Program.

"The Emerald Pin." Two-reel Laemmle Society Drama. With Roberta Wilson and Charles Perley. Released November 23. Directed by Burton George. You'll have one of the surprises of your young life when you discover that the sweet old lady in the first scene is dainty little Roberta Wilson, a pretty young star still in her teens. Does she get away wit hit? Youbetcha! Her young sister is attracted by the ways of the smart set and likes to play bridge and drink wine at her friends' houses. So Roberta tells little sister how similar indulgence brought a great sorrow into her life, how to save herself she pawned her bridegroom's wedding gift, an emerald pin; how she had to pretend it was stolen, and conceal it; never to have the pleasure of wearing it until after her husband's death. If it doesn't have your audiences on the edge of their seats, then they don't deserve the good stuff on the big U program.

"The Lost Lode." Two-reel-101 Bison Mining Drama. With Edith Johnston and Edward Hearn. Directed by Henry McRae. Released November 25. Here's where Henry (meaning no disrespect), has done it again. By that we mean that he's put over another of those realistic, thrilling punch stories of his that take the gas out of gasp. Wow! All Edward is supposed to do is to fix the electric connection so that when a dynamite charge is fired it will not only blow up the side of a mountain, but Edward's rival in love and business as well. And, believe me, Henry never lets you know whether Eddie is going to get away with it or not. If your audiences don't get all fussed up watching Edith hurrying to the rescue all alone in a yacht big enough for a crew of five; and if they can sit still until the smoke clears away from the explosion, then they're not human flesh and blood. A splendid two-reeler, with wim, wigor and witality enough for a five-reel feature. Go to it.

Two Universal Thanksgiving Offerings

By HERBERT ROTHSCHILD

UNIVERSAL Program observes the Thanksgiving spirit by releasing two single reel Thanksgiving subjects—The Nestor, "The White Turkey" and Big U Drama, "The Mother Call," the latter written by Lynn Reynolds and directed by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Father gets busy with "The White Turkey." Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Priscilla Dean, Helen Wright, Fred Gamble make a sizable Thanksgiving party.

THANKSGIVING is not merely a holiday celebrated every year on the last Thursday in November. We are told by our grammar school histories that in the fall of the first year spent in America the Pilgrims, in the desire to return thanks for the blessings they had received, ordained that every year on the date decided they would have a day set aside when public thanks should be given. Ever since then we, in America, have had a Thanksgiving Day, but the real significance of it is very much deeper than the explanation of its origin implies.

Although Thanksgiving Day is an American holiday, there is nothing at all national about it. The Fourth of July and Memorial Day might be called national holidays. Our other holidays are mostly sectarian, such as Easter and Christmas. But in Thanksgiving we have a holiday whose spirit knows neither boundaries nor territories nor the limits of creeds. It is our one universal holiday. It is the one day in the year when all over the country there is a spirit of good fellowship that glows in the breast of every man. Even the most crabbed old misanthrope cannot help on that day feeling just a little bit friendly to the poor and unfortunate who are in want. Hearts and pocketbooks all over the country are opened by the feeling of thanks that we all have for the blessings that have been received. It is a time when no one is allowed to be unhappy. Every one is helped, and for that day at least there is no poverty or want in the land.

The Universal Film Company joins in the universal thanksgiving, as it, too, has much to be thankful for. It is thankful for the appreciation that a discriminating public sees fit to bestow upon its efforts, for the untiring co-operation accorded by all its employes in helping the company in carrying out its aim, to amuse, entertain and educate the people of this glorious land. As usual, the Universal will do its share, small though it may be, to make the country just a little bit happier on Thanksgiving Day this year. The week of Thanksgiving two single-reel thanksgiving plays are to be offered that perfectly illustrate the spirit of the season, as well as furnish the clean, wholesome entertainment that is characteristic of the Universal Program.

The first of these is the Monday Nestor entitled "The White Turkey," a comedy featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and pretty Priscilla Dean. The title of this play is in itself suggestive, as turkey means Thanksgiving just as surely as smoke means fire. It seems that the original Pilgrims had turkey for the original holiday, and ever since then all the world has had turkey on that day. This may be out of deference to the Pilgrims, but some of the more recent observers have been inclined to think that it is on account of the extraordinary cooking qualities of the turkey.
Mother Call," featuring Dorothy Da-

The second of the Universal offerings is a one-reel drama entitled "The

The proof submitted here is from men in the business the same as you are. They are picking their pictures and their serials just as carefully and for the same reason—that is—THEY WANT TO MAKE MONEY.

You can safely take the word of these live managers. There is no reason why they should tell you "LIBERTY" is a good serial if it is a bad one.

You can be guided by their experience. From the home office we can tell you that never before have we seen a serial that kept getting better and stronger with every episode, the way "LIBERTY" does.

Henry McRae is directing it, and it has all the thrills and the punches he knows so well how to put into a picture. Book "LIBERTY" now and you will write and thank us for the chance. "Bearding the Lion, In His Den"--

Perley Poore Sheehan.
Co-author with Mr. Davis of "The Bugler of Algiers."

MR. ROBERT H. DAVIS has been thoroughly impressed with the danger that everything he says may be used against him.

"Go as far as you like," he said to me in his office at the top of the Munsey Building, "but don't get gay with anybody but me. The last interview I gave forced me to write letters of apology to all concerned, and the trouble isn't over yet. That was eight years ago."

In the intervals of editing and choosing over one hundred novels every year, Mr. Davis collaborated with Mr. Perley Poore Sheehan in writing the novel "We Are French," of which the Bluebird play "The Bugler of Algiers" is the screen version. Mr. Sheehan was the Paris correspondent of the New York Herald, and his wife is a Frenchwoman, who lent her criticism and suggestion to the story. But Mr. Davis knows his Paris, too. Better than that, he knows the spirit of France, which makes her the admiration of all the world, both friend and foe, at present.

"What do you want me to talk about?" he asked.

"Yourself," I said, making bold to look him in the eye. He wavered.

"Very well, I'll tell you a story to prove that I was the original 'living picture kid.'

"My brother and I were brought up in the country—minister's sons— and our father was our tutor. However, our religious training was the prerogative of my mother, and she used the old, old method of parable.

"Well, one night we were sitting on the porch into which protruded the branches of a locust tree. Suddenly into mother's lap fell a tree-toad, the prettiest thing you ever saw in your life, only half an inch long, all green, with gold bands on his sides, and around his body a gold strip with red polka dots on it, each one punctured with a spot of white. The general effect, however was emerald.

"'Why is he green?' asked my brother. And mother replied in her soft, convincing voice:

"'That is God's way of protecting the tree-toad. He is green so that his enemies cannot see him in the tree, just as the lizzard is the color of the granite rocks. All creatures are protected by their coloring.'

"Then she was called back into the house to finish what was left of the work which she had been doing single-handed all her life.

"'Did you get that?' my brother asked.

"I answered that I did. 'Well, come with me,' he said. 'I've got an idea.'

"He led me down into the cellar, where they were making a green lattice for the garden, and there was a great can of green paint.

"Now, off with your clothes,' said he.

"I wondered, but I took them off; and he began to paint me green. He painted my hair and he painted my ears, he ran the brush up into my nose. 'Open your mouth,' he said, and put some paint into that. Then, when he had me all green, he stood me up against the lattice and, shading his eyes like a cowpuncher gazing up a canyon, inquired: 'Where are you? I can't see you!'

"So I stuck one hand into the air in the attitude of a statue in the Detroit Stove Works, cast in bronze, and I said, 'Here I am. Can't you see me?'

"'No,' he said. 'I can hear you, but I don't know where you are. Now, beat it for the pear tree.'

"I went out on the lawn and struck some more attitudes. He still assured me that I was invisible.

"'This is fine,' I thought. Then I caught a glimpse of my father on the porch. 'Ha, ha! you can't see me. That for you!'" Mr. Davis made the time-honored gesture that accompanies such illusions.

"I went over to the pear tree, which was full of those little brown sickle pears, the only kind that you can eat right off of the branches. I had a moment's misgiving, and then I thought, 'Oh, I'm all right; the Lord is taking care of me,' and up the tree I went after the pears.

"Then my father, in a long dressing-gown, with horn spectacles on his nose and a black skull-cap on his head, came stalking across the lawn. He came straight over to the pear tree.

"'What are you doing up there?' he said.

"'I'm not here,' I answered, still trusting to the principle of protective coloration.

"'Where are you?' he exclaimed, in amazement.

"'Oh, the Lord is taking care of me,' I answered.

"But he took a grass rake and pulled me down. There I was, stark as Adam, except for the paint, and leaving green streaks of that all over his dressing-gown as I came. Then he began to spank me, and I wondered how a man who couldn't see me could hit me so often in the same place! It took me about ten years to puzzle it out."

Robert H. Davis,

MARJORIE HOWARD

"I wonder you and your brother did not go straight into the theatrical business," I said.

"I did my best," he answered. "I wrote a play that was sized up on the fifty-fifty basis, that is, half of the people who saw it thought it was the finest thing they had ever seen, and the other half thought it was the rottenest. I wept when I wrote it, and the actors wept when they rehearsed it; the public wept when they saw it, and when the producer saw the box office reports, he wept, too."

"Why don't you direct pictures?" I asked.

"I'd like to," he answered. "But it's a business that requires long experience. I don't think it has reached its height as yet. Its possibilities are unlimited.

"Picture-makers have not yet realized that the biggest of all appeals is the spiritual, the thing that really arouses and holds the people. Movement, gesture, action have absorbed them; they have forgotten the soul. Some day there will be a revolutionary picture, which will be all close-ups. We shall see what the actor is doing with his thoughts, not with his body. What they have now is calisthenics; it is not art.

"The picture play is under the obsession of sex. On the screen the only thing that a woman has which a man has not is physical attraction. He can move and gesticulate, and that is all, except fall down—Charlie Chaplin stuff—I don't mean that. She can do this, but she can also uncover a part of her body. The the audience says, 'Great stuff! When she came from behind that pa'm tree she had hardly a thing on! Bet they had to cut a lot of that picture!' There is so much more in motion pictures than that!

"But about our picture. The big thing in that was the glorification of the Spirit of France, the thing that touches every Frenchman's heart when he hears the first strain of the Marseillaise. We want the Marseillaise to hover over that picture from the first to last. Mr. Sheehan and I figured it out that it was the shade of Napoleon who intervenes as Pierre puts the decoration on the breast of the dead hero. A ghostly hand—that of the Little Corporal—takes the cross and places it on the bier. That was to show that the decoration is not a tangible, but a spiritual thing. But I am not criticising the picture as it is. We said publicly that, in our opinion, the film was better than the book; and it is."

It is interesting to know that the book, "We Are French" is immensely popular in England, where it is regarded as a sort of text-book of patriotism. Lots of Tommies have it in the trenches. General Joffre had a special translation made and read aloud to him, and the French poilu can now read it as well as the English Tommy.

The story appeared first in the All Story Magazine and was so successful that it was issued in book form. For this edition Sir Gilbert Parker, the celebrated novelist, wrote a preface which he calls "An Appreciation."

"Writing a few sentences of preface to this little book of fiction has unusual difficulties for me. I should like to write of it simply as a reader who has had joy of it, yet as a craftsman who ought to know, if he does not know, how these things are done, I cannot help but approach it from the standpoint of the essayist, in spite of myself. . . . . . After reading it I feel as if I had been sojourning in a wild orchard where small sweet fruit grow, plentiful and ruddy and good. I feel I ought to damn this book for certain things in it, but its naive artistry, its reckless romance, bred in an intoxication of the spirit, compels me to say that I had a good time in reading it. Extravagant it is, but something in it makes it really true. It is truthfulness of the characters which survives impossibilities—impossibilities even for France, where odd things do happen and odd people do live, because the race is original. Also there is a note of patriotism in it which sings on every page. Perhaps it is that which creates a response in the mind of the reader, at any rate in this reader's mind. But touching and eloquent and full of national spirit this little book is, and I am glad to have read it. GILBERT PARKER."

The Bluebird officials are hoping that Sir Gilbert may see the story he praises so highly in picture form, and that they may hear, if he does so, whether the picture surpasses the book in his opinion as it does in the opinion of Mr. Davis and Mr. Sheehan, the authors.

Ben Wilson and Francelia Billington who play the principal characters in "The Mainspring," by Chas. Agnew McLean.

"THE MAINSPRING" is an unusual Red Feather photoplay; a five-reel play that really holds the interest from the first moment that the subtitle is flashed on the screen until the final embrace of the hero and heroine is such a wonderful kind of rara avis in this day of padded features that the public as well as most of the moving picture men look on every five-reeler askance. Those who have followed the ascending scale of the recent Red Feather Photoplays, however, realize that perfect five-reel features can be made. A man says that a thing cannot be done, "absolutely impossible," and then the next year or even the next month some one comes along and does it, and the original wiseacre feels about as embarrassed as the papers did this last election morning. So it is with the one hundred per cent interesting picture, for in "The Mainspring" there is no doubt of its arrival and interesting presence among us.

Now that the thrilling picture has arrived it is not hard to look into it and to discover just why this picture is so all-absorbing, while so many pictures fail to hold the interest. The reason is simply that into this film there has gone the best talent in every department that was at the command of the largest film manufacturing company in the world.

To begin with every picture must first have a real plot. The plot of this one is from the pen of Charles Agnew McLean, a name that is universally known for the high quality of stories that have appeared under it in the past. Mr. McLean was for years one of our prominent magazine writers, and while active in this field there were few magazines in the country that did not print his charming stories. But he soon answered the call to a higher field and took up the task of an editor. Since joining the forces of Street and Smith as the editor of one of their publications several years ago he has rapidly risen and at present holds the enviable position of editor-in-chief or supervising editor of all the Street and Smith publications.

Mr. McLean no longer has time to write stories and that is why his name is absent from the tables of contents where it used to appear so frequently. But a writer of Mr. McLean's ability cannot give up his art all at once. So when he had to give up writing as a profession he still devoted his spare moments to it. This explains how the Universal Company happens to have been able to secure a scenario from a man in such an important position. When Mr. McLean saw his scenario on the screen for the first time in the Universal projection room he was so impressed with it that he thereupon decided to novelize it and it will appear in one of the Street and Smith magazines.

The construction of the plot of "The Mainspring" shows the experience that is behind the author. It is so cleverly planned that not until the very last is the entire story made known to the spectator, and all through the situation is so tense that the audience is literally on edge throughout the film.

So much for the plot, as there is really no adequate description that can be given of a plot. One has the choice of telling it and so spoiling the pleasure of the person who sees it, or of maintaining a strict silence, which is very hard to do when the story is so good that it just bubbles out in spite of oneself. Suffice it to say that in this case there is an admixture of high finance, mistaken identity, love and romance, abduction, shipwreck, stock exchange and long desired revenge. All of these elements, carefully interwoven and mixed, serve to form a movie plot that really thrills.

This was the story that was given to Universal director Jack Conway to film, and Conway was at once very enthusiastic. With his long experience on the stage and as a moving picture director, he realized the merits of the wonderful plot and predicted that the finished film would be a winner. The first thing that he did was of course to select his cast, a task that is not such an easy one in Universal City where the great array of talent presented makes it very confusing. It is always hard to select the best of the best.

The part that gave Conway the most trouble was that of the hero, Larry Ashmore as he is called in the play. Asmore is the modern American type of man, athletic in appearance and quick-witted, the kind of a man who can rise to any emergency just as this one did when he was confronted with the colossal task of saving the fortune of a great family. And with all this requisite bearing and manner, the actor had to have a great deal of real acting ability as well as the courage necessary to pull off the stunts in the film and act a dual role, a feat that often phazes the most capable performers.

The one man on the lot who seemed to fill perfectly all the requirements was Ben Wilson. But Mr. Wilson has for the last few years been acting in the capacity of a director as well as an actor and has been turning out pictures of such a high quality that of late he has put on several in which he did not even appear himself. The latest of these was "Honor Thy Country," a Universal special picture that was a tremendous success. Wilson was approached to see whether or not he would accept the part and he willingly took it. Too much praise cannot be showered on him for this as it is not usual for a man who has once directed his own pictures so successfully to submit to the direction of any one else. But Ben says that he enjoyed it very much and claims that it was a very novel experience to go about without a continuity in his pocket after so many years of slavery to a script.

Needless to say Wilson's performance in the difficult dual role is up to his high standard. He is an actor who always studies his part carefully and gives to each role just the shade of interpretation that it requires. The part of Larry Ashmore will long be remembered as one of the best characterizations of his career.

The rest of the cast was not such a hard matter. Miss Francelia Billington fitted very nicely into the part of the heroine who helps Ben Wilson to save the fortune. Miss Billington, who by the way can act as well as look beautiful, is the possessor of one of those famous daring personalities of the films. She is not known as a "stunt" actress, but she has the enviable record of never yet having refused to take a dare. It was on a dare that she took her first part and so broke into the moving picture field. She was watching her sister play a part a few years ago and the company needed a girl to play a small part. Francelia was urged to do the bit, but here she demurred as she said that she had no ambitions to be a movie actress. Then some one in the party intimated that she had stage fright and dared her to take that part. That settled the matter right there as she took the dare and went on.

"THE CELEBRATED STIELOW CASE"

ARGOSY FILMS (Incorporated) of New York City has secured releasing rights of this eight-reel masterpiece of Lois Weber and will present it in New York and other cities in the State in a last attempt to obtain a full rehearing of the case of Stielow.

ON the day that this article was written, there appeared in the morning papers a notice announcing that a hearing looking toward a new trial had been granted to Charles F. Stielow, several times convicted of the murder of a farmer by the name of Phelps. The result of this hearing may be the last chapter in what has proven to be one of the most famous murder mysteries of the century. Since March, 1915, when Phelps and his housekeeper were killed, there has been almost continuous agitation in an effort to save Stielow, whom thousands of people believe to be innocent of the crime. For months and months newspapers have devoted columns to the story, and, up to date, the man has been sentenced to be executed no less than six times, each time being given a reprieve on the eve of the fatal day.

The circumstances attending the crime, and the trial of Stielow, were so unusual, the narrow margins by which he has thus far escaped the death chair so remarkable, and the fight for his life so persistent and spectacular, and so susceptible of picturization, that "The Celebrated Stielow Case," evolved from data collected by Sophie Irene Loeb, of the staff of the Evening World, was filmed on the Pacific Coast, in eight reels. The primary object of filming the case was a humanitarian one, and designed to exhaust to the uttermost the machinery of justice in an effort to establish to the satisfaction of all parties the guilt or innocence of Charles F. Stielow. Owing to her reputation through her wonderfully successful film productions, Miss Lois Weber was selected as the producer of the film, and the data collected by Miss Loeb was submitted to her. All the data supplied was taken from the sworn statements of witnesses at the trials and from the transcripts of testimony. Miss Weber entered upon her task without prejudice of any kind, and with the avowed intention of presenting to the public a version of the Stielow case which is supported by the oaths of reputable persons, and for the purpose of creating such interest in the case that it will receive sufficient attention to prevent a miscarriage of justice.

The Argosy Films (Incorporated), of New York City, upon seeing the film run off, secured the right to release it, and they firmly believe that this film will go far toward bringing about such scrutiny of the case that if, in the event that Stielow is innocent, or if there should be a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, Stielow will receive the full benefit of this doubt. Every effort has been made in presenting the subject to refrain from infringing upon the rights of others who may be involved in the litigation which has followed the indictment of Stielow for the murder. No one has been attacked, no malice of any kind has been allowed to creep into the presentation of the facts, no accusations have been formulated in the film itself, or in any deductions which may be drawn from it.

The Argosy Films (Incorporated) frankly is opposed to the death penalty. In "The Celebrated Case of Stielow" they intend to place as much emphasis as possible on the fact that all of the evidence against the condemned man is of a circumstantial character, and built up on confessions which in their belief have not been substantiated. In this respect the appeal of the picture is not merely directed toward saving from the electric chair the individual who is the immediate cause of this litigation, and of this moving picture feature. It is much larger in its purview. It is directed toward the entire question of capital punishment. In the past there have been a great many arguments advanced appertaining to this great question of the punishment of crime, particularly the crime of the taking of human life. All of these arguments have been directed toward the proposition that no human being has the right actually to take the life of another for any cause. From a utilitarian standpoint, too, it has been urged that capital punishment is a failure. As an argument for the abolition of capital punishment, "The Celebrated Stielow Case" shows not only the danger of the conviction of the innocent, but the punishment thereby not only of the person convicted, but of his entire family as well.

The humanitarian aspect of the case is the one which first interested Miss Loeb in the trial of Stielow, and she among others became convinced that the evidence which had been brought against Stielow was not of such a conclusive character as to prove absolutely that he was guilty of murder. Her efforts to establish his innocence, however, proved futile, and her own opinion that a monumental injustice was being done to him rested on grounds which were none too secure. At least, they have failed to present definite legal arguments such as would influence conclusively a court of law. The case, however, so interested her and a number of other persons, including several well-known women lawyers, that they several times obtained new trials by presenting evidence not heretofore available. Finally, it was decided to try the agency of filming the circumstances of the case, and, after six separate and individual reprieves, it is quite possible that the wonderfully effective work which has been done by Miss Weber in presenting this case may act as a further stay, or gain acquittal for poor Stielow.

In the selection of her cast Miss Weber was particularly fortunate. Without any intention to picture actual personalities in the case, she has been so successful in selecting types of the grade of society in which all of the principals in the case moved that she has added verity and authority to the picturization which could scarcely have been obtained by the use of actors alone, for the large proportion of the persons selected to portray the roles in this drama are not widely known as photoplayers. It is just here that Miss Weber's particular effectiveness as a director is shown to the best advantage. She is at her best when she has a cast which she can absolutely mould to her hand and purpose, and in this instance the homely characters have been represented with fidelity and care such as very few other directors could possibly have brought to it. In Stielow himself, Miss Weber was very fortunate. The role is played by Charles De Mora, and it is one which is particularly difficult to play, inasmuch as it is that of a slow-witted honest-appearing foreigner, comprehending little of what is said to him in English, but giving the appearance of dog-like honesty, though in a clumsy and lumbering sort of way. The manner in which she has caused this man to realize the helpless horror of his situation is one of the strongest points of realism in the picture. The role of his brother-in-law, also a half-wit, though inclined to be more cunning than Stielow, is admirably portrayed, as are the roles of the housekeeper, Stielow's wife, and the many detectives and lawyers who are concerned in the case.

"The Celebrated Stielow Case" will be presented for the first time in New York City in about three weeks, probably at the Broadway Theatre, for a run, and is confidently expected to excite country-wide interest.

The following extract of an editorial review of the case that appeared in the New York Globe of October 26, can be quoted as the actual story of the film.

Finding the body.

"Stielow, a farmhand of defective intelligence, lived with his wife and three children in a house across the road from his employer, Charles Phelps. One morning on his doorstep was found the dead body of Margaret Wollcott, housekeeper for Phelps. In the kitchen of his house Phelps was found, still living, but unconscious. Both victims had been shot with a .22-calibre weapon, and in addition the man had been struck down with a broom handle.

"The first report of the tragedy was spread early in the morning, when Stielow came running to the nearby house of Jenkins, a nephew of Phelps, with the news. Jenkins went immediately to the scene of the crime, and found the bodies in the positions described. Going upstairs, Jenkins testified he found a bureau drawer ransacked, and that a wallet, supposed to contain several hundred dollars, was missing. When questioned Stielow said he had not been out of his house during the night—that he thought he heard some one call 'Charley,' but that he did not respond because his wife was ill and he did not wish to disturb her.

"Stielow denied that he possessed a weapon. Later a .22-calibre secreted weapon was traced to him, and he then said it was hid when he found he was suspected—that he feared he would be arrested, with his wife sick. The wallet was never traced. Nor was it shown, although the most careful search was made, that Stielow had money. Later, through the activities of a private detective named Newton, Stielow was arrested and with him

WHY RUFUS STEELE WROTE

WELL KNOWN writer, taking cue from statistical authority, expounds the prophetic doctrine of Industrial Mobilization as the great lesson of the great war and the watchword of American Peace.

"YOU know," said Mr. Rufus Steele, the author of "The Eagle's Wings," "that my business has always been interviewing, not being interviewed."

"Then you ought to give a wonderful interview," said I, and boldly opened a notebook.

"Not at all," said he, "on the principal that lawyers are no good on the witness stand. However, I have taken a vow to tell you anything that you want to know, so do your worst."

"How many pictures have you already to your credit?" I asked.

"Well," he answered, "I have sold eight big features this year. Shall I tell you how I came to go into the game?"

I begged him to do so, and he began: "My first picture was a 'booze' story. I wrote it for the Saturday Evening Post, and it was called 'Keeping John Barleycorn Off the Railroads.' I saw that there was a big story behind 'Rule G', which deals with the prohibition of liquor for employees on trains, and I went after it and at last managed to dig it out. The prohibition people got after the story and wanted me to make a picture out of it. I refused, as I knew that tying it to any movement would kill it, but I finally got one of the great railroads to see it, and put facilities in my way for making the film, in connection with one of the big picture companies. The film was released—this was about two years ago—and I was told by a member of the company that they estimate that it has been seen by fifteen millions of people. About this time Lloyd George began advocating a 'dry' England, and the last that I heard of it, it was being sent to Great Britain to be shown there.

"Well, that interested me in motion pictures, and I began to cast about for another subject. I had seen the opium raids in San Francisco, men shot up, and the bravery of the officials of the Custom House, who never get any recognition for their heroism. I had succeeded in getting the permission of the President of a big railroad for the 'Rule G' picture, so now I determined to get the Treasury Department to co-operate in the filming of an opium-smuggling picture. The Universal was interested, and the Smalleys were chosen to produce the photoplay, under the name of 'Hop, the Devil's Brew.' Well, we had a wonderful time getting that picture, under suspicion every second, on the docks and on the ship, showing our permits every other minute; but that is another story. Did you ever happen to hear that when we were on the 'Manchuria' filming the methods of the Custom men in hunting for opium, that though we didn't find any hop, we did uncover eighty-seven smuggled Chinamen?

"Then I grew crazy about preparedness. You see, it is a sort of missionary work with me, drink, dope and now preparedness. The screen is the most wonderful missionary that exists. I marvel that more has not been done in this direction with such a wonderful medium. When a man goes into a picture playhouse, he enters an atmosphere already created. There is the semi-darkness, one of the most important factors for concentration, for the riveting of attention, and at the same time for the soothing of the nerves. He is in another world from the noisy, bustling, glaring street. While he is in this receptive mood, an appeal is made to him through the eye, the sense of all others the easiest of access. A writer for the screen never forgets that he is writing not for the brain but for the eye. The best of all is that the drama is silent. Every man interprets the action in the words of his own heart. So the message — if there is one— gets home direct to him without the intervention of unaccustomed language and phraseology, without the distraction of an unfamiliar voice.

"But now for my latest enthusiasm, preparedness and 'The Eagle's Wings.'

"Franklin T. Miller is a friend of mine. Miller's official position is at the head of the F. W. Dodge Company, whose business it is to supply statistics to the building world. Their reports are a complete and authentic record of all building operations in the United States. Miller is a trained engineer, a man of constructive brain, and familiar, by reason of his position, with the whole industrial resources of this country. He is also a student of war, and early last summer he was discussing war and our relation to it with an ordinance engineer. In the course of conversation, they agreed that though we might legislate a large army and navy into existence, we should not then have solved the true problem of preparedness, which is the supplying of the army and navy with munitions. The European war has taught us the futility of storing up, in advance, immense supplies of munitions which become out of date in two years. This wasteful procedure is contrary to all American ideas of business.

HE EAGLE'S WINGS"

AN interview with the noted author of "The Eagle's Wings," written by

PETER PEPPER

But what then is the solution of the problem of supply? They decided that it lay in the organization of the productive facilities of our country to make an adequate supply of modern munitions at a moment's notice. Miller knows machinery, he also has a comprehensive idea of the productive capabilities of the country. He knew that, for example, watchmaking machinery, by very slight adjustment, is capable of turning out time and impact fuses. He knew that a machine which presses a mass of cold metal into an acid tank three feet long can be made to press out shells; that a milk can factory, if it is furnished with patterns and gauges, can make shell cases with very little change in its machines. He saw a flash of the possibilities, of a solution of the problem. If the great plants could be furnished with the necessary patterns and gauges, and their men trained to use them, they would be ready to make the shift at any time at short notice; and he realized that he had a big idea.

"Miller coined the phrase 'Industrial mobilization,' and it was not long before big men became interested in his ideas, and he was called to Washington by the United States Chamber of Commerce which represents the business of the United States, and is at the head of the 650 other Chambers of the country. Miller was put at the head of a committee of five to make a report to the Chamber, which was adopted and presented to Congress by them, urging that action be taken upon it. The President became interested, and the next step was the commencement of the listing of the industrial plants of the country, according to their capacity and their adaptation to the making of different kinds of munitions. Howard E. Coffin, the president of the Hudson Automobile Company, resigned at about this time to become the head of the Naval Consulting Board, which undertook the tabulation of the industries of the United States with this end in view.

"The patterns and gauges, which will be supplied by the Board, are of the most minute, almost inconceivable exactness. Take the gauges for a 4.7 shell for example. They are two rings, which are of imperceptibly different sizes. You would swear that the two were the same size. But one must slip over the shell and the other must not. The shell must be mathematically perfect or the gun will be ruined—and twelve gauges, at least, are used on each shell! All this requires the greatest nicety in the setting of the machinery. The plan, at present, calls for the giving, each year, of a small practice order to each plant for munitions, for the sake of the experience for their men.

"One of the important points of the scheme of industrial preparedness is this. As we all know, in a war-scare, war is very likely to be boomed by the munition makers, who see a chance to make money, and see no further. Under this plan, however, the plants go over to the Government under lease in war time. The basis of the lease is determined in time of peace, and in consequence war offers no extra inducement to the owner, and there are no war profits. Another great point is the recognized fact that if we are known to be ready to turn out munitions, if we are in a position to make war, the possibilities of our having to turn them out, to make war, grow smaller and smaller.

"The scheme was well formulated when, one day, I talked with Miller about it, and was struck with its pictorial possibilities.

"'Why,' I said to him, 'this will make a wonderful photoplay, and it is the very way to give publicity to the scheme.'

"The question then was how to make it impressive to the public, how to make the manufacture of munitions interesting to them. Here there were difficulties. The plants which were engaged in making munitions for the Allies were closed tight. No one was admitted to them under the terms of their contracts with foreign governments. There were our own Government arsenals, but how to get a camera into them? I decided to go to Washington and have a try for it. I had managed to get a great railroad for the 'Rule G' picture, and the Treasury Department for the 'Hop' picture, why not the War Department for a preparedness picture?

"At first I found it impossible to reach a Cabinet officer. So I played canny. I went away again and talked to big men about the scheme. I went to a steamship man, whom I know, who knows a railroad President, who knows a Cabinet officer. The steamship man said to me, 'Oh! It's no good trying to get the railroad president for a motion picture, because there is only one picture that he ever saw or ever will see, and that was not about preparedness.' 'What was it about?' said I. 'I think it was about booze on the railroads,' he said. 'I know that he was crazy about it, had a private showing at his house and invited hundreds of guests to see it.' 'Well,' said I, 'I wrote that picture.' 'By Jove!' said he, 'then you've landed him!'

Rufus Steele, Author of "The Eagle's Wings."

"At last I got to an important member of the War Department—no, I do not want to give his name. I told him the scheme, but at first he was all against it. He said it would be giving information to the enemy to photograph the secret processes of the Government arsenals.

"'General,' I said to him, 'you know as well as I do, that as for the 'enemy', they know all about it already. But the people who do not know it, are the people of the United States, who have a right to know it.'

"'I see that,' he said.

"I could have embraced him!

"'Which arsenals may I use?' I asked.

"'Which do you want?' said he, showing that I might have access to all of them.

"I chose the three which I thought would be best fitted to our purpose.

"The Bugler of Algiers," Patriotism Text Book

"DULCE est pro patria mori" might be written as the motto of the Bluebird photoplay "The Bugler of Algiers," a screen version of the novel, called "We Are French," which was written by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis, the editor of Munsey's Magazine.

The film is more than an ordinary photoplay, and was written for more than the purpose of entertainment, however praiseworthy such a purpose may be in itself. This picture is more than an ephemeral story. It has a touch of the indestructible, intangible something which, for want of a better term, we call a spark of inspiration. The original story had this. That is why Sir Gilbert Parker wrote in his preface to the edition in book form, "After reading it I feel as if I had been sojourning in a wild orchard where small sweet fruit grow, plentiful and ruddy and good. . . . Also there is a note of patriotism in it which sings on every page."

It is this note of patriotism which sings even more clearly from the screen, sounding so loudly in the mental ear that it overcomes all other impressions from the picture. The fact that the scene of the story is laid in the France of 1870 does nothing to localize the call which the picture makes to universal love of country. The underlying spirit of the story is one of the deepest and finest instincts of the whole human race, and it is belittling the message of the picture to confine its essence even to France, which belligerent and neutral alike join in honoring for the proved quality of her patriotism.

No partisan enthusiasm, no "taking sides" with the European nations at present engaged in terrific conflict need mar one's enjoyment of a picture like this. It is true that an incident or two from the Franco-Prussian war is introduced into the story for the purpose of showing the inevitable separation of Gabrielle from her people; but an interval of nearly fifty years intervenes between these scenes and the present time. The story is a sort of general text-book of patriotism, of the generous enthusiasm which fires the greatest hero of them all, the man who gives himself unreservedly to his ideal—his country. The authors have said that they wish the inspiration of the Marseillaise—acknowledged the finest patriotic hymn in the world—to hover over the whole picture, not because it is French, but because it expresses the supreme devotion of a people to their cause.

The inspiration of the story has been felt by the men who, while in America we are preparing to celebrate our great festival of Thanksgiving for peace and for the fruits of the earth, are dying by thousands in answer to their country's call. Numberless copies of the book have found their way to England, and from thence to the soldiers in the trenches. The French heard of this story, which was setting their allies on fire. General Joffre himself heard of it, and ordered a translation made that it might be read aloud to him. Then copies of the French edition were distributed to the men, and now the Tommy reads it in one trench, while the Poilu studies it in another.

Contrary to the views of the ancients on the subject, love of country is not a strictly masculine virtue. We cannot call to mind the names of as many women patriots, but this is because their roles, while no less heroic, have been less conspicuous. Patriotism is a dual principal, active and passive. No one who has ever been forced to wait in agonizing inactivity through a crisis will deny that the passive role demands heroism of as high a type as the active. Perhaps even higher. The two kinds of patriotism are wonderfully typified by the brother and sister, Anatole Picard and Gabrielle, in the photoplay. Anatole had the great moment, the decisive action, but Gabrielle had years of patient, lonely waiting to pay for her cheerful sacrifice of all her little world, to France.

Little Ella Hall is growing up rapidly and a cold fear seizes those of us who love her in such roles as "Jewel" and "The Love Girl," lest the time may be coming when she will no longer be physically qualified to play these parts. An actress can make herself look older than she is by the skillful application of make-up and the use of her intelligence and faculty of observation, but she can't make herself look so very much younger, not at least, on the all-revealing screen. Ella Hall proves her possession of skill, intelligence and observation in superlative terms, in her assumption of this role, in which she first appears as a peasant girl in her teens, and later as an old woman of nearly seventy years. She relies more on the two latter than on the first. Her cheeks are not smeared with grease paint to achieve the effect of old age, but she suggests the fragile old woman by her bearing. She thinks herself into the mental attitude of age. Few screen actresses have ever looked more captivating than she does in the early episodes of the picture. The illustration of Gabrielle in her cottage is a better description of her than words can give.

A whole street was built especially for this photoplay, and the scenes of village life, which open the picture, are remarkably faithful in detail. Carping critics have mentioned the fact that there is no peasant costume outside of Brittany in France to-day. But the France of this story is the France of 1870, and in those days distinctions of worldly station were still marked in the dress of the people. Julian, the director, is a past master of those "little touches" which in themselves raise a picture above the commonplace. He has introduced subtle humor into the first scenes. Little Zoe Rae, the wonder baby, has never been more fascinating than under his direction.

The later scenes bear an equal fidelity to life. President Laemmle is quoted as saying that the scene of the luncheon, given with the President of France and the great patriot as chief guests, is the finest set which he has ever seen. It is illustrated on this page. It is one of the thrilling moments of the play when Pierre, the most lovable imposter who ever stole a name, appears at the head of the staircase, greeted by the distinguished company with the President at their head, to receive the honors and the decoration for his friend Anatole.

The work of Kingsley Benedict as the hero who triumphed over one of the fiercest temptations ever offered to a man, in the great scene from which the picture takes its name, cannot be ignored. It is as perfect as that of Mr. Julian and Miss Hall. One believes thoroughly that "Anatole Picard" was fired by the spirit of the Marseillaise.

A very unusual feature was introduced in the filming of this photoplay—a feature which indicates a coming revolution in the construction of picture dramas. The best directors have been coming gradually to the conclusion that in order to achieve the most satisfactory results the actors of the silent drama should be furnished with the text of their parts. When pictures were newer than they are to-day this notion would have been scouted as preposterous. One of the great attractions of the screen to its players was the fact that it enabled them to break away definitely from the drudgery of learning words. But as pictures matured, both the directors and the actors began to realize that the movie public was becoming a public of lip-readers. Inexplicable laughs in quite the wrong places were finally explained by the discovery that a large proportion of the audience was aware of the fact that, when the leading lady was supposed to lisping, "Kiss me, Algernon, I am yours!" she was in reality murmuring, "For heaven's sake, look out for my make-up! I've got a big scene right after this!" Sometimes the things that she said were far less comme il faut than that. Motion pictures are particularly popular in institutions for the deaf, for this is one of the few forms of entertainment which they can enjoy on complete equality with those who hear. But the heads of such institutions soon found out there were very few pictures which could be shown to deaf-mutes on account of the glaring discrepancy between what the actors do and what they say.

Then there entered the question of foreign languages. It was one of the boasts of the screen that its players could portray the people of every clime and country because they could dispense with the handicap of language. But especially among our population of mixed ancestry there may always be in every audience a respectable proportion of spectators who really speak the tongue that the actors on the screen are supposed to be using. It can't help but destroy the illusion for an Italian, if in a scene laid in Naples, two men of his race are conversing, quite intelligently to the eye, in Californian American. This is true of the German, the Frenchman, the Swede and the Russian, and it would be rather difficult in many American cities to find a motion picture audience in which none of these nationalities were represented.

Gabrielle in old age.

The magnificent scene of the luncheon to the great patriot.

Rupert Julian is the sort of director who thinks a jump or two ahead of the rest of the fraternity. When he set about producing "The Bugler of Algiers," he realized that some of the subtle essence of the story would surely evaporate for many of the spectators, if these typical French people were seen to speak in English. He imparted his ideas on the subject to his company. Unfortunately, though, they Eddie Polo in "Liberty" No. 15.

THE Universal Company has always specialized in serial pictures and has always made a special effort to put into each serial the very best talent that was to be obtained. This policy has been a hard one to enforce for each serial, as it has come out has been better than the preceding one, and all the while the public taste has been educated up to higher and higher standards. So with the appearance of each new serial the public has always waited with baited breath to see what the Universal Company was going to do to make the current serial better than the last one. Time after time it has been said that the current serial was the finest that could be produced, and then the next one has surpassed its predecessor. That is why one can readily say that "Liberty" is the finest serial that has yet appeared. Whether or not it is the finest that can be produced the next Universal serial will tell.

Before it was even started this serial was destined to do big things, so wonderful were its prospects. The story, all carefully written in advance, was really remarkable, not only for the thrills that it contained, but also for the consistency of its quality. Printed at length in the advance "dope sheet" that was published, it unravelled a series of exciting adventures that were hitherto unheard of in serials. There had already been plenty of mystery serials and crook serials, but "Liberty" presented something entirely new in the way of clean entertainment that had never before been attempted. Here were thrills galore, but all of the entertaining kind that could not possibly have an evil effect upon the youth of the country. That they have not had any but a good effect is proved by the way that the Boy Scouts have given the picture their support.

Not only in the choice of subject matter, but also in the selection of a locale was "Liberty" fortunate. The region where all the exciting scenes take place is not in some hazy indefinite foreign country, but right on our own border and amid the section that is at this very moment the scene of many occurrences almost identical with the ones that are depicted in the film. No wonder there are thrills when the whole is set in an atmosphere of reality that would be impossible to manufacture. Most of the scenes that depict the border were actually taken in the vicinity of the places where took place the exciting events that thrilled our nation and caused the troops of the National Guard to be sent down there.

When it was announced last spring in the papers that the Villistas had invaded this country and had killed many American citizens, was there a heart in all this great country that did not thrill with the patriotism of the old kind, the kind that caused our forefathers to give their all to free this country from the despotism with which it was beset? Those were serious days when the Guard was called out and so many of our finest youths left their business and their families to answer to the call of their country. But how many of the men who went or the ones who stayed at home really realized the nature of the horrors that they were going to avenge?

Looking at these events in this light it appears that the Universal Film Company has done nothing short of a service to the whole land in vivifying these scenes and in making them popular and appreciated by the millions who see Universal pictures. For here are actual raiders shown in the actual act of pillaging homes, stealing and robbing all that they could lay their hands upon. There is an actual reproduction of the raid on the peaceful town of Columbus, N. M., that is not the fond imagination of a frenzied movie director. The scenes that were made were taken under the supervision of men who had seen the raid that Villa and his men made, men who knew the ground perfectly and who were familiar with all the details of that horrible affair.

It would be possible to give a long list of actual events that have been incorporated into this film. If it were for nothing more than bringing home to the minds of the American people the awfulness of it all and the weakness of this country at present, the Universal Company could feel more than repaid for the effort that they have expended upon this serial.

But great as is the good that it has done, "Liberty" is in no sense an educational or propaganda film. It was designed primarily to entertain and in this it succeeds admirably. One has only to look at the business that the exchanges have done on it to get ample proof. It started off with a rush that was fast and furious, even for serials. But as the picture has progressed it has all the time improved so that the last few episodes have been the best of all. And now, as the end approaches, there is no one who has even the slightest idea of the final outcome.

Volumes could be written about the way the players in "Liberty" have covered themselves with glory, although knowing the players as the public did beforehand, there was never any doubt on that score. Marie Walcamp was chosen as the leading lady mainly because there is nothing in the world that she wouldn't do if the director asked her to. The list of the things that Marie has done is so long that it would take a special issue of The Moving Picture Weekly to enumerate them all in full. "Liberty" has given her plenty of opportunities and she has made the most of them all. Fighting real battles with big, husky men has been nothing to her, and the men were not trying to give her a chance, either. After each one of them her opponents knew that they had been in a fight. In the fifteenth episode she fairly outdid herself.

A little incident that happened in one of the earlier episodes is typical of her intrepidity. There was a particularly dangerous fall that had to be taken and the director was loath to ask Marie to do it. He knew that if he asked she would jump at the chance to put a thrill in the film, but he feared that she would be hurt and partly out of consideration for Miss Walcamp and partly for the remaining scenes that were yet to be filmed, he thought it best not to ask her to perform this particular stunt. But somehow or other Marie got wind of the affair and would not hear of a substitute. Argue as they would, it was impossible to show her why she should not perform the fall herself. So in the end the director had to give in, and after a doctor had been summoned and all the other preparations made the fall was accomplished. That it was a thriller in every sense of the word goes without saying. As the film was first shown in the projecting room of the Universal Company in New York there was a gasp as this particular scene was shrown, a thing that very rarely occurs among such a hardened lot of spectators.

Marie Walcamp at last has a chance to wear a feminine gown.

Just as remarkable as the showing that Miss Walcamp has made has been the work that Eddie Polo has accomplished. Polo has long been known as one of the strong men of the coast, but in this film he does feats that are nothing short of phenomenal. In one of the recent episodes he takes a man up bodily and uses him a a battering ram to break through a door of solid oak. This gentle little act did not seem to tire Eddie in the least, although one is led to wonder at what hospital the other man sojourned for the following few days. In the same episodes he has a couple of other thrilling encounters, one with two men on a staircase, where he throws one man down on top of the other and the other with Raymond Nye, who weighs about two hundred pounds and is almost as strong as Eddie himself.

Recently Eddie was asked what he thought of the serial, and his reply

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS," Blueb

FIRST Bluebird to be released outside the program. Written by Rufus Steele, and features Herbert Rawlinson, Grace Carlyle and Charles Mailes. Industrial Preparedness the theme.

Richard Wallace shows the Senator and his daughter his plan.

THE brand of "Bluebird Extraordinary" was not chosen haphazard. "The Eagle's Wings," the first of the new releases, fulfills in every way the description that the brand affords. The story itself, a realistic presentation of the greatest problem that confronts our land, is just as extraordinary as its author, Rufus Steele. It was Mr. Steele who, besides writing the piece, personally gained permission to film the industrial parts of the film and so made the whole play possible.

"The Eagle's Wings" was considered such a remarkable film that the Bluebird management at great cost secured the production. Otherwise, it would have been marketed as a State Rights Feature. As it is, the Bluebird Exchanges will handle this remarkable film as a Bluebird Special, the first film under this plan to be released by Bluebird. While its keynote is preparedness, its preparedness is not by any means the ordinary preparedness implied by that term, and Rufus Steele, the author, has succeeded after six months of wire-pulling, influence and argument, in securing material which has never before been incorporated in any moving picture. Many of the most sacredly guarded arsenals, manufactories and assembling plants in the United States have been opened through his influence to the moving picture camera, and these and the actual process of making munitions will be shown for the first time in history on the moving picture screen in "The Eagle's Wings."

From the standpoint of preparedness of the producers of the film, it must be admitted that they have "gone the limit" in providing settings and incorporating kaleidoscopic action. It was found necessary to build a replica of the Senate Chamber at Washington, because there was no legislative hall large enough to represent it, in which sufficient light could be obtained. The film also contains many of the most exciting battle scenes ever depicted in the attack on Columbus, N. M. These were especially directed by the director, whose wonderful success with "Liberty" has made him eagerly sought as a director of action and war scenes.

But the extraordinary quality of "The Eagle's Wings" permeates the whole production, the acting and cast as well as the story. The part of the hero, who plans the industrial preparedness that saves the country, is taken by Herbert Rawlinson, well known as a Bluebird actor, in the Bluebird release, "Little Eve Edgarton." The part of Senator Wright is taken by Charles Mailes, a character actor and a master of make-up who here appears for once as he really is. The part of the heroine is played by Discussing domestic Preparedness.

Grace Carlyle, well known on the legitimate stage, who here appears at her very best in a part that shows to good advantage her stately type of beauty. The whole is a great dramatization of a great problem, which is all the more pertinent since the European war startled this country into a consciousness of its utter helplessness from a military standpoint. That is the problem and the solution, as Mr. Steele points out, is industrial preparedness.

This is the story:

Jefferson Maynard is a Congressman who is the author of a bill on preparedness that is before the House. There is great excitement, as the measure is arousing quite a bit of interest and the sentiment is very bitter on each side. Among those opposed is Senator Wright in the Upper Chamber. Wright owns a large iron foundry with branches in New Mexico and has as his manager a young man by the name of Richard Wallace. Wallace is a bright young fellow and is strongly in favor of the Maynard bill even though his employer is opposed. He is also in love with Mona Wright, the Senator's only child, and has many arguments with her about the measure, as she sides with her father's views.

Working against the bill are some foreign spies, Dagore and Theris, who use all the means that they can to prevent the passage of the bill and do not stop even at bribery. They even get a hold over one of Maynard's best friends and make him withdraw his support from the measure.

The invaders overtake Wallace in Brent's dining-room.

At last the bill is before a conference committee of the House and the Senate, of which Wright is the chairman. The Senator is obdurate, as he thinks that preparedness is a bad thing, so at last, in order to gain time for his party, he decides to adjourn the meeting, giving as an excuse that he wants to go West to see his family. This hinders the passage of the bill.

Out West he and Mona are met at the station by his son and daughter-in-law with their baby, and also by Wallace. There is a happy family reunion as they are all at the home of young Wright. But in the midst of this peace there falls like a thunderbolt the crash of war. That night there is a raid on the border by some Mexican bandits and they all barely escape with their lives. The sight of the wreck that the raid has made of the homes of American citizens from lack of proper protection, stirs the pride of Senator Wright and he wires Washington to send troops at once. The reply that comes back the next morning is that there are no troops to send.

These events change the Senator's mind and he goes East with Wallace to get the bill through the Senate. He arrives just as the bill is up for vote and gets permission

The Smalleys Turn Out Masterpieces

Lois Weber, greatest woman director, in her workroom.

THE caption "Produced by the Smalleys" is coming to have as deep a significance on a film, as "Produced by David Belasco" on a play. Some of the finest feature films which the screen has known have been the work of this talented couple, who call Universal City their home. Phillips Smalley is the son of George W. Smalley the world famous newspaper correspondent; and Lois Weber, his wife, besices being a professional musician and an actress of high rank, is known by the title "Greatest woman-director in the world." A long string of film classics stands to their credit. "Hypocrites," the picture play which was recently revived at the Strand Theatre on Broadway in response to thousands of requests, made a furore when it first appeared and served to put the Smalley name on the screen map. "Scandal" was another famous production, and "Jewel," one of the most appealing of all film stories, is another picture which lingers in the memory of all who saw it.

The Smalleys directed Anna Pavlowa, the Incomparable, in her film debut in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," one of the biggest things ever undertaken on the screen. "Where Are My Children?" the picture which ran for weeks to crowded houses in a Broadway theatre, is another of the Smalley masterpieces. But they are not remembered for their longer pictures alone. A gem was "There's No Place Like Home," a one-reel pearl and their two-reel picture "A Cigarette—That's All," was one of the most perfect bits of screen technique which the picture-art has known.

When the Bluebird organization was formed, the best available material was engaged to produce and act the pictures released by this company. It stands to reason that "the best available material" must include the Smalleys, and so we find them producing for Bluebird. Their first picture was "Hop, the Devil's Brew," in which they themselves assumed the leading roles, that of a United States Customs Inspector and his wife. This picture was written by Rufus Steele, who secured permission from the Treasury Department to use the real inspectors during their visit to the steamship "Manchuria" in search of smuggled opium. Their next production for Bluebird was a screen version of Booth Tarkington's story "The Flirt," in which Marie Walcamp was featured. Then came two pictures with the eminent American actor Tyrone Power playing the lead. One was "John Needham's Double," in which the directors handled the art of double exposure as it had never been handled before; and the succeeding one, "The Eye of God," in which Lois Weber played opposite Mr. Power.

After these, came the sensational discovery of Mary Mac Laren, the wonderful emotional actress, whom Lois Weber picked out of a group of extras and cast as the star of that masterpiece, "Shoes." Two other releases in which the new actress was featured followed the tremendous success of this picture. They were "Saving the Family Name," in which Mr. Smalley took the male lead, and "Wanted—A Home," which he directed without the co-operation of his wife. Since the production of these, Mrs. Smalley has been at work on a screen version of the Stielow case, while Mr. Smalley has been producing five-reel features with his own company.

"Idle Wives," the picture which has had the widest popularity as a State Rights feature, has done much to increase the ever growing reputation of this great team. In all the Smalley productions there is an element of novelty, and this one is no exception to the rule. It is a film play within a film-play, and there are no less than four distinct stories running at the same time. Yet so masterly is the direction that the theme is never for a moment confused. There is a prologue which introduces us to various characters, who, by a combination of circumstances, all visit the same picture playhouse, where the feature "Life's Mirror" is running.

There is the husband and wife, who are rapidly losing interest in each other, and growing apart. He leaves her to visit another woman. They decide to take a walk and enter the theatre where the picture is being played, attracted by the posters outside. Another group is a tenement house family, who are getting on each other's nerves, irritated by the high cost of living, and the barrenness of their lives. The young daughter envies the girl who lives across the hall and whom she sees going out with a young man. A quarrel is averted when the children beg their father to take them all to the movies. The girl across the hall also ends at the theatre. She lives with her mother, and there is no harm in her whatever, but she has formed a friendship with a boy whom her mother does not trust. She defies all warnings and insists upon going out with him. In the meantime the deserted wife has also decided to go out. She sees her husband entering the theatre with the other woman, and follows them. So all these distinct personalities, with their conflicting problems, are gathered for the same purpose. By constant cutbacks, during the course of the photoplay we watch their emotions, and the effect of the picture upon them.

ith Actors or With Types

Phillips Smalley, Mrs. Phillips Smalley and Mary MacLaren in a scene from "Idle Wives."

Phillips Smalley in his study.

All of them find comfort in the film, and are made happier by its influence. One suspects that the Smalleys, who pin their faith so firmly to the motion picture, have subtly "put over" a little sermon on us; but we have been so wonderfully entertained that we don't find it out till afterwards.

The play proper is acted by an exceptional cast with the Smalleys at the head of it. They are unique in that their reputation along the three lines of authorship, acting and direction, is equally great. Mr. Smalley plays the husband who thinks that his wife should be satisfied with an idle life, and Lois Weber plays the wife, who convinces him of his need of her, when she leaves him to return to the settlement work in which she is really useful.

It would be unfair to ignore the work of Mary Mac Laren in this picture. As the headstrong girl, who, heedless of the warnings of her family, insists upon trusting her own judgment in the selection of her friends, she accomplishes some of the best work which has been seen on the screen in years. Her story is a sad one, a real tragedy, but the Smalleys have known how to make the picture so appealing, and so varied, that there is no danger of its suffering in popularity because one of the themes is tragic. The girl, Molly Shane, has a terrible awakening, and suffers a heart-rending experience, but her story ends with the glimmer of hope. With wonderful art, the characters, at the beginning so divergent, are brought together in the end. The moment when Molly Shane, about to become a mother, and exhausted by days of wandering, breaks into the door of the settlement house, and falls at the feet of Lois Weber, is one of the finest dramatic moments which either the legitimate drama or the screen has ever known. It grips the most hardened picture-goer by the throat. When the picture was shown at the Maxine Elliott Theatre in New York the critics of the metropolitan dailies accorded it a reception seldom given to any film. Almost without exception, the leading papers, despite the pressing interests of the European war and the election, gave the picture more than half a column of space on the news pages. James Oppenheim's name on the novel was doubtless an attraction, but it was conceded by most people than the picture made a deeper impression than the book.

"The Stielow Case," which Lois Weber has just finished in eight reels, offered Miss Weber an opportunity to prove all over again that she is a master of the art of making types appear like the most experienced actors. The story of course is a homely one and all the actors in this one of the greatest dramas of modern times are homely characters, that is, all of the more important of them are. Miss Weber promptly picked a cast which contains only two names which have wide prominence in the photoplay world. There are very fine players also in the remainder of the cast, but the big roles are taken by extra people into whom Miss Weber has breathed the breath of apparent genius.

Being three thousand miles away from the scene of the Stielow tragedy Miss Weber was at a disadvantage in every way, and more particularly since many of the later developments in the case had not been fully reported to her. The types she chose were found to be admirable.

A few words about the author of the story from which Lois Weber constructed the scenario of "Idle Wives" are not out of place here.

IDLE WIVES" won fame as a novel when it appeared over the signature of James Oppenheim, but it is safe to say that its fame has been vastly increased by the screen setting which has been given to the original story by those masters of photoplay production, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley. Mrs. Smalley, or as she is better known, Lois Weber, made the scenario from Mr. Oppenheim's book, and they both assume leading roles in the production as well as directing. They have not played together in a picture since the Bluebird success "Hop, the Devil's Brew," which they made from the story by Rufus Steele.

"Idle Wives" is a State Rights Feature and the interest shown in it at its run in the Maxine Elliott Theatre in New York City was intense. This interest has been duplicated throughout the country wherever it has been shown.

As is usual in a Smalley production, the cast chosen is peculiarly fitted to the task in hand. It is a very large one, from the unusual construction of the play. Four stories are run at once, yet such is the perfection of the direction that the themes are never confused.

In the prologue we see a husband and wife who are drifting apart. He leaves her to visit another woman, and by chance they enter a motion picture house where "Life's Mirror" is running. At the same time we are introduced to a young girl who, defying her mother's anxiety, insists upon going out with a young man in whom the mother feels no confidence. They also enter the same photoplay house. A third group of spectators is a tenement house family who, tired with their struggle against poverty and rebelling against their hard lot, are diverted from a serious family quarrel by the request of the children that father take them to the movies. They also are among the audience who witness "Life's Mirror."

Then the story of the picture is unfolded before us, with constant cut-backs to the members of the audience in which we are interested. In this way we are able to follow the effect of the play upon the three groups.

Anne, a settlement worker, had married John Wall, and then had led the life of idle existence which many of the wealthier class do, even the care of her children being taken by a governess. John's mother and sister Enid belong in the same class—all slaves to appearances.

In the office of Richard, John's brother, who is known as the failure of the family, is working Alberta, a sweet, demure little country girl who had been lured from her home by a scoundrel.

Richard and she are in love, but she, knowing her past and having the fatherless child Tad, will not listen to his proposal. Finally, when she learns that he knows all and still wants to marry her, she consents and they are married, but not without protest on the part of his family, who feel that they are disgraced by "that woman." Richard has confided in Anne and she is happy over their marriage and accepts Alberta. This angers her husband's family and such is their treatment of her that she finally leaves and returns once more to her settlement work.

In the same tenement flat with Alberta—and now Anne makes her home with her—lives the Shane family, typical tenement types, with a beautiful young daughter, Molly. Larry, an unscrupulous cadet, makes the acquaintance of Molly; she trusts him, believes in him and things being so unbearable at home, she finally goes to him upon his promise of marriage. Cruel is her awakening, but she feels that she must go on with her life as she has started, and not return to her heartbroken father and mother.

John finds things not so pleasant after the departure of his wife, for his mother and sister make life miserable for him; he entreats Anne to come back, but she cannot go back to the old life, and tries to find solace in helping the unfortunate girls who come to the settlement mission. At last Anne gets trace of Molly, and with Billy Shane goes to the dance hall where she and Larry are dancing. But Molly gives Anne a note for her father, telling him that while she loves him she feels that she has dishonored his love and so will have to continue living her own life.

Molly discovers that she is to become a mother, but this fact she hides from Larry, knowing what his attitude would be. Secretly she prepares clothes for the coming child, but the day comes when Larry discovers her secret and treats her so badly that Molly leaves home and subsists for days upon the refuse of picknickers until finally, one day, she finds the card that Anne has given her, and then she seeks her out. She is taken care of, and John arrives once more to plead with Anne to return to him, just as she is doing her utmost to comfort Molly and another girl of the mission. Gradually he begins to realize what a power for good Anne is and before long he is contributing to her charitable society.

Molly's child is born and a new vision comes to her until finally she will allow Anne to send for Billy, and great is the joy when the two meet and Molly promises to return home. Now that Molly is taken care of and has no further need of her, Anne cannot overcome the longing and the ache in her heart for her own children, so she returns home just as John and his mother are packing up the household belongings preparatory to breaking up the home. When John's mother sees her she vehemently denounces her, but John, for once taking the reins in his own hands, commands his mother to silence and takes Anne back into his life again—a life that has promise of much happiness and contentment.

IN THE PROLOGUE.

A Wife	Maud George
A Husband	Ben Wilson
A Young Girl	Neva Gerber
Her Mother	Mrs. Witting

After the picture play, "Life's Mirror," is finished, we see the audience leaving the theatre. Maud George, as the wife of the prologue, has followed her husband and seen him enter the photoplayhouse with the other woman. She hides in the aisle, half ashamed of her tears. But he catches sight of her, puts the other woman into a taxi, and gladly accompanies his wife to their home, where they have a scene of reconciliation.

The young girl, tremendously affected by the fate of Molly, begs her escort to take her straight home. The young man, who is shocked at the result of the cadet's cruelty, has taken the lesson home to himself. He escorts the girl to her house, and suggests that next time they go out, they invite her mother to go with them.

The tenement house family have also been deeply affected by the play. The father and mother determine to be more gentle and affectionate with each other and to have more sympathy with their pretty young daughter. She is horrified at Molly's fate, and decides that home is not such a bad place after all, and that she will try to be satisfied with it.

So the lives of these three groups are made happier by the inner vision which has come to them at the "movies." The picture play is the embodiment of one of the strongest of the Smalleys' Articles of Faith, their belief in the power for good of the motion pictures.

THE CELEBRATED STIELOW CASE

Green, a brother-in-law. Separated and told that the other had confessed, or was about to, and that the only way to escape death was to tell first, both confessed, or were reported to have done so. Green pleaded guilty and was sentenced for life. On Stielow's trial the chief evidence against him was the confession alleged to have been made to Newton, not a signed and written confession, but one that Newton had written out and which he swore had been made to him—his testimony being corroborated by the sheriff and a notary. The court said that except for this alleged confession there was not sufficient evidence against Stielow to defeat a motion for a discharge.

"Doubt as to Stielow's guilt grows out of his repudiation of the alleged confession, a knowledge of the circumstances under which it was obtained, and various unchallenged facts in the record. It would seem that Mrs. Wollcott must have seen her assailant. If she did, and it was Stielow, it was remarkable that she fled to his house for safety. If Stielow killed the woman it is amazing that he should have allowed the body to be found on his doorstep. Equally remarkable is his report of the crime while Phelps was still living and might revive and identify Stielow if guilty. Finally, notwithstandng the legal theory of the inconsequence of cumulative testimony, it is improbable that Stielow would have been convicted if the damaging expert testimony against him had been met by the evidence now available. In view of all the circumstances the judgment that Stielow is innocent would seem justified except for the parallel confession of Green."
